According to the captain and officers, the Storstad was first sighted by the Empress of Ireland at 1.55 a.m. and was then steered by the Empress' officers, the Storstad did not back away after the collision. On the contrary, she steamed ahead in an effort to keep her bow in the hole she had dug in the side of the Empress. The Empress, however, according to the Storstad's officers, headed away and bent the Storstad's bow over at an acute angle to port. After that the Empress was hidden from the view of the Storstad, and despite the fact that the Storstad kept her whistle blowing she could not locate the Empress until the cries of some of the victims in the water was heard. The captain absolutely denies that he was a mile or so away from the Empress after his vessel struck the Empress. The Storstad had not moved. It was the Empress which had changed position.

According to the report made by the captain to the owners, immediately the collision occurred he heard Captain Kendall's shout, calling upon him not to pull away.

"I won't," shouted the Storstad's captain, as loud as he could. After that the Empress disappeared from the Storstad's view.

TO APPOINT COMMISSION.

Thorough Enquiry Will Be Made Into Disaster.

OTTAWA, June 1.—Captain Lindsay, Dominion wreck commissioner, will open a preliminary enquiry at Montreal to-day into the wreck of the Empress of Ireland. He will examine privately the crew of the Storstad as to what happened immediately prior to the collision, and any other individuals among those rescued from the Empress who may have any important information or evidence to give.

However, this will be only a preliminary enquiry, and will be followed by another and more searching enquiry by a commission specially appointed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The British Board of Trade will send representatives to the commission also; indeed, George Vaux is now on his way across the Atlantic. The special enquiry will open on June 8 or 9, and will deal with the general question of safety at sea.

To Contest Divorce.

BOSTON, June 1.—Many Roman Catholic lawyers of Massachusetts met at the suggestion of State Treasurer Mansfield in Catholic Union Hall to combat divorce.

GAVE BELT TO ANOTHER.

Sir Henry Seton-Kerr Played the Hero's Part.

QUEBEC, June 1.—M. D. A. Darling, of Shanghai, was saved by a life-belt, that might have saved Sir Henry Seton-Kerr. Darling said Saturday:

"My cabin was opposite Sir Henry's and when I opened my door he opened his arms and we bumped into each other in the passageway.

"He had a lifebelt and he offered it to me.

"I refused it, but he said, 'Go on, man, take it, and I will get another.' I told him to rush out and save himself, but he got angry and actually forced the belt over me.

"He then hurried me along the corridor to the deck, leaving me there. He turned back for another belt and a moment or two after he had left me the ship went down.

"I was picked up."

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By LOUIS TRACY

"I'll take you to Reno, if you like; but I'm going with you. Don't forget that he who has begun has accomplished half. Why are you torturing yourself, little woman? Shall I tell you?"

"I wish you would."

"Because," and his arms were thrown around her, and he kissed away the tears trembling on her lashes, "because, like me, you are really afraid lest we may be too happy. But life is not built on those lines, Deary. It would still hold its tribulations if we could set the calendar back to an April night of three years ago, and you and I were looking forward with bright hope to half a century of wedded joy, with never a cloud on the horizon, and never a memory of dark and deadly abyss crossed in the bygone years. Let us, then, not lose heart in full view of the one threatening storm. Let us rather rejoice that we are facing it together. That is how I feel, Nancy. I have never loved you more than in this hour, and why should I repine because of the greatest gift God can give to man, the unbounded love and trust of the one woman he desires? You are mine, Nancy, mine forever, and I will not let you go till I sink into everlasting night."

After that, an interlude, when words were impossible, else both would have sobbed like erring children. At last Nancy raised her eyes, and smiled up into her lover's face, and he understood dimly that, when a woman's conscience wages war with her emotions, there may come a speedy end to the unequal strife.

"Derry," she whispered, "have you realised that I don't know where you are taking me?"

So the battle had ceased ere it had well begun. Perhaps she was hardly conscious—if she were, she gave no sign—of the crisis dissipated by that simple question. It closed with a clang the door of retreat. Henceforth they would dree their weird hand in hand. They would look only to the future, and stubbornly disregard the past. Shutting rebellious eyes against a mandate written in letters of fire, they would seek comfort in Herrick's time-serving philosophy:

"Gather ye rosebuds while ye may.
Old Time it still a-flying;
And this same flower that smiles to-day
To-morrow will be dying."

The train slackened speed. They were nearing a wayside station, and they drew apart in confusion like a pair of lovers surprised in some quiet corner. But Power laughed softly, and Nancy caught a new note of content in his voice.

"A nice thing!" he cried. "The girl is safe aboard the lugger, and I don't even tell her to what quarter of the globe she is being lugged. But the sailing directions are easy. We breakfast at Boston. Don't you dare say you cannot eat any breakfast!"

"I can, or I shall, at any rate," she retorted bravely.

"Then Boston will be the best place on earth at nine o'clock. Afterward we take the Burlington road, and cross Lake Champlain. There's a first-class hotel on the west shore, and we stay there tonight. Tomorrow we plunge into the Adirondacks, and lose ourselves for as long as we please. How does that programme suit my lady?"

"Whither thou goest——" she said, and her eyes fell.

Thus did they thrust dull care into the limbo of forgetfulness, and if there was standing at the gates of their Eden a frowning angel with a drawn sword, their vision was clouded, and they could not see him.

America rises early, even in holiday-making Newport; so Mr. Francis Willard did not breakfast in solitary state. When he entered the dining-room at half-past eight next morning he cast a quick glance around the well-filled tables, and ascertained instantly that the one man whom he did not wish to see was absent.

Toward the close of the meal he beckoned the head waiter.

"Where does Mr. Power sit usually?" he inquired.

Following directions, Willard noted a good-looking man, apparently about forty years old, who was studying the menu intently. As a matter of fact, Dacre had seen the newcomer's signal, and guessed what it pretended.

"They are often together, sir."

"And where is Mr. Power this morning?"

"He left by the first train, sir."

For some reason this news was displeasing; though Powers' departure made plausible any inquiries concerning him.

"That's a nuisance," said Willard. "I—wanted to meet him. I came here last night for that purpose. Do you happen to know where he has gone, and for how long?"

The head waiter was not in the habit of answering questions about his patrons indiscriminately.

"I can't say, I'm sure, sir," he replied; "but if you were to ask Mr. Dacre he might know."

Willard weighed the point. In one respect, he was candid with himself. He had come to Newport to spy on Nancy, and, if necessary, to put a prompt and effectual end to any threatened renewal of her friendship with Power. The intuition of sheer hatred had half warned him that the man whom he regarded as his worst enemy might possibly visit Rhode Island; but some newspaper paragraph about the purchase of horses bred in the state of New York had lulled his suspicions until he chanced to meet Benson at lunch in the Brown Palace Hotel. Marten's secretary was worried. He had replied to Nancy's letter the previous day; but was not quite sure that he had taken the right line, and he seized the opportunity now to consult her father. Of course, he did not reveal his employer's business, and Willard was the last person with whom he could discuss the mortgage transaction fully; but he saw no harm in alluding casually to Mrs. Marten's curious inquiry, and was relieved to find that her father agreed with the answer he had given.

The actual truth was that Willard felt too stunned by the disclosure to trust his own speech. He was well aware already that Marten had used him as a cat's-paw in bringing about the marriage; but that phase of the affair had long ceased to trouble him. The real shock of Benson's guarded statement lay in Nancy's Point-blank question. Why had she put it? What influence was at work that such serious thought should be given to his financial straits of nearly four years ago?

In the upshot, he left Denver by that night's mail; though the letter in which he spoke tentatively of a visit to Newport, and of which Nancy had availed herself in talk with her friends at the Casino, had been only a day in the post, and, in the ordinary course of events, demanded a reply before he undertook a journey of two thousand miles.

And now he was vaguely uneasy. Though he hated the sight of Power, he wished heartily that the interloper who had snatched from him the bonanza of the Dolores Ranch had remained in Newport during this one day, at least. Yes, he would speak to Power's British acquaintance, and glean some news of the man to whom he had done a mortal wrong and therefore hated with an intensity bordering on mania.

Dacre saw him coming; so it was with the correct air of polite indifference that he heard himself addressed by an elderly stranger.

"I'm sorry to disturb you," said Willard, "but the head waiter tells me that your friend, Mr. Power, has left Newport. As I am anxious to have a word with him, I thought that, perhaps, you wouldn't mind tell me his whereabouts. My name is Willard, and I arrived here from Denver at a late hour yesterday; at midnight, in fact, my train having been delayed by an accident."

Nancy's father was well spoken. He owned a certain distinction of manner and bearing. Like the majority of undersized men, he was self-assertive by nature; but education and fifty years of experience had rounded the angles of his character, and, in a matter of this sort, he carried himself with agreeable ease.

Dacre was all smiles instantly. "What! Mrs. Marten's father?" he chied. "Delighted to meet you! Sit down, Mr. Willard. Do Let us become better known to each other!"

Willard was hardly prepared for this cordial recognition; but he shook hands affably, and seated himself in Power's chair, as it chanced.

"You have heard of me from my daughter, I suppose?" he began.

"Yes. She was telling Mrs. Van Ralten and several others, including myself—let me see, was it last night at the Casino?—that you were thinking of coming East; but I gathered she did not expect you till a few days later. I was mistaken, evidently."

"No. I am giving her a surprise. I managed to get away sooner than I expected; and the prospect of Newport's Atlantic breezes was so enticing that I just made a rush for the next train."

"Well, you are here, and the long journey is ended, a pleasant achievement in itself. Was the train accident a serious one?"

Suffered Intense Agony With His Back.

Kidneys Were The Cause.

Weak back is caused by weak kidneys, and on the first approach or evidence of kidney trouble Doan's Kidney Pills should be used, and serious trouble avoided.

Mr. John Briggs, Whitewood, Sask., writes:—"I am sending you this testimonial out of pure gratitude, as I am not a believer in patent medicines, but I got so run down, that I became quite willing to give anything a trial. I paid a visit to our local druggist, and told him I was suffering intense agony with my back. He told me I had kidney trouble, and handed me a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, saying it was the best thing he could possibly give me. I tried them, and the effect was certainly marvelous. They are worth $10.00 a box of anybody's money, and I would not be without a box by me. I certainly owe my present condition to Doan's Kidney Pills."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HER LITTLE SON WAS DYING

Gave Him "Fruit-a-tives" And Saved His Life.

CAMPBELLVILLE, ONT., May 5th, 1913.

"Our little boy, Lawrence, was sorely affected with Chronic Indigestion, and the doctor did not think he would recover. He started with a sore mouth and it developed into this other trouble. Everything he ate just passed right through the system without change. He cried incessantly and life was a misery to him. My husband had been using "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion, getting much benefit from them, and I thought what did him good, might help our boy. We tried "Fruit-a-tives" giving Lawrence ½ a tablet at a dose, and the result was marvellous. Today, he is the picture of health, and he is perfectly well".

THE BURDENS OF AGE

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, lame, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing eyesight. Many people of advanced years have recovered health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They ensure the healthful action of liver, kidneys and bowels.

ECCENTRIC STEVENSON.

Throughout his life Robert Louis Stevenson was often unreasonable, but this very unreason seems always to have had a quality and a charm of its own, which only endeared Stevenson the more to those who suffered under its caprice. Two anecdotes may serve to show:

A young Church of England parson, who knew him but slightly, was roused one morning about six o'clock by a message that Stevenson wanted to see him immediately. Knowing how ill his friend was, he threw on his clothes and rushed into Stevenson's room, only to see a haggard face gazing at him from the bedclothes and to hear an agonised voice say, "For heaven's sake—have you got a Horace?"

Another friend received from Italy a present of some Christmas roses, to which particular associations gave a personal sentiment and value. Stevenson was seeking high and low for some flowers—the occasion, I think, was the birthday of a girl who could never live to see another. He heard of the arrival of these. He came, he stated the paramount necessity of depriving his friend, and he bore the flowers away. The two stories might end here and show Stevenson in rather an unamiable light; their point is that neither of his friends ever dreamed of resenting his conduct or regarding it with other than affectionate amusement.

Often in the evening he would turn into the billiard room, and there his talk might be heard at its best. A fellow visitor has given a spirited and sympathetic description of him in those days and adds: "Once only do I remember seeing him play a game of billiards, and a truly remarkable performance it was. He played with all the fire and dramatic intensity he was apt to put into things. The balls flew wildly about, on or off the table as the case might be, but seldom threatened a pocket or got within hand's breadth of a cannon. 'What a fine thing a game of billiards is,' he remarked to the astonished onlookers, 'once a year or so'."

ENGLISH WATERWORKS.

Management of Sheffield Provides the Best Service at Least Cost.

In its management of the Sheffield waterworks, according to a consular trade report, the municipality has considered it its duty to provide the best service at the lowest possible charge. The system consists of a series of high lying reservoirs which supply entirely by gravitation an extensive area, including a wide range of heights.

The gathering grounds are elevations ranging from 600 to 1,800 feet, where the average rainfall is about forty inches per annum. This water is intercepted and impounded in twelve artificial basins, formed by earthen embankments carried across the natural valleys, drain an area of 3,400 acres and have a total capacity of 6,000,000,000 gallons. From these basins the water is conveyed along a water course and through trunk mains, varying in diameter from fifteen to twenty-four inches, to service reservoirs within the city, some of which are "high level," to feed the higher parts of the district, while others are "low level," to supply the city proper. From these twelve reservoirs of an aggregate capacity of 83,000,000 gallons between 12,000,000 and 16,000,000 gallons of water per day—nearly one-half of which is for trade and manufacturing purposes—are distributed throughout the city and district by means of 500 miles of pipes varying from six to twenty-four inches in diameter.

The exceptional purity and softness of the water make it pleasant to drink and satisfactory for general household purposes. For manufacturing and engineering purposes it is unrivaled, with the exception that its very purity and softness make it attack the inside of new lead piping. This, however, was overcome by the following simple treatment: In a cement vat chalk and water are thoroughly mixed by means of revolving fans, then the milky liquid discharged into the guide basin, where it mixes freely with the water supply for the town. This apparatus is worked by a three throw hydraulic ram under pressure of water from one of the higher reservoirs at a cost of 3 cents for every 2,500 gallons of water treated. Such is the system of water supply evolved by the corporation in the twenty-five years that it has been operating.

In 1888 the municipality took over the city's water supply and paid $10,122,388 to a previously operating company. Since the transfer $2,137,935 has been spent upon additional works and extensions of mains. The working expenses in 1887 were 18.69 per cent. of the income, while those of 1913 were only 17.85 per cent. in spite of the fact that wages have increased during the interim by more than 70 per cent. In 1887 the income was $292,881; since then it has increased greatly, amounting in 1913 to $1,113,800.

England's Colonies.

In Australia only about 117 persons in 10,000 are other than white in color. Canada is nearly as white, but in New Zealand the number of Maoris and halfbreeds reduces the proportions of whites to below 94 per cent. In South Africa the 1,250,000 Africanders and Europeans live side by side with 73 per cent. of colored races, while in India the European element, including the army, officials, merchants, women and children, amounts to only six persons in each 10,000.

Drink "Dish" of Tea.

The Tavistock—the bachelors' hotel in Covent Gardon—is probably the only place in London where a man must drink his "dish" of tea after the fashion of a century and more ago. These dishes are cups without handles. They are larger than those used by our great-great-grandmothers, which would hardly suit the modern masculine demand. The Tavistock dishes are of uniform pattern—white china with a broad blue band.

A GREAT CONQUEROR A GRAND TRIUMPH

"Put to Death in Flesh, Made Alive in Spirit."

HAS BEEN HIGHLY EXALTED

Our Lord's Ascension—Purpose of His Manifestations to His Disciples—Pentecostal Blessings—The Apostles as Witnesses of Jesus' Resurrection—Our Lord's Extreme of Humiliation—His Extreme of Exaltation—The Triumph of a Great Conqueror—Following Him a Royal Priesthood—Then Countless Hosts of Every Nation.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

May 31.—Pastor Russell's famous Photo-Drama of Creation beautifully pictures our Lord's ascension and the subsequent outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. The educational value of pictures is well known; and the public are very appreciative of the Drama as a means of instruction along Biblical lines. Wherever it is presented, large crowds are in daily attendance.

The Pastor's text to-day was, "When He ascended up on High, He led a multitude of captives."—Ephesians 4:8, margin.

It is appropriate, began the Pastor, that on this day, celebrated as the anniversary of Pentecost, we should have well in mind what we celebrate. Ten days ago was the anniversary of our Lord's ascension. In one sense of the word, our Lord Jesus ascended at the time of His resurrection from the dead; for then He left the human nature and the tomb for the Divine nature and immortality. He tarried, however, for the space of forty days after His resurrection, that He might establish and instruct His Apostles.

During that time He was invisible to them, except when He manifested Himself by appearing miraculously in various forms to convince them that He was no longer confined to human conditions—that His resurrection had made Him a spirit being again, on a higher plane than He was before He took human nature for the suffering of death in order to redeem humanity.

The Pastor went on to explain carefully that during the period between His resurrection and His ascension our Lord taught His followers not alone by His words, but also by His conduct. They had not yet received the Holy Spirit, the speaker declared, and hence could not understand or appreciate spiritual things. They could therefore receive instruction only along natural lines.

Jesus was raised from the dead a spirit being, far above angels, principalities and powers. Had He gone directly to the Father without manifesting Himself to His disciples, they would not have been able to understand the truth of the matter. Hence their lessons were given them largely in pantomime, corroborated by the Master's words, explaining that it was necessary for Messiah to die in order to redeem the world, and that it was also necessary for Him to rise from the dead and to ascend on High and re-enter the spiritual plane of existence in order that from that higher plane of being He might be the more capable of filling the great office of Prophet, Priest and King for mankind.

After forty days, during which He was invisibly present with His disciples, except on the few occasions when He manifested Himself for a few moments each, our Lord ascended to Heaven. Ten days afterward, this Holy Spirit came from the Father upon the waiting ones of Faith. The outpouring of the Spirit evidenced to them that they were justified freely from all things through the merit of the Redeemer's sacrifice, that their consecration to sacrifice themselves had been accepted of the Father, and that thenceforth they might count themselves as joint-sacrificers with Christ, members of His Body, members of "the Church of the First-borns, written in Heaven," members of the Seed of Abraham, in whom all the families of the earth are to be blessed.

The Pastor then demonstrated that only Jews received the Pentecostal blessings. Until three and a half years thereafter, in harmony with a Divine promise made to the Jews, the Gentiles were excluded. Then the time came for the Gospel to go to the Gentiles. The record informs us that Cornelius was the first Gentile to be received into spiritual relationship with God. Until God's due time for "the middle wall of partition" between Jew and Gentile to be broken down, he could not receive the spiritual blessings. When then he was received, not because of his works and prayers, but because of faith in the redemptive sacrifice offered upon Calvary.

The Apostles were to bear witness to the resurrection of Jesus; but Judas having lost his place, which was given to St. Paul, it was proper that the latter should also be able to bear witness to Jesus' resurrection. Recounting those who had seen our Lord after His resurrection, St. Paul says, "Last of all He was seen of me also, as of one born before the time." Jesus appeared to St. Paul in the glory of His spirit being, "shining above the brightness of the sun" at noonday. The sight caused injury to Saul's eyes.

The Pastor then pointed out how inappropriate and unsatisfactory such a manifestation would have been if the Redeemer had so appeared to the Eleven during the forty days following His resurrection. They could not possibly have identified the glorious Personage who shone above the brightness of the noonday sun with the Lord Jesus, their Friend, their Teacher. But to Saul of Tarsus, the revealing in fiery light, above the noonday glare, was very appropriate. It convinced him in a manner that no human appearance could have equalled that Jesus was no longer a man and that He was no impostor. St. Paul's conversion was instantaneous.

It should not cause us to marvel that Jesus ascended, as He declared, "up to where He was before," said the Pastor. It should not surprise us that the Apostle declares that our Lord ascended in dignity and station far above angels, principalities and powers, and above every name that is named. On the contrary, it would be both equitable and God-like that the great Jehovah should highly honor His faithful Son, the First and the Last, the Beginning and the Ending of the creation of God. Could we, he asked, for one moment suppose that our great Creator would permit this faithful Son, or any servant, to lay down life in the Divine service and to suffer loss as a consequence of his obedience? Is it not much more rational to believe, as the Scriptures declare, that "Him hath God highly exalted"?

Pastor Russell called attention to the Apostle's phraseology in the context—that the One who ascended had previously descended, and that the descending and the ascending were related as cause and effect. The One who has ascended on High completely fills the highest position in the great Divine Government of the Universe—as Head of principalities and powers, angels and men—next to the great Jehovah. Yet, as the Apostle warns us, we must not identify this glorified One with the One who in obedience to the Father's will came down from Heaven and as a man humbled Himself unto death, even the ignominious death of the cross. The Apostle calls attention to these two extremes of humiliation and exaltation—both accomplished in the Son of God, the Logos, the Messiah, the Christ.

The Pastor then showed that if some of us at one time had supposed that our Lord Jesus ascended to Heaven in a physical condition, as a man, we had entirely misunderstood the Scriptures. To suppose that Jesus went to Heaven a man, the Pastor maintained, is to mistake the significance of His title, the Son of Man, which He preserves as identifying Him with His great redemptive work—as one of His many titles. To suppose that Jesus is in Heaven a human being, he declared, is to suppose that He is still, as when on earth, "a little lower than the angels," whereas the Scriptures state that He has ascended far higher, so that not only men, but also all the angels of God, are commanded to worship Him. To suppose Jesus in Heaven a human being, he declared, is to suppose that He is out of all harmony with Heavenly surroundings and spiritual conditions.

Moreover, the speaker queried, are we not told that the Church of Christ will be changed from the human condition to the spiritual condition in the resurrection; and that this change will make them like their Redeemer, so that they may see Him as He IS, not as He WAS—that they may see Him in glory, honor and immortality—exaltation—and not as the One who in humiliation was made flesh on behalf of the race of Adam? Answering his own question, he declared that when we so thought we forget the Scriptural assertion that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." This statement of Scripture implies that all who become partakers of the Divine nature and share in the Heavenly Kingdom with their Lord and Redeemer must be made like Him by the power of the First Resurrection.

The Pastor declared that he had found worldly-wise people very sceptical respecting the descent of the Logos, the Son of God, to earthly conditions, but that Christians seem to have more difficulty than do the world to comprehend the ascension of Jesus to the spirit plane and its excellent glory. Both points, however, are important. Whoever is unable to see that the Logos, the glorious Son of the Highest, humbled Himself, divested Himself of the spirit nature and took instead the human nature, cannot see that Jesus was sinless. And those who cannot recognize that He was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners, cannot believe in the sacrifice of Jesus as being a Ransom for Adam, to effect his release and that of his posterity from condemnation to death.

Pastor Russell went into considerable detail respecting the method by which the Logos was transferred from Heavenly conditions to earthly conditions. He showed that the purity of the Logos, His perfection of organism, His freedom from sin, was preserved, notwithstanding the fact that He was born of an earthly mother who was not free from the blemishes of the Adamic race. The speaker proffered his hearers, free on application, a treatise entitled, "The Undefiled One," which he believes shows scientifically the process used by God by which the Logos was changed from the higher to the human nature, yet preserved immaculate.

The error of supposing that Jesus is still a man was shown to signify the denial of His statement that He would ascend up where He was before, and of St. Paul's teaching that He had been highly exalted to glory and distinction—the Divine nature, instead of the human nature. This error, the Pastor declared, has led to other errors, one of which he cited; namely, that made by Christian people of expecting the Second Coming of Jesus in the flesh—as a glorious Man and not as a glorious Spirit, partaker of the Divine nature and altogether disassociated from human nature. Thinking of our Lord at His Second Advent as a glorified Man, they associate Him with a material throne and an earthly court. The unreasonableness of this error leads other Christian people in an opposite direction. Realizing that such an earthly kingdom would be a step backward rather than forward, they deny the Second Coming of Christ to establish the long-promised Messianic Kingdom.

The proper thought, the speaker declared, is that Jesus accomplished in the flesh the work which the Father had given Him to do, when He sacrificed His earthly life. The Father rewarded Him gloriously by exalting Him to the highest spirit plane. Now our glorified Lord is waiting for the gathering of His Elect, His Church, His Bride. These are to share in His resurrection to the Divine nature and to sit with Him in His Throne. Then the Kingdom of Messiah, so long promised, will begin to bless the world, using as its earthly representatives, visible to men, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the Ancient Worthies mentioned in Hebrews 11.

The Pastor then showed that his text figuratively represents the ascension of our Lord from the earthly plane to the Heavenly as the triumph of a great Conqueror. Sin had gained ascendency over Adam and his race, and had brought them down to the dust, mentally, morally and physically. Moreover, this victory over mankind had been gained in a legal manner, through the one man's disobedience. The Logos divested Himself of His glory on the spirit plane, was made flesh, fulfilled the demands of the Law, proved Himself competent to pay the sinner's Ransom-price, and "gave Himself a Ransom for all, to be testified in due time." Having finished His sacrificial work, He was again received to the spirit nature with exceeding glory and to the right hand of God.

Thus, he continued, the great Conqueror is seen returning to the Heavenly state, acclaimed by the Heavenly host; and far down the centuries the prophetic view sees following Him a great procession. First comes the Church, the Royal Priesthood, His brethren, delivered from the power of Sin and Death through the merit of Jesus' blood. These are only the vanguard of an advancing host; they are "a kind of first-fruits to God of His creatures," rescued from Sin and Death. Later on, for a period of a thousand years beyond the deliverance of the Church, the prophetic pen foretells countless hosts of every nation, people, kindred and tongue, to be delivered from the power of Sin and Death through the merit of Him who died on Calvary.

Then will come the glorious consummation, the Pastor said. When all who will have refused Divine grace shall have been destroyed in the Second Death, then shall be heard every creature in Heaven and on earth saying, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb, forever and ever."

The Pastor then explained that at our Lord's First Advent began "the acceptable Year of the Lord"—the time when God, having accepted the sacrifice of Christ Jesus, became willing to accept the sacrifices of all who desire to become His disciples—to take up their cross and follow Him through good report and evil report, even unto death. Respecting the Gospel Age, he declared, antitypical Israel's Atonement Day; and the sacrifices of our Lord and the Church are the "better sacrifices," foreshadowed by the bullock and the goat offered typically by the Jews. This antitypical Atonement Day is "the acceptable Year of the Lord," as Jesus pointed out. God's faithful people of this acceptable Day are glad to be invited to present their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable unto God." In the end of this acceptable Day will come the end of all opportunity then to sacrifice the human nature and become joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord.

After the Gospel Age has passed away, the Pastor declared, there will be a new period introduced, styled in the Scriptures, "The Times of Restitution." The acceptable Day for the sacrifice of the Church has lasted for nearly nineteen centuries, he said; and the Scriptures clearly indicate that the Times of Restitution will last a thousand years. St. Peter tells us just when these Times of Restitution will begin. They will begin as a result of the Second Coming of Jesus, the Messiah, and the establishment of His Kingdom. Then "Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of Lord; and He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the Heavens must retain until the Times of Restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets since the world began."—Acts 3:19-21.

A WONDERFUL CURE OF AN ABSCESS BY Burdock Blood Bitters.

Mr. A. W. Dryden, Amherst, N.S., writes:—"I am going to tell you what Burdock Blood Bitters has done for me. My son "Vance," when only nine months old, got an abscess on his cheek bone. I took him to a doctor in St. John, N.B., and he lanced it, and told me it would get well in a few days, and wanted me to keep it squeezed out. It did not seem to get any better, so my wife took him back. The Doctor told her to take him home and it would soon get better. It would gather and break, and it went on that way until he was over four years old.

"He lost four pieces of bone out of where it was lanced, and five pieces came from his mouth; he has lost all of his cheek bone, and his eye was drawn down. I took him to doctors in St. John, Moncton, and Amherst, and all wanted me to let him go under an operation. He was so small I told them that if he was going to die he might as well die as he was as to go there and be all cut to pieces, so I declined to have the operation done. I told them I was going to try Burdock Blood Bitters, as I had heard my mother talk so much about it. I got a bottle, and when it was about half gone noticed it was doing good, and before many days the sore stopped running, and healed up, and the abscess has never broken out again. This happened nearly six years ago, so you can see I have great faith in Burdock Blood Bitters, and I can say with all my heart that it is the best blood medicine in the world."

Rubber-Plated Battleships?

The London Globe is informed that a new invention in regard to armor-plating is being tested unofficially by the British Admiralty. The principle of the invention consists of sandwiching rubber in between layers of Harveyed steel in place of the solid steel slabs used at present.

The matter is being kept secret, no names or places being given, but it is claimed by the inventor that the thick wall of rubber would tend to act towards a shell much in the same way as a sandbag does to a bullet, only, if anything, more efficiently, on account of the buffer-like consistency of the rubber.

The new armour-plate would be especially adaptable to Dreadnoughts, and the total thickness on and below the turrets would be about 18 inches to 36 inches.

Necessary, Perhaps.

Prince Henry, third son of the King and Queen of England, who is fourteen years old, is regarded as the humorist of the royal family.

On one occasion his elder brothers were discussing their future careers. The Prince of Wales boasted that he intended to be a great general. Prince Albert said he intended to win undying fame as an admiral. When the two boys had exhausted the glories of their own careers they turned to their younger brother, who had been listening quietly and patiently to the intended exploits of his elders.

"What are you going to do, Henry?" he was asked.

Prince Henry thought hard for a minute. Then he said quietly, "I think I'll just stay at home and point out to people all the great things you are doing—in case they don't notice them!"

AIDED HER RIVAL.

Romance often lurks in a jewelry store, and the jewelers of Bond street, London, Eng., could if they liked tell many an amazing story. There is no need to dilate on the fascination which scintillating gems exercise upon the feminine mind. That fascination is a fact and may serve to explain a mortal enmity which existed recently and probably still exists between two well known London society leaders.

To one of these ladies a highly respected admirer mentioned his intention to purchase a diamond necklace. Knowing that the lady possessed more than a superficial knowledge of the value of stones, he begged her to select for him what he required. The price he was prepared to give was £1,500.

The lady jumped to the conclusion that such a request could have but one meaning—viz., that she herself was to be the eventual recipient of the gift. She thereupon visited the jeweler's shop and inspected his stock, but at the price she was empowered to give saw nothing that particularly took her fancy.

A fascinating piece of workmanship, however, did attract her, the price of which was 2,000 guineas. The desire to possess it became irresistible. She arranged with the jeweler to send the necklace to the gentleman for whom she was acting and invoice it to him at the agreed upon price, while she gave her own check on the spot for the balance. Then she went home and awaited the arrival of the gift.

Some days passed, but there was no appearance of the necklace. A horrible doubt which assailed her became a certainty a day or two later when she saw the identical necklace she had helped to pay for sparkling on the neck of a younger and more beautiful rival.—London Tatler.

Pamphlet vs. Newspaper.

High among unconventional writers stands William Prynne, a journalist in the days when there were no journals, days when a bulky pamphlet took the place of a letter to one's favorite newspaper. Prynne published about 200 of such pamphlets, and is said to have averaged a sheet of print a day throughout his life. And he worked in a quilt cap coming over his eyes to shield them from the light, and stuck at his table all day, being served with a roll and a pot of beer every three hours. And he reaped the rewards of his literary efforts in the branding and pillory and earcropping that every political writer risked in that age.—London Daily Chronicle.

Each day he goes down the pit, taking with him only a pint of cold water, which while he works is all that passes his lips. The ambition of his life is to become an actor.

True Tales of Adventure

SHOOTING IN MEXICO

By A. D. Temple.

I was in the poker game at Ventanas. "Curly Haired" Smith had laid down his hand. I held threes and called for two cards "Red" Beveredge discarded three. Good old Padre Manuel Alvarado stood pat, and here there was a pause.

"Wake up, Temple, wake up. The coffee is made, horses saddled, and there is a wolf howling up the valley. It is three o'clock."

It was no poker game at all, only Don Bull calling me to get up from my dreams in the little log cabin at San Manuel Ranch.

I arose from my luxurious couch, a black bull hide spread on the cabin floor, and made my simple toilet by putting on a pair of guaraches—Mexican sandals—buttoning up the waist band of my breeches and buckling on a cartridge belt full of heavy cartridges, with a knife hanging on the left side.

Don Bull, my host, whose name in "United States" was Oliver Wood, was at one time a church deacon; had crossed the plains to California in the early days and there, after making and losing two or three fortunes, had hit the trail for Mexico, where, as an old man, he had settled down on the San Manuel Ranch, in the fastnesses of the Sierra de Durango, as a cattle raiser and general farmer, an associate of the wild and desperate natives who inhabited that "back of beyond" corner of the mountains.

I had my hunting camp two days' miles away across the ranges at the Corralito Ranch; and my supply of tortillas having given out, and a diet of nothing but beef meat being unsatisfying, I had ridden across the range to obtain a fresh supply of the Mexican "staff of life," which, by the way, looks like a flap-jack, made out of corn without salt, and which, while very satisfying, is not so very palatable to those unaccustomed to such a diet.

Don Bull and I had arranged to make an early start and join the pack train which had been despatched to Ventanas, forty miles away, the day before and was then encamped about ten miles from the ranch.

Our breakfast of coffee, jerked venison and toasted tortillas was soon eaten and a few scraps of meat thrown to the three dogs. My two, El Chacho and El Canlo, and the ranch dog, El Chaleco, were mountain dogs, always ready for a fight, a run or a frolic.

I swung my heavy buffalo rifle—a relic of the buffalo days—on the left side of the saddle—Mexican style—mounted to the front, and we mounted, the dogs barking and gamboling around us as they saw our horses headed up the valley on the trail to El Huehuento and Ventanas.

There was a biting frost at that high elevation of nearly nine thousand feet and our horses stepped out briskly in the chill of the morning air.

A big timber wolf howled in the darkness far up the valley where the creek came down from the westward, and the dogs disappeared. Fifteen minutes afterward we heard their savage barking in the timber ahead of us.

We pressed on, but in the darkness it was impossible to do more than hear the fight. They evidently had some large, savage beast at bay.

As we approached the animal retreated, and we could hear the chase through the timber, passing the dangerous creek bed where it was impossible for us to follow on horseback. There the animal, whatever it was, made another stand, and we could only wait and listen, impatient to be with our dogs.

Reluctantly we left the dogs to their own devices and rode on. Four days later they returned to the ranch pretty well "chawed up," with their ears in tatters, ribs well scored and every indication they had caught a tartar. Possibly they had killed him. Quien sabe? What it was we never knew. Probably a wolf, possibly a panther, maybe a bear.

As we pressed on, the east grew gray with the coming dawn, and then, as we got on the mesa of the Corral Falso, the eastern sky turned red and the first rays of the rising sun showed on the gray old peak of El Huehuento, a mile or two further ahead, and there, among the pine tops, the smoke slowly drifted up from the camp fires of the packers, whose breakfast was evidently about ready.

We dismounted and sat down to a hasty breakfast of tortillas, nine inches in diameter, and a half inch thick—mule packers' style—beans which, owing to the high altitude, were by no means overboiled, and a chunk or two of jerked venison hastily broiled over the live coals.

Then every man lit a smoke cigarette, and for a few moments lay in front of the fire smoking and digesting his breakfast.

With the packs all in place they moved out, down the trail, to cover the twenty-five miles to Ventanas, in the hot country.

Don Bull and I mounted our horses, and laying our rifles across our knees rode out on the trail toward the Caballos Ranch to try our luck with the deer.

There was an old doe close to where we breakfasted. I had seen her many times, but disliked to kill her because her fawns were still young. As we reached her feeding ground I saw her dodging off among the rocks, followed by her fawns.

Just then Don Bull, who was riding ahead, said, "Look, Temple," and there in the open, sixty yards away, two six-point bucks were trotting proudly across our path.

To slip from the saddle—was the work of an instant, and as my rifle came to my shoulder one deer was still in sight. At the crack of the gun he went down with a broken neck. I advanced to him and, laying my rifle across his ribs, drew my knife to bleed him, taking, as I did, a momentary survey of the country and wondering where his companion had gone.

As I looked the second buck stuck his head from behind a tree, where he had been taking in the situation. To drop my knife and raise my rifle was strictly in order; and at the crack of my rifle he dropped.

This all happened in about ninety seconds—perhaps less—and old Don Bull sat motionless in his saddle, except that his fat ribs shook as he chuckled silently in mute satisfaction.

"You're a dead shot, Temple; I reckon I will go after the boys and get to Ventanas to-night," he said finally.

"All right," I replied; "tell them in camp I will be down with a pack train loaded with meat about the end of next week. So long." He waved his hand in salute, and we parted.

My trail to camp lay along the foot of El Huehuento, the old gray capped, riven peak that was a landmark for fifty miles around and from whose base radiated a labyrinth of pine and oak clothed ridges; then across the mesa, strewed with rocks and fallen timber to the southward, and then crossed on to the Cordon Pelon and back away to the westward.

On all this trail, at the level of my eyes as I sat on my mustang, I saw a mark in the bark where apparently a pistol ball had passed through a segment of the tree trunk. It had a suspicious look and I reined in my horse to examine it more closely.

Although apparently the mark of a pistol shot, it was not. My hunting lore explained the mystery—it was the bite of a male bear, indicating his height to his possible rivals and breathing forth defiance to the whole Sierra, saying practically to the denizens of the wild, "I am an old bear and can lick you all, and here is my mark."

A few days after in passing the same place I noticed that two other bears had left their marks on the tree, one above and the other a trifle below the original, in response to this challenge.

As I rode along the Cordon Pelon I listened in vain for the voices of the dead men that were said to haunt the ridge. Don Bull assured me he had heard them call there, but I could not.

Perhaps the day was too bright and the ghosts were in hiding for darker weather. Anyhow, what I first saw was a barren doe, tiptoeing along cautiously and daintily above me on the ridge to the left of the trail.

A barren doe is a prize for any hunter, for the meat is fat and tender, much better than a tough old buck; and as the animal was only about forty yards away and seemed unconscious that I saw her it was a very easy matter, sitting in the saddle, to bowl her over in her tracks. My, but that was good venison!

It was a few minutes' work to bleed, dress and hang her up in a convenient tree. Then I mounted and rode off very well satisfied with my morning's work.

Suddenly El Bayo, my buckskin mustang, stopped in his tracks, braced his fore feet firmly and with head erect snorted suspiciously at the ridge in front. I got down and examined the ground carefully. It was a fresh bear track, heading west toward my camp.

Not two hundred yards from where I killed the doe a spike buck peered at me impudently from among the scrub oak saplings at the right of the trail, hardly twenty-five yards away. It was a difficult shot from horseback, as it was on the right side of the trail and I was not an expert shooting from my left shoulder, and there was no time to dismount.

I managed to hit him, and then jumped off and caught him before, crippled as he was, he was able to escape me. It was not much of a shot, but I got my meat. Camp was now close by and comparatively all down hill.

As I crossed the creek of the Black Cave a big buck showed up, looking proudly at me among the timbers, within easy range, but he got away before I could level my rifle. It is generally so—the biggest ones get away.

Slowly we picked our way down the ridge, and finally came to a point where the camp was in plain view. The tent was still standing, but the ropes on which I had hung my venison to dry looked very bare, although I had left them covered with the meat of two deer. I made some low, intense remarks in plain English. "Them Injuns," I muttered.

I jumped off my horse in front of the tent to examine the ground. The deer meat was all gone, ditto two buck hides that I had staked out on the ground to dry. Ditto the skeleton of a deer I left hanging on a tree after cutting off and salting the meat. Somebody had evidently been to camp while I was gone and had had a good appetite.

The salt sack, containing about a peck of salt, was thrown out in front of the tent and half its contents spilled upon the grass. Also, there was a hole apparently made by large teeth through one corner of the sack. Very plainly my visitor did not approve of salt. A sheath knife that had been hidden in the grass at the foot of the tree was lying without its sheath some ten feet away from its hiding place, while the sheath lay some six feet nearer the tree.

A look into the creek showed me the deer skeleton thrown there in the water. One of the tent pegs had been pulled up. Also eleven deer hides, stretched and dried, had been extracted from the tent and pulled carefully, one on top of the other, in a corner made by two logs falling across one another, where the grass was deep and long and made an excellent bed.

In the middle of the hides was a round depression as if a human being or animal had enjoyed his "otium cum dignitate" there. I didn't see him there, but I believe he had been there. For all the proofs were in favor of it. But who was it?

I was suspicious it was the "Injuns" down at the Pueblo. They were no good, anyhow, and I had been killing too many of their deer. But, then, they were able-bodied thieves and would probably have stolen the whole shooting match.

Then I happened to glance into the ashes of my old campfire, and there was the track of the marauder—it was a bear, sure enough!

And that explained why my dogs the week before had rushed up on the ridge back of the camp, barked and growled and then came back without showing much desire to go any further. I had wondered what they were barking at, but had been unable to find anything.

That bear had been creeping once on me for several days, probably just waiting his chance.

I made a faint attempt to bring order out of chaos by replacing what was left of my plunder in the tent, then started a fire and got dinner ready. With a tortilla in one hand and a chunk of broiled deer meat in the other, my rifle leaning against a tree behind me, just out of reach, I supplied the wants of the inner man, alternately a mouthful of tortillas with a mouthful of deer meat, while El Bayo grazed quietly on the hillside some seventy-five yards away.

Suddenly I noticed that he had stopped grazing and raised his head and was very much interested in something up the mountainside. I looked and there was a superb cinnamon bear coming down the faldeo [side hill], with a most indigrous, self-satisfied swagger.

What became of my deer meat and tortillas is one of the unexplained mysteries of the mountains. Whether I turned a somersault to reach my rifle I don't know, but the first I knew I was behind the tree my rifle had leaned against, with the weapon cocked and aimed at a big oak tree about sixty yards away. The bear had disappeared like a jack in the box, and I suspected he had flanked the hak and was making off, with the tree as a shield.

Not so, however. In about ten seconds I saw a nose and ear peer cautiously around the tree trunk and then quickly draw back. I got the line and drew a fine bead on the place where the nose appeared. Again he came out further and peeped around. He was evidently playing "peek-a-boo" with me.

After a few withdrawals and reappearances, I was finally able to see the entire width of his head and both ears. Now was the time! I drew fine on the point of his nose, and touched the trigger of my old "Ballard Pacific" rifle.

If the ball had sped true he would have fallen in his tracks, but he didn't. Because the crack of the rifle had caused reverberating among the peaks he was half way to me, and I had another cartridge in the rifle. I knew I had not missed him—I couldn't miss him in those days at that range—but I wondered where I had hit, and I held on him as he came for me, but didn't shoot.

I held on him but hated to shoot, as the shot from this point would make a long tear in his pelt, and it was a "beaut."

Marking a tree up the mountainside I mentally resolved to try a shot at him if he was able to get that far, but I thought he wouldn't make it. Still, with eye in the sights and finger on trigger I followed him carefully.

Just as I was about to fire another shot he collapsed, falling to the ground and lying there looking very much like a well stuffed bearskin rug.

I came up, rifle in hand, and looked at his eyes. They were wide open and he seemed to be alive, but didn't move. Circling around him with cocked rifle I came in from the rear and poked him vigorously in the rump with the rifle muzzle.

He didn't move. Uncocking my rifle I laid it on the ground and drew my hunting knife. Rolling him over on his back I found my bullet had gone low and had struck him exactly in the "sticking place." It had passed through his heart, leaving a piece of it that just made a fair supper that evening, had ranranged on the ribs inside and had passed out between the hams just above the tail, lodging below the root of his tail and had not spoiled an ounce of meat.

When I drove my knife into the bear's side I congratulated myself that I had not come to a hand-to-hands struggle with him, as my ammunition was limited and was not enough to drive the keen blade into his thick hide, which was as heavy as a bull hide. Finally, by using both my hands I drove it in to the hilt and bled him and then managed to drag and roll him down the steep mountain side to the campfire, where I skinned him and dressed the meat.

He was as white as a prize sheep after I had taken his jacket off, and had about one-half inch of fat all over him. In his stomach I found the still undigested jerked venison and the deer hide he had stolen from my camp.

Although I had wild turkey and fat venison in camp, after I cried a bear steak I passed the venison and turkey up and confined myself strictly to bear meat and tortillas, which were good—very good.

This fellow had, evidently been fattening himself on green corn and before shall he had been so unfortunate as to meet his Waterloo—and transform himself from bear into bear meat.

I stretched and dried his skin, and three days afterward he was all right for me and bed; and for the remaining days that I spent in the mountains before taking my meat down to Ventanas it made a very comfortable addition to my scanty and primitive [illegible].

A week later the boys in Ventanas had their choice of fat doe venison, wild turkey gobbler or bear meat steaks for their Christmas dinner.

My dried deer meat "jerky" I delivered in bales at the company store at a price arranged previously per pound, and sold the deer hides and bear skins at good prices.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An Ignoble Secret

But It Proved a Valuable One

By CHARLES LEWIS PHELPS

"My son," said my father when I went to see, "you're going into the world, and a rough one you'll find it. I've been a sailor myself, as you know, for fifty years and am glad to find a snug harbor here at home. You'll have to go through some pretty narrow holes, and your getting through at all will depend on your courage, your coolness and your wits. I can give you a way by which I once saved myself from being put under the table at a drinking bout. We'd gone ashore, a liberty party. I was a beardless boy at the time, and my mates, who were all older than I, thought it would be a fine thing to get me drunk. We went into an inn and called for drinks. The landlord, seeing their game and disposed to favor me on account of my youth, I suppose, beckoned to me to come into a side room and, pointing to a tumbler on the table, told me to drink it. The stuff was olive oil. That olive oil kept me sober when all the rest of the gang one by one slid down under the table. That's all the experience I can give you, my boy. The day may come when it will help you out if some one is trying to lay you out."

It would seem that this was but a poor quantum of experience for a father to give his boy, but the time did come when it served me well, and that time wasn't long coming, either. Anyway, it was while I was still before the mast. We sailed for the West Indies, taking out a cargo of cotton goods to make clothes for the negroes, and were to bring back dried fruits and whatever could be bought cheap and sold dear when we got back to England. We first struck the Bahamas, then Haiti and lastly Jamaica. Those were the days of the buccaneers, and Kingston, Jamaica, was a rendezvous for them.

One day when we were at anchor off Kingston a piratical looking chap came aboard and had a long talk with our captain. The next day he came back with a box in the bottom of his boat. It wasn't more than three feet square, but it was hoisted on deck by block and tackle, and it took four men to carry it below. Considering the looks of the man who brought it and its weight, I suspected that it was full of gold that had been looted from some Spanish ship, to be transferred to England.

The next day we sailed back through the Windward passage, striking the Atlantic to the southward of Turks Islands and after that pointing due north. When we were about 26 degrees north of the equator one morning we noticed a ship that carried a good deal of sail for her tonnage coming out from among the Bahamas in the neighborhood of San Salvador. I saw that our captain had his eye on her, suspicious like, and every few minutes he would bring his glass to bear on her. After rounding San Salvador she pointed due north on the course we were sailing, but after a few hours she seemed to be a little nearer us.

About noon the captain called the crew aft and told us that the ship to the westward looked mighty suspicious. True, she showed British colors, but there were plenty of British ships in those days that had been privateers when the war between England and Spain was on that didn't have to change much to become pirates. The vessel was apparently sailing the same course as we, but really a point or two toward us. She was between us and the islands, and all she had to do was to keep getting nearer all the while till she joined us. If we sheered off she would, if she was after us, sheer off too.

True enough, the ship kept edging nearer to us all that afternoon. Toward evening the captain ordered out every bit of canvas we had and turned the ship's nose due eastward. The other vessel turned at once to follow us, showing distinctly that she would overhaul us if she could. She ran up more canvas, and it was soon evident that her sailing qualities were far better than ours.

I'm not going to describe a chase that soon brought the ship up with us or the fight that was sure to be a losing one for us, because these chases and fights are all the same. And I'm not going to tell how the captain and most of the crew walked the plank. I watching them struggling in the water. When it came my turn an idea popped into my head. The pirate captain, a man with a long black curly beard, was superintending the job, and as I was ordered on to the plank I said:

"Captain, there's a treasure aboard the ship, but I don't believe you can find it."

A covetous look came into his face, and he ordered me to step aside.

He agreed to the proposition at once. If there was a treasure aboard he didn't care to drown any man who might be able to give him any information about it. He could continue the plank walking after finding it. So he ordered me and four men who had not yet been put into the sea to be left where we were and the plank hauled in.

"Now, young man," he said to me, "tell me about the treasure."

I told him about the box that had been brought aboard, but since I had not seen it stored I couldn't tell him where it was. But I would know it if I saw it again. All I could do was to hunt for it among the cargo, and that was like looking for a needle in a haystack. It was rather late in the day to begin then, for it was growing dark. I told him there was some choice wine in the ship which I could point out to him that had been taken aboard when we had touched at a Spanish port on our way southward, and the ship was well stocked with provisions for the homeward voyage.

He decided to remain aboard himself with a prize crew of eight men till the treasure had been found. He ordered one of his captives to prepare a supper, and I filled a demijohn of wine and brought it to him.

He seemed to wish to appear friendly to me. His reason was plain. I might help him in the matter of the treasure and I might stand in his way. From what I had told him he believed that a box of gold coins—probably pieces of eight—had been brought aboard to be taken to England, for pirate ships were fitted out there, and investors must get their share of the plunder. When supper was ready my captor invited me to join him, and I accepted his invitation.

A scheme was forming in my mind. There was but little chance it would win, but it was not hopeless. We were five unarmed prisoners, guarded by eight pirates. With death staring us in the face we were all ready for any desperate enterprise. I hoped a possibility for such might arise during the night and would have liked to speak to my mates about it, but dared not be seen talking with any of them. I therefore went in to supper with the captain without having been able to tell them to be on the lookout.

There was hard drinking in those days, and many a villain who would have been invincible while sober got his deserts from his thirst for liquor. It was soon plain to me that the captain was bound to drink hard, but he was smart enough not to get drunk, leaving me sober. He would not begin a fresh bottle himself without forcing me to finish the one before me.

Suddenly I remembered the experience with olive oil that my father had given me. There was none on the table, but a-plenty in the ship, that had been taken aboard when we took on the wine. I told the captain that with his permission I would make him a salad such as he had never before tasted, but to do so I must go for some oil. He consented, and, taking a small pitcher, I filled it and drank half of it. Then, replacing what I had taken, I carried it, with a head of lettuce taken on with supplies at Kingston, and went back to my host. I then prepared a salad of the lettuce and fruits which the captain pronounced excellent.

After this I kept up with the captain in finishing my bottle, then began to get ahead of him. It pained him to be beaten by a heartless boy, and he poured down bottle after bottle to lag the same, but feeling comparatively little effect from the fumes of the wine.

Suddenly I heard a loud laugh for'ard. It was followed by a shout, then a yelp. My heart bounded with delight. The crew had doubtless seen me drawing the wine from the cask and had appropriated more of it to their own use. The captain heard the noise, and it seemed to sober him since he knew what it meant. He started to rise from the table, but was unable to do so. I passed him his bottle and filled his glass. He forgot what he had intended to do and drained it.

I now waited for the captain to fall into a stupor and the men outside to follow his example. Their shouts grew louder for a while, then fainter as one after another they dropped off into unconsciousness. Meanwhile the captain was snoring under the table.

Seizing a pair of pistols, I went out battered in the door of the cubbyhole in which my mates were confined and released them. As soon as they were armed we held a consultation as to what to do next. We decided to bind the captain and his men with a view to getting them to England for trial. Hope is easily found on a ship, and without awakening the pirates we bound them and put each one in a separate compartment.

Our next problem was to get away from the pirate vessel, which was standing near us. We must not hoist a sail for fear of being heard. Besides, there was a scant breeze. The night was cloudy, with no moon. We lowered a boat, muffled the oars, attached a hawser to the capstan, took the other end to the boat and pulled away. We could see the pirate, but not plainly, and hoped that our movement would not be noticed.

It was not long before we lost sight of her. Then we redoubled our efforts and after an hour's pull returned to our ship, hoisted a jib and with this slender motive power sailed till we dared hoist more canvas. When day came the pirate was hull down on the southern horizon.

Our crew was small, but we managed to get the vessel safely to England. I made a search for the treasure box and found it under the flooring in the captain's cabin. We concluded that since we could not return it to its owners we were justified in keeping it ourselves. So we divided it among us, and every man jack of us was made rich.

The only person I told how I had made my money was my father, who had furnished me with the information that had enabled me not only to make it, but to save my life. I gave the old man every comfort for the rest of his life.

Was ever man saved from death and made rich by being told how to put another under the table?

For Prevention of Disease By Natural Means

NEARLY all forms of disease are traceable to sanitary ignorance and an imperfect action of the liver.

Eating between meals is a frequent cause of indigestion and intestinal disorders, because introducing a fresh mass of food into the mass already partly dissolved arrests the healthy action of the stomach and causes the food first received to lie until incipient fermentation takes place. The liver, unlike the stomach, is constantly secreting, and when too much carbonaceous food has been taken, the bile becomes too thick and consequently unable to perform its office. Every intelligent person, who appreciates the inestimable value of good health, should read the "Rules of Life" set forth in the booklet enclosed in every package of

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT"

By strict adherence to these rules, even those of impaired constitution have been made healthy and comparatively robust. Eno's "Fruit Salt" is a health-giving, cooling and invigorating beverage, which should be kept in every household in readiness for an emergency. BILL GOES FORWARD.

N.R. Measure Comes Up For Third Reading To-day.

OTTAWA, June 1.—The House on Saturday morning considered the bill in aid of the Canadian Northern in committee of the whole.

Practically all the clauses were passed without discussion. The bill will be reported from committee and stand for third reading to-day, when several amendments may be offered by members of the Opposition. When that section of the bill was reached, providing for a trustee under the agreement between the railway company and the Government, Mr. Carvell (Carleton, N.B.), said he had no doubt that the National Trust Co. of which Hon. Mr. White was president, would be selected. Hon. W. T. White said in reply that applications had been received from a number of companies all over the country, and there was no intention to discriminate either for or against the National Trust Co. He personally had no longer any connection with the company, or any interest therein.

Upon motion of Solicitor-General Meighen the bill was so amended that the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan, the Canadian Northern Western and the Canadian Northern Pacific will not come under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Railway Commission or be declared works for the general advantage of Canada until a proclamation has been issued by the Governor-in-Council to that effect, after an order-in-council has declared the said railways to be completed and ready for operation.

Two of His Lieutenants Start Counter Revolution In Mexico.

NEW YORK, June 1.—The interior department has information that the rebel leaders, Berrera and Chao, at Ballena, have quarrelled with Villa. Meantime Roderigo Quevido, in Northern Chihuahua, is actively pushing a counter revolution. The interior department's advices from Monterey indicate the rebels have seized a brewery and are operating it at full capacity, selling the output all over Northern Mexico. Funds thus obtained are being used for needs of the revolutionary exchequer. The property at Monterey of Miguel Quiroga Fernando Ancia and Gregorio Martinez, and other persons regarded as sympathizers with the present Mexican administration, has been confiscated by rebels.

Dr. Gregorio Martinez is held by the rebels in the penitentiary, and it is reported that various secret executions have taken place.

Tropical Islands Going Cheap.

Among the latest arrivals in London is a man anxious to sell several West Indian islands above which floats the British flag. He is the landlord of five of the islands that go to form the famous Bahama group, the first glimpse of which, in 1492, set the lion-heart of Christopher Columbus jumping at the thought that at last he had found the new world. Great Whale Island, the largest of the five, is six miles long, and boasts a plantation of cocoa-nut trees.

London society may well buy islands, especially when they are cheaper than motor cars. For $4,000, you can purchase sovereignty, you can be monarch of all your survey. That is the price of which the islands, big and small, work out.

With his wife and two children, the owner has lived and reigned in his domain for seven years. The plateau of the northern end of the island, 50 feet above sea level, he describes as a most healthy and pleasant dwelling place. In the phrases of the suburban house agent this island King directs attention to the fact that "the views from our house have been described by visitors as the finest in the Bahamas." The islands can be had for $20,000 the lot.

Shakespeare and Burns.

In a lecture before the Royal Institute in London Professor Arthur Keith, in an anthropological study, gave it as his opinion that Shakespeare was a descendant of the bronze age invaders, the true or round head people. This was a remarkable fact, the professor added, for it was this same short headed stock, spread abroad in central Europe, throughout Germany, France and Italy, which has produced the world's finest artists. Burns, he said, on the contrary, was a good representative of the long headed type of man. His skull was very broad and of excessive length and appeared to be closely set to the neck. It represented an ancient type.

An Ancient Hotel.

Very shortly the George Hotel, Reading, Eng., more than 400 years old, will be sold by auction. The George was doing business in the days when the Abbot of Reading was one of the great men in the land, and it stands now in dignified repose in a busy street, not far from the gaunt ruins of the great abbey. High over its arched entrance, on a little shield, is the date of its foundation, 1506. Reading was then a village of 2,000 inhabitants. The George belonged to the late Mr. Henry Neville, the actor, who was very proud of the old house, and took the liveliest interest in its management.

Turning Lead Into Gold.

Professor F. Soddy, F.R.S., declares that it is only a question of application to change lead into gold. He says that while now we can only work with electricity at 100,000 volts, it is only a matter of perfecting the method to be able to work at ten times that voltage, when the baser metals can be changed into the more precious. In other words, electricity, when brought to its highest efficiency and application, is the real philosopher's stone for which the alchemists of the middle ages searched so long.—London Spectator.

Restoring Rokeby Venus.

The Rokeby Venus, the beautiful painting in the British National Gallery which was slashed by a militant suffragist, has been so deftly repaired that the damage done cannot be detected by the ordinary observer. As a concession to properly accredited art students the gallery, which was closed to the public after the outrage, has been reopened to them.

The telephone cable which is in connection Aldeburgh, Eng., with Walcheren, Netherlands, is to be 70 nautical miles in length, making it the longest submarine telephone cable in the world.

The Postcard's Delay.

During the removal of a large enamel plate from a letter-box outside the postoffice at Stanley road, Teddington, Eng., three postcards dated October, 1893, were found wedged between the plate and the frame of the letter-box. Although much discolored after their 21 years' rest, the addresses on two of the cards were decipherable, and they are to be delivered.

Less of Wage In West.

The average wage offered to farm hands in the West this year for the season of about seven months is from $20 to $25 per month, all found; and, for the year, about $25 per month. So soon the willing, inexperienced man can now secure work on a farm anywhere throughout the west, there is no reason and no excuse for idleness.

TORONTO, June 1.—Charges of a most serious character were made by L. P. Godson of Kingston, one of the survivors, who arrived in Toronto last night, when interview at the Queen's Hotel. His charges are:

That many second and third class passengers were barred from access to the deck because the door leading to the exit was locked.

Although efforts were made by the imprisoned passengers to break down the barrier they died like rats in a trap.

Although he took two trips to his first cabin stateroom in search of lifebelts, none were to be found there, and the same was probably the case in most of the other staterooms.

Even though he was one of the first to arrive on the promenade deck, there were only three life preservers on the port side.

That these life-preservers were fastened with binder twine, and that it was only with the utmost difficulty were they loosened.

That the crew were the only ones who knew the location of the life belts and that they secured them for themselves.

That the lifebelts, no matter in what position they struck the water, they did not sink, but owing to no facilities for getting the ropes being handy, few were launched. Could they have been unfastened they would have afforded something to which the drowning passengers could have clung.

That lifeboats left the wreck before taking on a capacity load, leaving scores of struggling beings behind, he himself being picked up by one three-quarters of a mile from the scene less than half filled and hurrying away to the Storstad.

"About 2.05 a.m. I was awakened by the shock of the collision. Realizing that something serious had occurred, I rushed out of my stateroom, No. 21, clad only in my pajamas, and hurried on to the deck and I saw plainly a boat to the stern, which afterwards proved to be the Storstad. Although there was a slight fog, I could easily discern its outline about a hundred yards AWAY.

PARALYZED LIMBS

To-day it is dyspepsia, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next time you know some result of sluggish has developed. Mr. Alex. Hemmerger, 2 Manse Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 10 years."

Everybody Has Two Brains Centres of Nervous Energy

Enormous Amount of Blood Consumed in Supplying Nerve Force to Mind and Body

Everybody has two brains, one to think with and the other to control the workings of the heart, lungs, stomach and other vital organs. This mechanical brain is situated low down in the back of the head and is the great centre of the nervous system which, through its ramification of branches, reaches every part of the human body.

Any lack of nervous energy is soon apparent in disorders of the bodily organs. Weakness of the nerves which control the digestive fluids means indigestion and similarly other derangements arise.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has fully established its reputation as a means of restoring vitality to the nervous system and thoroughly curing such ailments as sleeplessness, irritability, nervous headache and indigestion, partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia.

Mrs. Wm. Hay, Spy Hill, writes: "I am glad of an opportunity of recommending Dr. Chase's Nerve Food; for it restored my nervous system when I was badly run down. I greatly did this treatment benefit me that I have recommended it to friends and know they have obtained good results from the use of the Nerve Food many times. In my opinion there is nothing like it for building up a run down system."

It is said that one-fifth of the blood in the human body is consumed by the brain in the manufacture of nervous energy. Because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food supplies the ingredients from which rich, red blood is formed, it is the greatest of nerve vitalizers.

Artificial Milk.

A discovery which should prove of great interest to housewives and mothers has recently been brought to perfection in a London chemical laboratory, says The London Times. This is a process of manufacturing synthetically a pure and wholesome milk of high nutritive value, possessing all the virtues of the original article and none of its many dangers.

The fluid, as far as its appearance is concerned, is quite indistinguishable from rich cow's milk. The new milk has been built up from a basis of casein obtained from the soya bean. Casein, of course, is likewise the basal constituent of cow's milk. In order that the synthetic milk may approximate in all respects to the real milk, bacteria of the required strains, including the lactic acid (sour milk) bacilli rendered famous by Metchnikoff, a few years ago, are introduced to the fluid and permitted to act upon it until it reaches exactly that state of what may be termed maturity at which fresh cow's milk is proved by the fact that excellent cheese and "butter" can be made from it.

Spoiled.

In the early days of Johannesburg water was often very scarce. A lady who was staying at a hotel there one morning saw a bathtub half full of water standing outside her door and, thinking it was intended for her use, took possession of it. Later, however, some one came to fetch the tub and was extremely angry to find it gone. Then the lady learned to her dismay that she had taken all the water in the hotel, and that it was required for cooking. "It would not have mattered so much," said the angry servant, "had you not used soap!"

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, JUNE 1, 1914

Peterboro's Loyal Welcome To The Governor-General

HUGE CROWDS WELCOME VICE-REGAL PARTY ON OCCASION OF FIRST VISIT TO THIS CITY

EVENTS OF THE VISIT

Peterborough extended a loyal welcome this morning to His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, to his fair consort the Duchess of Connaught, and to their charming daughter, the Princess Patricia. Thousands of the citizens gathered along the route and in Central Park, and literally opened their arms to the Royal visitors. Nature added its artistry to the efforts of man to make the occasion an emphatic expression of the people's love for the British Crown through the connection of the Governor-General. At the same time the reception was an impressive testimonial to the personalities of the incumbent Royal family at Ottawa.

The sun shone ardently from the deep skies of the early summer sky upon the flushed greens of the foliage and the Park award. A fresh breeze gently tempered the air, making the natural setting as enjoyable as it was pleasurable, to the expectant throng.

The preparations that had been planned for weeks past, were perfect, and not a hitch occurred to interfere with the arrangements. The citizens must have noticed the keen interest which the Governor-General manifested in all the proceedings. There was nothing casual or perfunctory in his acceptance of the citizens' address, read by Mayor Bullen, in his attention to the songs of the school children and his compliments and gratitude to them for their choruses. The Collegiate Institute Cadets were carefully inspected and congratulated, and a pleasing feature was the inspection of the Boy Scouts. His Royal Highness is the Chief Scout of all the Scout patrols in the Dominion, and to the small boy he spoke words of encouragement. His Highness made the boys feel that the future hope of the country rested with them, and while he chatted with them and the Scout Masters the crowd around the raised marquee waited impatiently for the completion of his inspection.

The Duke of Connaught displayed that element of simplicity and sincerity which won the esteem of the boys and the girls, too, and at the same time strongly appealed to the adults.

Brought Near to Royalty.

The occasion should be a memorable one in the fact that it brought the people of Peterborough nearer to the representative of His Majesty King George V., and thereby to the heart of the British Empire. In this fact lies the chief import of the Royal visit, and it was decidedly fitting that not only should the reception have been a deeply loyal one but that the children should have played a prominent part in it. Looking back on the morning's event the citizens may regard its success with pardonable pride. Only one minor criticism may be made. Most assemblies in this province are different in giving vent to their felings. An appropriate termination to the affair at Central Park would have been a concerted cheer in which every person could have joined. There is no questioning the enthusiasm of the citizens toward the royal party, but the expression of it in spontaneous cheers would have added the desired fillip and crowned the reception with an outburst that would have been a feature of the visit to Peterborough. But repression of sentiment seems to be firmly fixed in the characters of the people, and has been noted on more occasions than one. However, every other note in the reception was decidedly harmonious. Their Highnesses were pleasingly natural and gracious, the citizens eagerly joining in the fete, and the reception will doubtless have a prominent place in the Governor-General's memory of his visits to Canadian cities.

AT THE STATION.

At half an hour before the time that the train was scheduled to arrive with the Royal party, the station platform, the yards around the station and the streets in the vicinity were a mass of humanity. Automobiles were lined on each side of George Street for more than a block north of the station, and the cars nearest the station that were to take part in the procession were packed closely around by the crowd of people all anxious to get a glimpse of His Royal Highness. The tops of the box cars which were lined up in the yard of the station made an excellent place of vantage for a large number, and from the windows and

CIVIC ADDRESS PRESENTED TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS ON BEHALF OF THE CITY

Field Marshal His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, K.G., etc., etc., Governor-General of Canada.

May It Please Your Royal Highness:—

As Mayor of Peterborough, on behalf of the Council and the people of the City, I bid Your Royal Highness and Their Royal Highnesses, the Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia, a hearty welcome and thank you for the honour conferred by this visit and for the great pleasure you have thereby afforded this community.

The eminent ability you have displayed in the service of the Empire, as soldier, counsellor, statesman, and administrator is well known, and must ever be highly appreciated in every part of His Majesty's dominions.

When we learned that one who had been so long and so closely identified with the great events of the Empire, and who had taken such a prominent part in shaping its course during the many years of its development and expansion, was to be our Governor-General, we were more than gratified, and our gratification was enhanced by the fact that Your Royal Highness was a Prince of that honoured and worthy House to which we owe a willing, dutiful and affectionate allegiance.

To have this opportunity of greeting you personally is therefore a distinct pleasure, but that pleasure is heightened when we greet you as a son of the beloved and never-to-be-forgotten Queen Victoria, as a brother of His Majesty King Edward, revered by all his subjects, and as an uncle of our Most Gracious Sovereign King George. Only once before have we been so favoured as to receive a visit from a member of Your illustrious family, and that visit of your Royal brother, the then Prince of Wales, is still held in fond remembrance and will ever remain a notable event in our city's annals.

With all other Canadian subjects of His Majesty we fully recognise the service Your Royal Highness has given to this Dominion in bringing to the performance of your duties as Governor-General the same ability, sagacity and devotion which have characterized your labours in other important spheres throughout the Empire and we feel assured that Canadians will always recall your tenure of office with pride and with satisfaction.

To you as our Governor-General, and as a member of the Royal family, we wish to give expression to our devotion to the interest of the Empire and to our loyalty to our Gracious Sovereign. No truer Britons, and none more loyal can be found anywhere than in Canada, and there are none more truly British and none more truly loyal than are the citizens of Peterborough.

It is a matter of especial gratification to us that Her Royal Highness, The Duchess of Connaught, is able to be with you on this occasion, and we wish to tender to her our heartfelt wishes for her health and happiness.

We hope that your continued residence in Canada will be an enjoyable one for yourself and for Their Royal Highnesses, the Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia. We are sure that the interest which you have taken in the people and in the development of this Dominion will not cease with your term of office, but will continue to bear good fruit in years to come, and we trust that your Canadian sojourn will remain a pleasant memory.

DUKE LEFT A SOUVENIR

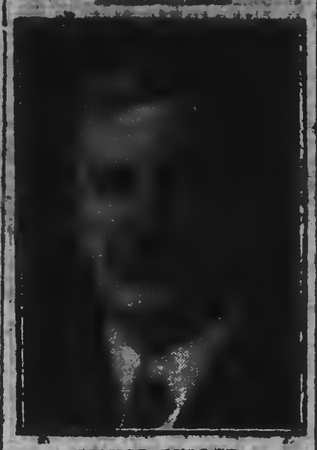
PLEASED WITH PETERBORO'

In speaking with Mayor Buller this afternoon he told the Examiner that the Governor-General had expressed his delight with the reception accorded the visiting party by the citizens. The Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia also joined His Highness in voicing the pleasure the stay in Peterborough had given them, and their chief regret was that their visit here was unavoidably confined to a few hours. His Highness remarked that Peterborough reminded him of some of the progressive towns in England and he pointed out some of the marks of similarity. From the time he alighted at the C.P.R. station until his departure the Governor-General was right at home.

Before departing he presented Mayor Buller with a large photograph of himself and the Duchess as a reminder of his visit. The picture will be hung in the Council Chamber. His Highness was delighted with the arrangements that the Reception committee had prepared and stated that his visit had been a real pleasure.



MAYOR BULLER

His Worship read the civic address to His Royal Highness.

A REMARKABLE TRIBUTE

To The Examiner's Enterprise

Yesterday was the sixth coupon day for the great Heart Songs distribution now being made by The Examiner. While we knew when we first joined the powerful syndicate of newspapers, all over the United States, in the present distribution enterprise, that we were rendering a service unique in its advantage to our readers—we did not fully realize the extent to which they would go in seizing the opportunity.

But the first distribution day — yesterday—discounted our most sanguine estimates so greatly that we have been compelled to place rush orders with the publishers for copies far in excess of our previous allotment.

The popular reception of this unique volume — as evidenced yesterday — emphatically confirms our judgment — and we admonish our readers to lose no time in cutting their six coupons at once—that they may be able to secure their copy while the supply called for by our contract is still available.

The publishers of his remarkable book spent four years in getting from all over the world expressions from 20,000 people as to their favourite songs. The final collection comprising thousands of tuneful melodies that had their birth during the past century, was carefully and critically pruned by two of the most distinguished American musicians, Victor Herbert and George W. Chadwick, famous for their own compositions — and resulted in the book called by inspiration "Heart Songs." The announcements, appearing almost daily in our advertising columns, fully and explicitly set forth the merits of the volume — and the coupon, which appears daily in this paper, explains the terms on which it may be had.

PRELIMINARY INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF EMPRESS OF IRELAND COMMENCED BY DOMINION WRECK COMMISSIONER LINDSAY

Her Royal Highness Princess Patricia

Officers of the Storstad Support Their Captain's Claim That He Did Everything in His Power to Avert the Accident.

KENDALL GRIEF STRICKEN

Special Wire to The Examiner:

MONTREAL... June.. 1.—Wreck Commissioner Lindsay to-day opened a preliminary enquiry into the sinking of the Empress of Ireland with nearly one thousand lives on Friday morning. Later it will be taken up by the Judges of the Admiralty Court. The Minister of Justice and Department of Marine have ordered that no effort or expense be spared to make the enquiry and trial most complete in order to definitely fix the responsibility for Canada's greatest marine disaster. This morning the officers of collier Storstad gave interviews in which they support strongly their captain's claims that he did his utmost to avoid the accident, and when the accident came, risked everything to save the Empress' passengers. Experienced marine men here believe that the question of responsibility will revolve around the misinterpretation of signals. In this connection it is pointed out that Captain Kendall has practically only his own recollection to bear out his contentions. All his navigating officers, his wheelsmen, the ship records, and many of the seamen of the watch went down with the ship. On the other hand Captain Anderson of the Storstad has his entire crew with the ship's records to back him up.

A Relief Fund.

LONDON, Eng., June 1. — The King and Queen and the Prince of Wales have contributed four thousand dollars to the fund opened by the Lord Mayor of London for the widows and orphans made by the Empress disaster.

Kendall Like Man in Dream.

MONTREAL, June 1.—Captain Kendall of the ill-fated Empress of Ireland, was seen this morning at Place Viger, where he is staying. Despite a day's quietness and rest his face is still haggard and he goes about the rotunda like a man in a dream. His eyes are very red, as if from continuous sorrow, and his cheeks are drawn and white. To reporters as well as to others, he is very courteous, but his friends about him form a bodyguard against all questioning. His only statement is "I regret that I can say nothing more for the present."

Searching for Bodies.

RIMOUSKI, P.Q., June 1.—Boats of the cruiser Essex this morning montioned the search for bodies from the wrecked Empress. Thirteen were picked up yesterday. Bubbles continue to come up from the position where the vessel went down. It is a beautiful morning at the spot where there is so much tragedy.

Sympathy from Kaiser.

OTTAWA, June 1. — Sympathy from Emperor William of Germany was conveyed this morning to His Royal Highness the Governor-General, on behalf of the Canadian people. "Deeply shocked at fearful accident, which befell the Empress of Ireland. I hasten to express to you my deepest sympathy with the bereaved families." (Signed) WILLIAM R I.

Work of Identification.

QUEBEC, June 1.—This morning's train brought sorrowing relatives and friends to aid in the identification of the bodies here. Quite a number of children remain unidentified as yet. Public funeral of unidentified remains will, of course, be deferred as long as possible. It will have to be held without much greater delay, however. The work of identification is proceeding steadily but slowly. It appears to be exceedingly difficult for survivors to recognize even those nearest to them.

Three and a Half Miles from Shore.

FATHER POINT, June 1.—It was demonstrated by actual measurement this morning that the wreck was just seven miles from this point, and three and a half miles from shore. The Empress now lies on her side in twenty fathoms of water, with ten fathoms on top of her. Both she and the Storstad were in the usual course when the collision occurred.

Feeling Is Bitter.

QUEBEC, June 1.—Now that the first shock of the terrible Empress calamity is over here the bitterness of public feeling grows with every turn. There is a growing demand for the punishment of someone. Rage smouldern in the eyes of those who leave the charnel house door after seeing the innocents there in part revealed. Rumour here says that the body of Lawrence Irving has been found in the vicinity of Rimouski. It cannot be confirmed here.

THE WORK OF THE Y. M. C. A.

Peterborough's Churches, Schools, Hospitals, Library, Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., constitute a great force for progress and prosperity.

These institutions are not commercial, but are actually of commercial value to our city.

If these moral agencies were removed from our city every manufacturing concern would go out of business, for its employees would not live here.

As the Y.M.C.A. makes its annual appeal for funds we are reminded of the good work this institution is accomplishing in safe-guarding the morals of young men and boys.

Experts are employed to study and meet the needs of our young men, and are remarkably successful in their plans.

We are sure that our citizens will gladly give the $4,500 required in subscriptions to provide for the Association and its work for the current year.

LITTLE BOY IS KILLED

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

A terrible accident which happened last evening about half-past six o'clock, resulted in the death of little eighteen-months-old Freddie Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Allen, Cricket Place, East City.

It seems that Mrs. Allen sent her young son upstairs, intending to follow him a minute later. He went into a room in the front of the house and began to play at a window there. By some accident the little fellow pushed the screen through the window and, following it, fell head first to the door-step, below. As she was going upstairs his mother heard the child's scream and ran to his aid. The little fellow was rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where he died later in the evening. Dr. Gallivan attended the unfortunate child.

The funeral was held this afternoon at 4 o'clock to St. Peter's cemetery.

ST. JOHN'S AMBULANCE WILL MEET TO-NIGHT

The members of the City corps of St. John's Ambulance Association will meet in the Y.M.C.A. this evening to consider the presentation of certificates and to deal with other important matters. All the holders of first class certificates are asked to co-operate with the Association and to be present this evening.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER.

(Montreal Herald)

The tribute paid to Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Ottawa on the 40th anniversary of his entry into the Dominion Parliament, will be re-echoed, we are sure, by Liberals and Conservatives alike throughout the country. On occasions like this party feeling is put aside, and we remember only that the Liberal chieftain has spent the best of his energies and the largest portion of his life in the service of his country. A man of his splendid talents and capacity for leadership could have made a big fortune in private life, but all his gifts have been devoted to the service of his fellow men, and to-day he is practically as poor a man, as far as this world's good go, as on that fateful day, forty years ago, when he first entered the House of Commons as a member. We join heartily in the congratulations to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and to his devoted wife.

THE PRINCE AND CANADA.

(Montreal Herald)

Since the announcement of his appointment as Governor-General of Canada, Prince Alexander of Teck has been the principal speaker at every Anglo-Canadian gathering in London. He has made lengthy speeches dealing with the progress and development of Canada—speeches which, while they contribute nothing new to the discussion of these matters, show that the Prince is taking a most serious view of the duties and responsibilities which will shortly fall to him, and is preparing himself in painstaking manner for a full understanding of the problems with which he will be confronted. One note which runs through these speeches is the realization of the vastness of Canada and of appreciation of the Herculean labours which the great men of Canada are directing. As a young man of energy and ambition, he seems anxious to take part in the development of what is really a great new Empire. A country like Canada must inevitably appeal to men with good red blood in their veins. We are glad to note that although the Prince's blood is traditionally blue, every indication would show that it is in reality intensely red.

GETTING A START

By NATHANIEL C. FOWLER JR.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Your employer expects you to be on time, to be faithful to his interests, to work diligently, to be honest and respectable.

For these things you receive a supposedly adequate salary. If you continue to do them, you probably will be promoted in time, and may eventually reach a commanding position.

Rapid promotion, and the highest positions come only to those who do more than the prescribed duties, who not only do what they have to do, but voluntarily do what they don't have to do, who take an interest in their employer, and who feel their responsibility.

Recently I called upon a friend of mine, a very busy professional man. He had overworked himself, was nervous and unstrung. It was about noon, and I said, "John, come out and lunch with me." He acquiesced, put on his coat and started for the door. Suddenly he turned, threw his coat on his chair, and said "It's no use, my boy. I can't take time for lunch. I've too much to do."

I argued with him, and attempted to convince him that he needed lunch and to get out of his office for an hour or so. He persisted in remaining. His secretary, a bright young woman, very modestly said to him, "Excuse me, Mr. Smith, but I can attend to that matter while you are at lunch, and I will have it all worked out ready for you when you return.

Instantly my friend's face changed. We lunched together, and he went back to his office a different man.

That young woman understood her business. She gave to her employer that touch of sympathy which every decent man appreciates.

A friend of mine relates a recent experience. He was absent from the office one afternoon, and his stenographer had very little to do, as far as routine duties were concerned. Upon his return, she came to him and said, "Mr. Brown, not having anything to do this afternoon, I went over the letter files and I find that these letters"—handing him a bundle—"appear to be from persons of considerable importance, and yet not more than one letter has been written to any of them. It occurred to me that it might be well to write to some of them again."

My friend was surprised and pleased. Immediately he wrote to the persons in question, and these second letters resulted in much new business.

One of our leading business men contemplated the purchase of an automobile. The representative of a motorcar company called upon him and was closeted in his private office. He had practically decided to purchase. His secretary, who mistrusted what was going on, wrote the following on a sheet of paper, sealed it, addressed it to his employer, and requested the office boy to place it on his desk:

"Dear Mr. Jones: Pardon me, but I have three friends who have purchased Blank motorcars, and they tell me that they are not up to standard. These men are trying to swap their cars for other makes, as they have not given satisfaction."

His employer read the letter and excused himself. Later he bought a reliable automobile. The secretary did not go beyond his province, nor was he intrusive. He saved his employer money and annoyance.

Do what you have to do and you will make a living. Do what you don't have to do, and, if you don't reach the top, you won't be near the bottom.

YOUTH SERVING TWO YEARS FOR FATHER PAROLED

JEFFERSON CITY, JUNE 1—The parole by Governor Major of Leslie Cletus Lasswell, of Campbell, Mo., revealed how, last August, Lasswell chose a two-year sentence rather than tell his wealthy father of his misfortune and ask for $100 to pay his fine.

"Cleet," as his friends all over Dundalk County know him, was arrested in Cape Girardeau County on August 13, for carrying and flourishing a revolver when intoxicated. When arraigned, he pleaded guilty.

Judge Kelly learned the boy's identity and told him if he would write or wire his father for $100, the Court would assess a fine for that sum.

Young Lasswell said, "Your Honour, I have not written to my father and am not going to. He has seen enough trouble on my account and he shall never see any more if I can prevent it. I am ready to be sentenced to prison and I hope my relatives will not learn where I have gone."

The Court informed Lasswell his choice meant the maximum penalty of two years in the penitentiary, but the young man stood his ground and the Judge pronounced sentence.

Shortly after his conviction it became evident that powerful influences were at work to obtain his parole.

Lasswell was paroled to James A. Bradley, Clerk of Dunklin County.

PEACH CROP WILL BE EXCEEDINGLY SHORT--A FAILURE IN MANY PLACES

Peaches.—This crop will be exceedingly short—a failure in many districts. This is due to the fact that during the past two years peach crops have been above normal and to warm weather in December and early January bringing buds on prematurely.

Strawberries.— Outlook at present is for reasonably good crop. Rains past week helped and if during ripening season moisture is sufficient crop will be quite large. Prices expected to rule fairl high as canners are contracting heavily.

Pears.—Crop will be large if favourable weather continues. "Full yield" is opinion after completing our investigations.

Cherries (Red).—Bloom abundant and a good big crop is the present outlook. Black cherries are not promising.

Apples.—All indications point to a heavy yield. Trees have blossomed profusely. Light crop last year should mean good one this season.

Grapes.—Blue beetle attacks and ravages by the winter frosts seem to have gone hard with many of the grape plants.

Briefly summarized, there appears above the situation among the fruits of the Niagara Peninsula as the investigations of Canadian Grocer find them to-day. During the past week a couple of our own men have been on the ground. From their observation and from interview with a number of the prominent canners, the synopsis was prepared.

Beyond any doubt the fears that have been expressed of a poor peach crop, will be substantiated. Not one grower or canner in the Niagara Peninsula was met who had a good word to say of the outlook. "Practically a total failure," was a common expression used, and one grower and canner, usually optimistic, went so far as to say that the peach crop in that district, the most important of all was "an absolute and total failure—never was so great a failure since peaches were first grown here fifty years ago."

"I do not think there is much doubt as to peach crop failure," remarked another. "The trees have scarcely any bloom on them this year at all." He adds a spark of comfort when he further said:—"Of course, it may just be that it is a case of retarded growth and later on the trees may blossom out to a certain extent, but this appears to be doubtful."

In Southern Essex there will be some peaches, but orchards there are not numerous, and are small as compared with those of the Niagara district.

One man estimated that for the whole of Ontario, the peach crop will not be more than one-tenth of that of last year, and in the Niagara district not more than one-fiftieth.

"Practically no peaches this year—this is a positive fact," was the way another put it.

There are two reasons assigned for the peach failure. One is that the fine spring-like weather in December and early January started growth in the buds before the time and the frost that followed worked havoc among them. The other is that during the last couple of years that peach orchards have borne well and even had damage from frosts been light, the yield would have been much below a year ago.

Already wholesalers are advancing canned and preserved peaches, and retailers in many parts are considering doing the same. As in everything else supply and demand will rule the price.

STRAWBERRY PROSPECTS BRIGHT.

Strawberries, the earliest harvested crop of all, look good. It is practically certain the yield will be fair; but of coure a great deal depends on the weather. Should hot, dry weather prevail at ripening time the crop will be cut short as the berries will ripen prematurely. Nevertheless the plants wintered well and and look good at present.

Everything looks promising for apples, pears, plums, and red cherries. Apples particularly should yield well on account of the comparatively small crop a year ago, and the blossoms certainly indicate an optimistic outlook.

There should, too, be a fair crop of raspberries, but as with strawberries so much depends on the weather. Given favourable rains and warm weather a good yield is assured.

DAMAGE FROM INSECT AND FROST.

There is a fly in the ointment with respect to grapes. Some growers report that the blue beetle has been doing damage, and also that many plants have been winter killed.

To sum up from the outlook at present, good or fair yields may be looked for in the most important fruits with the exception of peaches.

Old People Had Outing

Friday afternoon the Automobile Association treated the inmates of the Protestant Home to a pleasant outing. At three o'clock ten cars left the Institution and drove through the City and out to Chemong Park. After a short time in the park they returned to the City and drew up before Hooper's, where ice cream was served to the entire party. They drove back to the Home about five o'clock and all expressed themselves as having thoroughly enjoyed the outing.

Those who had the pleasure of thus adding to the enjoyment of the aged by sending their autos were: Miss M. Robertson, Miss J. Hill, Miss Brightman, Mrs. Collier, Mrs. Barrie, Miss Eastwood, G. Walter Green, A. W. Greasman, A. P. McLean and S. J. Keyes.

Improvements To Club House Of Golf Club

The club-house of the Peterborough Golf Club presents a new appearance this season, as extensive improvements have been made. The verandah has been extended out about ten feet all around, which doubles its capacity, and making it delightfully cool even on the warmest day.

The ladies' locker room has been made more capacious, and better accommodation is thus given to them. A new coat of paint has been given to the club-house. More windows were added to the reception room, which has been completely done over, making it more attractive.

The club has the largest membership this year since its inception, and the officers are looking forward to a very successful season in golf and tennis.

Next Saturday afternoon the official opening will take place with a big feast to celebrate the event.

The Great Hereafter

The second series of the I.B.S.A. free Bible lectures closed here on Sunday afternoon, when Mr. J. H. Perrin gave a talk on 'The Great Hereafter,' to an interested audience. The speaker said our knowledge of the great hereafter must all be gathered from the Scriptures. He said, let men say as they pleased that death ended all probation; this could not be so else God's promise to Abraham in Gen., 12: 1-3, ad Gen., 13: 14, 15, that in Him all families of the earth were to be blessed, and that Abraham's seed was to receive the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession was a lie; and St. Paul said; let God be true, though it proved every man tures have shown that man is mortal on earth a liar, Romans, 3: 4.

Other speakers in this series of lec- according to the Scriptures, and that when he dies he sleeps till God's due time for calling him out of the grave; so Mr. Perrin dealt particularly with what happens when the awakening time comes. Then the saints who have been gathered through this Gospel age are joined to their Lord, and with joined with Him as invisible spirit beings reign on this earth for one thousand years, and in that time bring all the rest of mankind who are willing back to the condition of perfect human beings, also making their earthly home perfect and beautiful as the Garden of Eden. Mr. Perrin showed that the first work would have to be the binding of Satan so that he would have no chance to deceive the people during the 1000 years, Rev., 20: 1-3. He quoted many Scriptures to show that the promise made in the covenant with Abraham would yet be fulfilled on this earth. The angel at the birth of Jesus said he brought good tidings which should be to all people (Luke, 2: 10), and it will be in God's due time, for Jesus Christ came into the world to lighten every man in the world, and that meant just what it said. We have the promises, the speaker said that all nations shall come and worship before the Lord; that all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, (Rev. 15: 4., Num. 14: 21); that all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God, (Isa. 52: 10); that people shall build houses and inhabit them, and plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them (Isa. 65: 21; that there shall be no more war (Isa. 2: 4); and that by the end of the 1,000 years everything in heaven and in earth shall be gathered in full harmony with Christ (Eph. 1: 10.) He went on to show that the earth would never be destroyed, but would be made glorious (Ecclesiastes 1: 4; Isa., 65: 17; Isa., 35: 12. In earnest, emphatic language, Mr. Perrin set forth in a logical way from the Scriptures that, "No creature of the redeemed race will be too low for divine grace to reach, through the all-powerful and blessed agency of the Kingdom. No degradation of sin will be too deep for the hand of mercy to fathom, to rescue the blood-bought soul; no darkness of ignorance and superstition will be so dense in any heart but that the light of divine truth and love will penetrate its gloom and bring to it a knowledge of the joy and gladness of the new day, and an opportunity to share the same by obedience. No disease that can attack and pollute the physical system will be beyond the prompt control of the Great Physician. And no deformity, or monstrosity, or superfluity, or redundancy, or mental imbecility will be able to resist his healing touch." No man's free will will be coerced. If, after being awakened from the sleep of death, he does not choose to hear the Great Prophet, he will be destroyed from among the people; he will be as though he had not been (Acts., 3:22, 23; Psa., 37: 9-11). At the end of the thousand years there will be no curse of sin, sorrow, pain or death left on this earth (Rev., 22: 3; 21: 3-5), and mankind will then be ready to live forever as perfect, satisfied human beings in an earth fitted to their needs. What followed in the ages beyond was not revealed in the Bible, the speaker said, and was not for us to know now (Deut. 29. 29). The speaker made an earnest appeal to all to study God's Word and thus to know God, whom to know was to love, and whom to love was to serve.

A Splendid Address On Workmen's Compensation

Mr. Jos. Wearing, Assistant Crown Attorney, Explains New Act for Benefit of the Technical Society

AN ABLE EXPOSITION

Mr. Jos. Wearing, M.A., Assistant Crown Attorney, gave a most interesting address before the Peterborough Technical Society on Friday night on the workmen's Compensation Act.

Following is a synopsis of Mr. Wearing's address:

In order to appreciate the development in English law with respect to working men, and particularly those engaged in labour connected with our great industries, one must understand something of the change that has taken place in industrial conditions. In feudal times there were no industries such as we now have, and all working men were practically members of the household of some feudal lord whose interests were to a large extent common to the household. With the breaking up of the feudal system and the development of handicrafts, the interests of the employer and employee became more and more diverse, and with the growth of the great industrial concerns of the last century the interests of labour on the one hand and capital on the other became not only separate but to a large extent antagonistic.

According to the common law of England, which is also the common law of Canada, an employer was only bound to carry on his business so as not to expose his workmen to unreasonable risks. To make him liable there had to be some personal negligence on the part of the employer. And even this was subject to exceptions. Till 1846 there was no right of action if the workman died as a result of his injuries. Then, too, there was no right of action if the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, this rule being carried to such absurd length as to make an overseer of a mine the fellow servant of a miner and the master of a ship the fellow servant of an ordinary seaman. Another exception was when it was construed that the workman had taken the risks of employment voluntarily even though there was no express agreement to this effect. Finally the workman lost his right of action if it was shown that he had by his own negligence been responsible for the accident even though there was gross negligence on the part of the employer.

Lord Campbell's Act of 1846 abolished the rule that with death the right of action was lost. Different Factor- Acts made it necessary to safeguard the workman to some extent. Then in 1880 the Employers' Liability Act was passed, which modified the rule that the employer was not liable for the negligence of a fellow-servant and imposed the responsibility on employers in industrial concerns to provide competent overseers and trustworthy equipment. In 1897-1906, however, legislation was introduced, which contained a new and startling principle, one unknown to the common law and democratic in the extreme, this was that the industry should itself bear the costs of the results of injuries sustained in the course of business, and that an employer should be liable whether or not there had been any breach of duty on his part. This legislation was known as the Workmen's Compensation Act.

In Ontario we adopted the principles of Lord Campbell's Act and the Employers' Liability Act, and have now upon our statute books a Workmen's Compensation Act. The Germans were the first to adopt the principle of workmen's compensation, and our Ontario Act followed the German rather than the English model, though differing from both. Under the English Act employers are individually liable, while in Germany industries are grouped together and made liable together by a system of compulsory insurance. Our Act, while following the German system of grouping, except in the case of railways, telegraph and telephone companies and municipal corporations, goes further than either the English or German Acts in taking the matter entirely out of the hands of the courts and putting the control without appeal in the hands of a board.

The Act divides labour into three classes, and the principle of workmen's compensation applies only to the first class, which includes generally all those engaged in manufacture, construction, railways, navigation, etc. The second class includes workers generally (apart from those in the first), except domestic servants, etc., and those connected with husbandry; who are still subject to the common law; this second class is governed by Part. II. of the Act, which is practically the former Employers' Liability Act, but with the difference that workmen do not entirely lose the right to gain damages where there has been contributory negligence; the damages will simply be reduced.

The industries which are included in the first class are grouped together and are to be assessed in common with the object of having a general fund for the purposes of compensation. Any workman who is injured and unable to work for seven days will receive compensation unless the accident is entirely due to his misconduct, and where his death results, those dependent on him will receive compensation even though the accident has been due to his misconduct. The principle is laid down that the compensation is to be about 50 per cent. of what the workman was earning. Where he is only partly disabled the compensation will be reduced by what he can earn. In the case of death the widow and children or an invalid husband will receive like compensation, which will cease with the children at the age of 16, and a widow at marriage, when she will receive a lump sum equivalent to two years' compensation. Provision is also made for compensation where men contract certain trade diseases.

The main features of the Act are the compulsory insurance of the industries included, the modification of the doctrine of contributory negligence, the abolition of the rule of common employment, the principle of fixing compensation at about 55 per cent of a man's earnings, and the taking of the matter out of the hands of the courts. No doubt the Act will be in time enlarged to take in all forms of employment.

EDWARD P. GRAY, AN EMPRESS VICTIM ONCE WORKED HERE

Edward P. Gray, the young bandsman of the Territorial Staff Band, Toronto, who was among the many who sank with the Empress of Ireland, was formerly a resident of Peterborough. About seven or eight years ago he was employed at the Quaker Oats establishment, and there manifested his sketching abilities which later secured him a position on the "War Cry" as an illustrator. He graduated to the Toronto Star staff and proved himself one of the cleverest newspaper illustrators in America. During his residence in Peterborough he showed signs of the ability which was later recognized where the facilities for his work gave him the desired scope. He is remembered by members of the Examiner staff as a bright young Englishman, possessing exceptional sketching abilities. He submitted several samples of his work to the Examiner at that time. Several of his cabin companions state that Gray was awakened shortly after the collision, but the drowsiness of sleep was fast upon him and apparently he did not recognize the seriousness of the situation. His companions reached the deck, leaving the young artist as he was slowly dressing. He was possibly overtaken before he was dressed or he may have dropped off to sleep again.

TENNIS TEA A SUCCESS

LOCAL SALVATIONISTS GONE TO ENGLAND IN SPIRIT OF DUTY

Went on Board the Steamer at Montreal Not Jubilantly But Bravely, Realizing That They Are Expected at the Conference—Mrs. McElhiney Tells of the Stories of Survivors.

A large number of people gathered at the Salvation Army Temple last evening, to hear Mrs. (Adjutant) McElhiney relate some experiences of the awful disaster which overtook the C.P.R. steamship "Empress of Ireland" on Friday morning, at 1.45 a. m.

During her discourse she said: "There has been considerable comment about our lads taking the trip to England. Some said that when this terrible disaster revealed itself, they should not have gone, and others said they should not have gone at all. Some people who said they were wrong for going at all, belong to a set of jealous people. The Adjutant had received many encouraging letters regarding the trip—letters of kindly expression, written from the heart. Many of the senders contributed towards the expenses incurred. The best men of the City wanted the Band to go. The best men of the City appreciated their efforts."

Heard News on Train.

Referring to the disaster being made known to the men of the local corps, she said: "The boys were all in good spirits on the train and were happy and rejoicing. Nothing marred the journey at all. At a station near Montreal, an officer of the Salvation Army got on the train, and called the Adjutant out near the corridor, and when he came back into the car there was a very grave look on his face and we all knew that something was the matter.

After some time he told us of what had occurred, but of course there was nothing confirmed then. The news cast a terrible gloom over our band and when the opportunity presented itself we almost demanded of the C. P. R. that they should tell us something about the wreck.

Later, a telegram from one of our officers informed us of the numbers of our people among the survivors.

The day wore on with great anxiety and our General in England cabled three times, inquiring about our people. The statements in the papers were misleading, and it was not until half-past three o'clock in the afternoon that we could get a definite statement from the C. P. R. At the station we heard that some of our people were coming up on the train, and I broke through the barrier and went to greet them on the platform.

Cast Gloom Over Band.

"When the news came that the disaster was as bad as it has since proved to be, it cast a keen gloom over our boys, especially when it was known that our Bandmaster's mother was a passenger on the boat. He was terribly grieved over the calamity. The Adjutant said, "this is the time for us all to stand up and be brave. England is expecting us and it is for us to go, and assured his comrades that God would be their help, and that this was the time to show the religion of Jesus Christ." Our boys, one and all, showed a grim determination to go. They did not go on board jubilantly, but they went bravely and determined to do all they could for those that needed the most. They have not heard all about the terrible wreck and probably will not do so until they get to London.

We came back to Montreal and sat by the telephone all night and when the message came that our comrades were coming to Montreal on the train, destitute of clothing, I never shall forget the awful wondering look in their eyes as they told, over and over again one experience, and then another, and they told us that they had just begun to realize what had happened.

Some of the Experiences.

"The wife of Commissioner Rees, whom you know to be a great Salvationist, was persuaded to go for the trip, and though not very strong, remained on deck until nearly midnight. Some of the younger boys aboard were talking in their berths, and came up only to find that as they came out of their staterooms they were confronted with water. They readily grasped the situation and did all they could to help other unfortunate people. The boat listed so rapidly that when they tried to go and get life belts they slid back. There were those who did not know anything of the plan of the boat, and were rushing hither and thither and could not readily understand that terrible moment.

Went to Death Bravely.

Mrs. McElhiney then gave very graphic descriptions of how the survivors had been saved. She made especial mention of those beloved members of the S. A. Corps who had sacrificed their lives in order that someone else might be saved. There was that spirit of contentment existing among the men of the Salvation Army on that boat, and she heard it remarked that not one member of the Army on board the ill-fated liner had murmured, but went to their death bravely. Among them were a large number of staff officers from Canada and the wreck leaves the country with hardly an officer at all. One peculiar incident which might be related is the fact that on board the vessel Commissioner Rees called his officers together and had a meeting. The hymn, "God be With You Till we Meet Again" was sung. He asked them to repeat the last verse again and again. He also read Psalm 46, which is a remarkable coincidence.

Many manifestations of grief were made at last night's meeting, and Mrs. McElhiney, herself, had a hard task to keep up under the strain.

The meeting was closed with the hymn "God be With You Till we Meet Again" and the last verse was repeatedly sung.

WHAT CANADIAN NEWSPAPERS SAY

About Robinson's Famous Shows, Which Will Appear at Peterborough.

The following verbatim extracts from the Canadian press tell the real truth. It is unbiased testimony. Robinson's Famous Shows is a standard, high-grade exhibition. It employs only artists of real ability and reputation. It indulges in no bombast, exaggeration of false promises. Jealous rivals may knock, but these extracts show that you will make no mistake by choosing the Robinson's Famous Shows for your patronage.

The Chatham (Ont.) Daily News:

"The many visitors that braved the storm to attend Robinson's Famous Shows have good cause to be good natured, even if Mr. Probs. did his worst. The circus was a corker, the attractions all being far above the average. The feature acts were marvelous, and seldom if ever has a show been so well received in the Maple City."

The Daily Planet, Chatham:

"Robinson's Famous Shows pitched its tents on the Fair grounds, and was thronged with interested spectators. The attractions were all good, the Earl troupe being especially fine. Many other acts brought forth deafening applause. The courteous treatment accorded the patrons made them many friends in this city. It was a clean show, and was entirely free from the rough element often seen with other circuses."

Welland (Ont.) Telegraph:

"Robinson's Famous Shows gave two successful shows here yesterday to highly pleased audiences. Many of the acts were extraordinary, and the gentlemanly department of the show people was a pleasing feature."

Dunnville Ont.) Chronicle:

"Robinson's Famous Shows was here Wednesday and pleased the two very large audiences that attended. That it was a clean, high-class exhibition, and entirely free from objectionable features, was a matter of comment on all sides. They will be sure of generous patronage upon any future visit to this district."

Note—Every paper in Canadian towns where this show has visited speaks in similar terms. No show that ever visited the Dominion has met with greater approval.

Remember the date, at Peterborough, Wednesday, June 10. Afternoon and night.

CHRISTIAN PEOPLE OF THIS COUNTRY MUST MAKE CHOICE

Whether or Not They Are Going to Support a Certain Party in Power at the Price of Allowing the Curse of the Liquor Traffic to Continue to Blight and Destroy the Best in the Community, So Says the Rev. R. G. Peever in Powerful Sermon.

"It is up to the Christian people of this country whether we are going to allow this menace to blight and to destroy, to support a certain party in power," said the Rev. R. G. Peever, in the George Street Methodist church yesterday morning, during the course of a sermon in which he discussed the Ontario temperance situation and the attitude of the political parties to the temperance question. "Thank God," he further remarked, "that the temperance question is in politics; and it is going to stay in politics until the bar-rooms of this province will be seen no more."

The discourse by Mr. Peever was a powerful one that struck deep into the minds of his listeners, and it was with the utmost earnestness and feeling that he urged upon all to dedicate themselves to the services of their country on election day, this month, and not for the triumph of any particular political party.

The text of the sermon was taken from the 1st Book of Samuel, 17th Chapter and 29th verse, which reads as follows: "And David said, what have I done now? Is there not a cause?"

In the portrait of David and Goliath facing each other on the battlefield there was a true picture of the attitude of the righteous to the great curse of drink. Before entering into the discussion of the subject in hand the speaker explained that in voting he followed the dictates of his mind. In the past, when he had made up his mind that a certain commercial or moral issue was worthy he voted accordingly, and in so doing had voted against both political parties.

The goal of the organized temperance forces in Canada was the total prohibition of liquor as a beverage—its sale and manufacture. Its advance toward the goal had been gradual because they had had to wait for the ripening of the Christian sentiment in the Church, the ripening of public opinion, the pronouncement of science and the judgment of the commercial world. But at last the liquor traffic stood universally condemned. Two facts would have to be admitted by all his listeners, no matter how skeptical they might be. The first was the wonderful ripening of public opinion in the last ten years. The second was the universal condemnation of the liquor traffic. "Who is there to-day who speaks up for the liquor traffic?" he asked. What leaders, what Churches, what trade unions and what political parties spoke up for the liquor traffic? And why was it that the present Provincial Government had tried to strenuously to defeat the charge against them that they were allied with the liquor traffic? It was, indeed, universally condemned.

"And, in my opinion, the Government has failed desperately to satisfactorily answer the charge against them," added Mr. Peever. "I need not refer," he continued, "to the awful record of poverty and crime of the liquor traffic in our land, the trail of hardship and of economic waste. If they would settle the curse of drink they would settle the almost every great qustion that was disturbing the minds of the Canadian people. Almost ninety per cent. of the neglected children were in that condition because their fathers drank. There was a great issue to-day before the Parliament of Ontario. Thank God the temperance issue was in politics to-day. It was in politics and was in politics to stay until the bar-rooms of the Province would be seen no more.

At the meeting of the County Temperance Association a good example had been set by men of principle, who had determined to be governed by the moral issue involved. Level-headed men of senior years and judgment announced that after supporting their party for twenty or thirty or forty years they were going to fight them at the approaching election.

"At first, political parties ignored the temperance question. Then they delayed it. The speaker recounted the various discouraging experiences that their temperance forces had encountered. [illegible] temperance question into Dominion and Provincial politics. Several times, having proved its right to be recognized, the governments had failed to act. But the issue had come. The opportunity was being afforded, by the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Rowell, a leader able and sincere beyond question.

"If the Whitney Government today is not in league with the liquor interests, the liquor interests are in league with the Whitney Government, through the three-fifths' clause. The three-fifths' clause was not needed for the stability of the temperance vote. In Quebec there were more municipalities having local option regime on the straight majority basis than in Ontario, and it had not been repealed in one case. If the bar was abolished the treating system would be abolished. The Government which was just now going to the country had not kept pace with the advancing temperance sentiment of the people. The electorate of this country should speak as independent Christian people on a moral issue.

"Ontario must choose between the bar and the boy. We must either believe what is morally wrong can be politically right or that what is morally wrong is also politically wrong. I hold no brief from the Conservative party or from the Liberal party. I hold a brief from the Almighty God to strive for the protection of the boy, against the retention of the bars and the safeguarding of the young life of our Province."

LOCAL BAND ONLY CANADIAN ONE

To Be Present at International Congress, Owing to Dreadful Disaster

The following letter has been received from the correspondent of the local Salvation Army Band, written aboard ship:

St. Lawrence River,
S. S. Atunia," Sat. May 30.

The Temple Band arrived in Montreal on Friday morning at 7.30. They were taken over the city and at noon gave a concert on Victoria Square, which was appreciated by all.

At night, owing to the dreadful disaster of the sinking of the 'Empress of Ireland,' the programme arranged to be given was altered to a memorial festival.

Col. Gaskin, the Field Secretary of the Salvation Army in Canada, presided over this. After the programme he gave the final farewell words to the band. Other officers were on the platform. Adjt. McElhiney replied to the words of Col. Gaskin.

The Montreal band entertained the Temple Band in the best possible way. They were tendered a banquet, and after the concert played and massed bands with the Temple Band to the wharf. Thousands lined the streets, cheering and weeping, and followed the band to the wharf where the final "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" was played.

As the Canadian Staff Band, all but 2 or 3, perished in the terrible disaster on the 'Empress of Ireland, Peterborough Temple Band will be the sole band to represent Canada at the I. C. C.

This disaster has been a great blow to the Temple Band, as Bandmaster Peryer's mother was among those who perished in the disaster. But the band is determined to rally around him and make everything a success. We are sure the citizens will sympathise with Bandmaster Peryer and Bandsman Sandiford.

While writing this despatch, the "Atunia," on which the Temple Band is travelling to England, passed the "Storstadt," the collier which rammed the "Empress of Ireland." Her bow was smashed up pretty badly.

A Post Card Received From W. H. Perry Who Was Lost in the Disaster

Written on the ill-fated "Empress of Ireland" just a few hours before she went to the bottom, a post card arrived at the Examiner office this morning for Mr. Walter Petera. This car was from Mr. W. H. Perry, formerly of The Examiner, who perished in the disaster shortly after writing the communication, which read as fololws:

The message is as as one from the grave.

MANY TOPICS FOR MERCHANTS MONDAY NIGHT

A general meeting of all the Retail Merchants of the City is called for tonight at the Y.M.C.A. at 8.15.

There are a number of very important matters to be dealt with, and, most likely there will be a deputation appointed to wait on the City Council.

The report of the Market Committee which was appointed at the last meeting to investigate the market conditions and restrictions will be dealt with. This committee, with Mr. T. C. Elliott as chairman, has gone into the local market conditions very fully, and will have some important suggestions to offer, which, it is believed, will very much improve our present market if acted upon.

The secretary will report on the work that has been accomplished since tel ast meeting.

The appointment of a permanent district secretary will be discussed, and the report from the Provincial Board on this matter will be dealt with.

Further matters in connection with the annual picnic are also on the slate.

Mr. Thos. Barrie, the president, and the other executive officers desire to see a strong representation of all the merchants at this meeting tonight.

IMPRESSIVE SHOWING

The employees of the De Laval Dairy Supply Company had each been provided with a rug and when the Royal party appeared at the head of the auto procession, they waved the flags from the windows of the factory and office in honour of the Governor-General and those with him. There are about two hundred employed in the factory and the flags made an impressive showing.

LAURENCE IRVING WAS SEEN HERE DURING WINTER

Laurence Irving and his wife, Mabel Hackney, who are among the missing of the Empress of Ireland's first cabin list, appeared at the Grand Opera House here during the past season in the 'Typhoon' and 'The Unwritten Law.' They were here two night on their all-Canadian tour. With them on the return passage were Mr. and Mrs. Harold Nevill and Miss Hilda Hagerton, also of the company.

Touches of Pathos.

TORONTO, June 1.—Touches of pathos were added to the Empress tragedy to-day when in dozens of bereaved homes in Toronto and other parts of Ontario, there arrived letters and pictures postcards from loved ones who have now gone to the bottom of the sea. This mail was taken off at Rimouski just a few minutes before the crash came. One treasured mementa here is a post card from Teddy Gray, artist, whose sketches have been published in many Ontario papers. It is a unique postcard with the signatures of commissioner Rees, Colonel Maidment and all the prominent Salvationists on the ship, the last signatures they penned.

Irving's Body Found.

QUEBEC CITY, June 1.—It is confirmed this afternoon that the body of Lawrence Irving, distinguished actor, has been found on the shore, near Rimouski. In his clenched hand is part of a woman's night dress, indicating that he died in an ineffectual attempt to save his wife.

THE DUKE A FATHER TO THE BOY SCOUTS

Paid Them Particular Attention and Warmly Congratulated Them Upon Their Appearance

The Boy Scouts received particular attention this morning from the Duke of Connaught. The crowd tried to edge toward the stand through a forest of hat trimmings which threatened to ruin the sight of many a mere man and were growing restless, while His Highness chatted with the hundred youthful Scouts. One Scout, Johnny Young, was asked if he had done his good turn to-day; (every Scout is expected to do a good deed every day, more than one, if possible, and his neckerchief remains knotted until the act has been performed). Rev. H. J. Sawers, Acting District Commissioner of the Scouts, and Master of Patrol No. 4, pointed out that Johnny's knot was still tied. His Highness encouraged the boys and complimented them upon their trim appearance. He asked them about their treck waggon and was right at home with the youngsters. When he was leaving them the boys gave three cheers and the Governor-General turned toward them lifting his grey topper while the boyish cheers displayed an intimate and paternal affection which must have deeply impressed them.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, June 1.—Important developments are eminent, and our advices indicate that they may be highly favourable. At this writing there is an underlying trend of optimism in affairs of stock market magnitude. We refer to the better rate decision prospects since the tap line verdict favouring industrials and railroads, to the Mexican advices, to signs of early adjournment of Congress, to gradual improvement in connection with the foreign monetary strain and to steady progress made by the crops. Way nothing of the increasing earnings as reported in April railroads statement and the cheapness of money.

All these factors justify the maintenance of the conservative bull position.

Atch., B.R.T., S.P., St.P., K.S.U., Erie, are reported to be very well bought.

Union Pacific may be made a market leader next week, it sells ex-dividend Monday.

Reading shows signs of accumulation.

Among specialties we find T.C., R.C., I.C.E., C.I., A.C.O., bulled by pools.

BRITISH MAILS.

A Wide Experience.

The business of the Duke of Connaught has been soldiering. He knows all about guns, uniforms, ammunition, ordnance and commissary stores, and had made a specialty of inspection. The knowledge of detail possessed by the Duke has won for him his peculiar distinction as the greatest martinet in the service, his task for years past being to make sure that the standard of efficiency laid down by the army council is kept up.

The Duke is a dreader of publicity, while it is said that his extreme sensitiveness of any form of criticism is also held responsible for the excessive reticence, not to say secrecy, of his nature. The Paris "Figaro" ascribes the reserve for which the Duke of Connaught is indebted for the mystery involving his personality to an inveterate shyness.

An Early Riser.

Everything which the Duke does and everything of which he approves to be done conforms to the ideals of strictness sobriety and simplicity. One of his fads is rising early, while another is well-polished boots, having a great dislike to slovenliness in personal attire.

Since coming to Canada as Governor-General in 1911 he has won the heart of the Canadian people by his simplicity and personality. In 1912, accompanied by the Duchess and Princess Patricia three days were spent in New York the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, it being the first time that a princess of the blood royal ever visited America.

Clergy Speak Of The Catastrophe

Reference Made to Terrible Disaster in City Pulpits Yesterday

In most of the City Churches, yesterday, reference was made to the sad catastrophe of Friday last, the sinking of the "Empress of Ireland" and the great loss of life entailed. The clergy spoke of the lessons to be learned from such a disaster. The music was especially appropriate to the occasion. "Crossing the Bar," and other suitable numbers were given by the various choirs.

Huge Crowds Welcome Vice-Regal Party

balconies of the factories and residences near the station a large number of people looked out upon the scene.

The guard of honour, one hundred strong, was drawn up in imposing array to the rear of the Station. The greater part of the platform to the north of the station was marked off by ropes and a squad of police had a busy time keeping the eager members of the crowd from going under these into the reserved territory. A carpet had been laid from where the Duke and party would leave the train, to the waiting automobile. A space on each side of the carpet was kept free by another contingent of police, and the platforms were closely packed at every available quarter. Military uniforms, bright dresses and parasols added colour to the scene, while the crowd waited with every sign of impatience for the arrival of the Royal train.

Precisely at 10 o'clock the train came in sight of those waiting at the station, and the crowd stood in absolute silence while their Royal Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Prince Patricia and others of the Vice-Regal party left the train and moved forward to meet the representatives of the City who were waiting on the platform as the train pulled in. Mayor and Mrs. Buller, Col. and Mrs. E. B. Clegg, and Ald. and Mrs. A. H. Stratton were presented to the members of the party at the station. The whole party then moved through to the rear of the Station, where the Guard of Honour was inspected by the Governor-General.

As the Duke made his appearance at the rear of the station a cheer went up, to which His Royal Highness responded to, by raising his hat.

The Guard of Honour made a very creditable showing, which satisfied the most critical citizens, the great body of whom they were representing, before the Governor-General. After inspecting them the Duke and Duchess, with two other members of the Royal party, and Mayor Buller entered the waiting motor, which drew slowly away from the station, and took the leading place in the automobile procession which then formed up. The crowd cheered again as the Governor-General left the station. Loyalty and patriotism was evidenced in a gratifying degree by the great crowd that were present to see the Governor-General and party on their arrival.

At Central Park.

Dense crowds surrounded the platform at Central Park as the automobile procession, headed by the car in which were [illegible] Duke of Connaught, drew up on Murray Street, and the occupants of the cars, including every member of the Royal party, walked to the platform. Before it had been drawn up in an enclosed space all the school children of the City, as well as the Normal students. Each of these carried a small Union Jack, and the showing they made was an impressive one. On the north of the platform were drawn up the veterans, the P. C. I. Cadets, under command of Mr. C. E. Jamison, and the Boy Scouts, under command of Acting District Commissioner, the Rev. F. J. Sawers. Of the latter there were about one hundred, and the Duke took particular interest in the array of Scouts. He also inspected the veterans and the Collegiate Cadets, and seemed to be pleased at the splendid appearance and efficiency of all. He chatted with some of the Scouts, asking them different questions in regard to their aim and organization, all of which were answered intelligently by the Scouts which seemed to please the Governor-General.

Immediately after the arrival of the Royal party at the park Mayor Buller read the address to the Duke on behalf of the people of Peterborough. The address was beautifully gotten up, being bound in genuine morocco, and will be a fitting momento of the Duke's visit to Peterborough. In reply to the address His Royal Higness spoke as follows:

"Mr. Mayor, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I must thank you in all sincerity for the loyal and kindly address which has just been read. Your feeling allusions to the members of my family touched me extremely, and the fact that my brother visited your city, when he was Prince of Wales, and that this circumstance is so well remembered, lends an additional personal interest to my visit.

During this spring I have travelled over a great deal of Ontario, and it is no exaggeration to say that I have been exceptionally struck by what I have seen. Your Province has been exceptionally favoured by Nature, and her resources have been energetically and capably developed by man. The result is, so far as I have been able to judge, that the people of Ontario are a happy, prosperous and energetic race, with a great future before them. More than that, they are imbued with a devotion to British institutions and with a pride in our Empire that is a source of profound satisfaction to me.

From what I have seen to-day and from your words, Mr. Mayor, I have no doubt that these splendid traditions and ideals will be ever present among the citizens of Peterborough.

Ladies and gentlemen, in thanking you for your welcome, I wish to do so on behalf of the Duchess of Connaught and of my daughter, as well as of myself. We are all genuinely glad to be amongst you to-day, and are much looking forward to seeing all that we can of your beautiful city.

After the reply to the address the invited guests, whose names were given in Saturday's Examiner, were presented to the Governor-General. During the ceremony the school children sang with life and expression "God Save the King" and "O Canada." Miss Ranney, musical instructress of the schools, conducted the singing, and under her guidance the children sang splendidly. In spite of their large number they kept perfect time and the City should be proud of the manner in which the children sang before the highest authority in the land. Their singing showed the result of careful training for the occasion and credit must be given to the teachers, who, under [illegible] Ranney, gave their pupils to sing the two patriotic songs mentioned above.

It was a wise provision that the space to be occupied by the children from the schools should be roped off, for otherwise it would have been an impossible task to regulate the throng that gathered in the park to do honour to the Royal party. Gathered densely around the platform on all sides, and completely surrounding it, the mass of humanity extended out into the Park and south to the steps on Murray Street Church. Hundreds of people outside the range of the voices on the platform remained in the sweltering sun to get a glimpse of the Duke and Duchess and Princess Patricia. The steps of the Murray Street Church were fully occupied and a number of people secured station in the Armouries from where they could look out upon the activities.

After the reception the Vice-Regal party inspected the Armouries. It was while going through the Armouries that Col. Farquhar recognized P. C. Downs of this City, (who was on duty with the rest of the constables) as a former member of the Coldstream Guards, of which Col. Farquhar is the head. He greeted P. C. Downs and presented him to the Duke of Connaught. The party left the Armouries by the officers' entrance and entered the motor cars once more for a further drive around the City.

The following were the occupants of the cars that followed:

Mr. Irwin's car—H. R. H. Princess Patricia, Hon. Katherine Villiers, Col. Villiers, Col. Farquhar, Ald. Stratton and Aide-de-Camp.

Mr. Cressman's car—Miss Yorke, Sir Edward Worthington, Mr. Sladen, Mrs. Buller, Mrs. Stratton.

Mr. McBain's car — Hon. Sam. Hughes, J. H. Burnham, M.P., Col. Clegg and Mrs. Clegg.

Mr. Kelly's car—J. A. Sexsmith, M. P., Reeve of Lindsay, E. A. Peck, M. P.P., and I. Thompson, M.P.

Mr. Stinson's car— Major Walker, Mrs. Walker, Ald. Johnston and Mrs. Johnston.

Mr. Johnston's car—Col. Young and Mrs. Young, Ald. Duncan and Mrs. Duncan.

Ald. Green's car—Ald. Green and Mrs. Green, Mr. B. D. Hall and Mrs. Hall.

Mr. Ackerman's car—Ald. Anderson and Mrs. Anderson, Ald. McIntyre and Mrs. McIntyre.

Mr. Pappas' car — Mr. Fitzgerald, Mrs. Fitzgerald, Ald. Langford and Miss Langford.

Mr. Comstock's car —Ald. Dobbin and Mrs. Dobbin, Mr. Armstrong and Mrs. Armstrong.

Mr. Coulthard's car—Ald. Saunders and Mrs. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. Mowatt.

Ald. Duffus' car—Mechanics.

Mr. Edwards' car—"Spare."

Mr. Campbell's car—Some minutes ahead with Chief Constables' assistant.

Miss Hazel Buller, Mrs. Harold Burns, daughters of Mayor Buller, Miss Johnston, daughter of Ald. Johnston, Ald. Langford and Miss Langford occupied a car which was not previously mentioned.

The following route was then traversed. This, as laid out by Ald. Duffus, chairman of the Routes and Vehicles committee, assisted by City Engineer Parsons, was one which enabled the Royal party to see to advantage, not only a large portion of the City, but many of the industrial and manufacturing concerns. These included the Canoe Co., the De Laval plant, the Canadian General Electric plant, the Imperial Weaving Co. plant and others. All along the route the houses were gaily decorated, and citizens lined the streets in order to obtain a glimpse of the Royal visitors. None were favoured in this respect, on account of so large a part of the City being taken in. Their Royal Highnesses were particularly interested in the Little Lake, which they said was a beautiful sheet of water. The remainder of the trip was uneventful except for the patriotic way in which their Royal Highnesses were received in all parts of the town. As the procession came into the centre of the City, the crowds became more dense, and, on the arrival of the Royal party at Central Park, they were greeted with a rousing ovation. The following was the route taken on the first drive:

From the C. P. R. Station along George Street to Perry Street, Perry Street to Lock Street, Lock Street to Romaine Street to Aylmer Sreet, Aylmer Street to Lansdowne Street, Lansdowne Street to Park Street, Park Street to Townsend Street, Townsend Street to Rubidge Street, Rubidge Street, to Hunter, Hunter to Park, Park Street to Gilmour Street, Gilmour Street to Monaghan Road, Monaghan Road to Weller, Weller Street to Belmont Avenue, Belmont Avenue to Hunter, Hunter to Park, Park Street to Brock Street, Brock Street to Rubidge Street, Rubidge Street to Hunter Street, Hunter to George Street, and George Street to the Central Park.

After leaving the Park their Royal Highnesses again entered their automobiles and drove over the following selected route: George Street to Argyle Street, Argyle Street to Water Street, Water Street to Inverlea Street, Inverlea Street to Dennistoun Avenue, Dennistoun Avenue to Smith Street, Smith Street to East Nicholls Park, and through the park to Concession Street, Concession Street to Roger Street, along Roger to No. six lock.

At No. 6 lock the Government steamer, "Bessie Butler," was in waiting and took the Royal party aboard. A short sail brought them to the lock, and the "Bessie B" was steered into the west chamber. The air tight doors were closed and the ascent made. This was, beyond all doubt, the feature of the day, and their Royal Highnesses were highly delighted, besides being intensely interested.

When the steamer left the chamber at the top it was found that there was no time to spare and, accordingly, a short stroll was made up the canal.

The automobiles were waiting at the top of the lock for the party on their return. Resort was again made to the automobiles and taking the following route, the Royal visitors arrived at the Grand Trunk depot: From the Lift-Lock along the Canal to Maria Street, Maria Street to Burnham Street to Hunter Street, Hunter Street to Water Street, Water Street to Brock Street, Brock Street to George Street, George Street to Simcoe Street, Simcoe Street to Stewart Street, Stewart Street to King Street to the Grand Trunk Railway Station.

There the Governor-General's train was in readiness, and, amongst an effusion of cheers and applause, their Royal Highnesses went on board.

As the train steamed out of the depot, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught stood at the end of the car and bowed as respects were offered them as they departed.

CRICKET

A very interesting and exciting finish to a cricket match played at Nicholls Oval on Saturday last, May 30th, between Trinity College School, Port Hope and Peterborough C. C. T. C. S. fielding was good. At end of 1st innings P. C. C. went to bat and scoring 51 for four wickets in 2nd innings. When Capt. Whitehouse decided to declare, leaving T.C.S. 80 minutes to score 28 runs to win before call of time, which they did by only 4 wickets down, thus winning the game by one run and 6 wickets to spare.

For T.C.S. the bowling of Saunders and the batting of Moore were par excellent.

LACROSSE EXECUTIVE MEETING TO-NIGHT

A meeting of the executive of the Lacrosse Club is called for this evening at the Examiner Office at 8.30 o'clock. Several important matters will be taken up and all the members are requested to be present.

Those who felt the pinch last winter should remember that foresight should be exercised in the summer, when the money is coming in.

IT TAKES MORE than a piece of chalk and a tape line to produce originality in clothes.

THAT'S WHY SOME makers find their styles such a hit-and-miss proposition. True style must be genuine throughout, not a mere echo of someelse's genius.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

A SIX RUN LEAD WAS NOT BIG ENOUGH TO ENABLE PETES TO LAND THE VICTORY

Although They Hammered Ramsmond Out of the Box in the First Innings the Petes Were Eventually Beaten Out by 12 to 8.

A SORRY SHOWING

LONDON, May 30.—London proved that they could win a game from Peterborough notwithstanding the fact that the visitors piled up a six run lead in the first inning by hammering Tracey out of the box in the second, tieing up the score. The contest started all over again and Heck opposed Schettler on the mound. While the locals were outhit, they made their singles count in run-getting. London completed its third clean sweep of the series, making this eight games out of the nine played with the Blountmen.

BASEBALL CHATTER

London Advertiser: Curly Blount is making a big effort to strengthen his club and he has been burning up the wires in an effort to get players. He claims that it is like pulling teeth to get any players from the international or big league clubs. Blount has been in communication with Barney Dreyfuss, of the Pittsburg club; Bill Donovan, of the Providence Grays; Jack Dunn, of Baltimore, and other class league managers and owners, but none of them have been able to send him a player. The whole trouble is due to the Federal League. In other years, at this time, players could be had for the asking, but this season, owing to the activity of the big outlaw organization, ball clubs are hanging on to all their recruits.

Not as Good Ball This Year.

The smaller leagues are really feeling the Federals' attack more than the bigger leagues on this account. The class of ball played in Class B and Class C leagues this year is not as good as it was last year, merely because the smaller leagues cannot get the same kind of players. This is shown in the Canadian League by the fact that the strongest-looking clubs, at present, and the clubs who are playing the best ball, are the clubs who retained many of last year's players on the line-up. Brantford is the only exception, but Deneau was fortunate in signing many of his men long before the Federal League began its war in real earnest. London, Ottawa and Erie are mostly composed of players who were in the league last season. The new men signed up this season are, as a rule, not as good as the players retained. Conditions may improve as the season wears, but there is no present indication of any improvement.

THE MERCANTILE LEAGUE OPENED ON SATURDAY

The Mercantile League was successfully opened on Saturday with a double header at the Exhibition grounds, the Red Caps winning the first 19 to 6 from last year's champion Draughting Room, and the De Laval team breezing home a 9-0 winner over the Wm. Hamilton aggregation.

The opening was attended with big League trimmings. Prior to the games the players paraded George Street, headed by the Maple Leaf band, and the League officials in automobiles, to the grounds; his Worship, Mayor Buller, after a brief speech, hurled the first ball. Mr. W. R. Breyfogle of the De Laval Company, was at the bat, with Mr. Joy of the Canadian General Electric Company, behind the bat. Mayor Buller did not show his Canadian League form having difficulty in getting the ball over the pan.

Easy For Red Caps.

The first game was an easy victory for the Red Caps, who hammered Kirn for seventeen hits and piled up nineteen runs. Both teams showed lack of practice, the fielding on both sides being very loose. In addition, the high wind made it hard to judge flies or to throw accurately, and the result was a weird exhibition in the field.

Rahmel pitched for the winners, and outside of two innings had the last year's champs under control. He fanned nine, and with good support would have cut the run getting down lower than it was. Kirn of last year's Quakers, was on the firing line for the losers. He went along in good form in the early stages, but weakened and was hit hard.

The Red Caps started scoring in the first when, with two out and the bases full, O'Heron drove a long double to left, clearing the sacks. The R. R's went ahead in the third when errors by Swanston, Primeau and Kendry, and singles by Cranfield, Barrie, Staunton and Kirn gave them four runs.

The Red Caps evened up in their half and put the game on ice in the fourth by scoring a quartette of runs. With one out, Primeau and Swanston singled, Guerin doubled, Kendry and Conners got on on muffs by Cranfield and Walker, and O'Heron singled, four counters going across. From then on it was a procession, the winners adding two in the fifth, one in the sixth and four in both the seventh and eighth.

The Draughters got two over in the seventh on Cranfield's single, a pass to Barrie and Staunton's double.

Good fielding by Kendry, and the hitting of Guerin and O'Heron featured. Guerin had two doubles and two singles and O'Heron two doubles and one and one sacker.

The score:

The De Laval team won the second game, which was cut to five innings, in hollow style, because the Wm. Hamilton team were at the mercy of Pitcher Jack Mahoney, who fanned thirteen of them. In three of the five innings the side was retired on strikes and only three of the winners had a fielding chance. Only eighteen men faced Mahoney in the five innings and he mowed them down as fast as they came up. He had nice speed and curves and the Foundrymen had the air beaten black and blue before the game was over.

Gus Rose was on the rubber for the losers and twirled a mighty nice game at ball. His support was, however, as full of holes as a Dutch cheese, no less than ten errors being chalked up against the losers. With some assistance from his team mates Rose would have made the game an interesting exhibition. He only allowed five hits.

The Separators scored four in the second on four errors, a passed ball, a wild pitch and English's double. In the fourth they added five. Two singles, three errors, two passes and a scarifice bunt doing the trick.

The losers never looked like scoring. The only chance was in the third, when Murty opened with a single, but the next three were easy.

Dad Stewart Signed By Petes

Dad Stewart, 1912 Manager of St. Thomas and last year with London, has been signed by Manager Blount of the Petes and played right field in Saturday's game. Stewart is a good batter and is especially strong in a pinch. Last year he compiled a .288 average in 103 games, his hits including 19 doubles, 5 triples and a homer. Stewart's only weakness last year was in throwing, the outfielder possessing a "cranky" arm last season. It is said to be in better shape this year. He should improve the offensive strength of the Petes.

MERCANTILE LEAGUE.

Peterborough, June 1st, 1914.

Editor Examiner,— The President and Executive of the Mercantile League are to be congratulated on the success which crowned their efforts to make the opening of the series as auspicious as circumstances would allow. Everything went off splendidly.

Mayor Buller, Mr. Breyfogle of the De Laval and Mr. R. Dobie of the C.G.E. are well deserving of the thanks of the league for consenting to be present to open the game, as is also Mr. Munro of the P. R. R. for his generosity in placing two street cars at the disposal of the players and the band which accompanied them on the joyful journey down to the Exhibition grounds.

The kindness of Bandmaster Armitage and his band in tendering their services free will also be appreciated and should procure for the Maple Leaf musicians a generous patronage in the way of engagements for moonlight excursions, etc., during the coming season. The music they render is of a first-class order and anyone engaging them will certainly not be disappointed.

To the employees of the bandsmen the thanks of the league are also due for their kindness in permitting them to be absent from their work during Saturday afternoon.

If some other members of the community had been as public-spirited as the foregoing, the games could have been played on Riverside Park. The amount demanded, however, for the lease of the ground, was prohibitive, as the financial support given to the Mercantile League—through subscription and gate money—though generous, is not sufficient to meet the extravagant price asked for the use of Riverside.

One one would think that amateur baseball would receive the support of all who take any interest in sport, but this does not appear to be the case, owners of Riverside.

AN INTERESTING NEW BUILDING MATERIAL

Mr. Morgan, of the Morgan Hardware Co., of Peterborough, reports that a great deal of interest is being shown in Beaver Board, the material now being used instead of lath and plaster for walls and ceilings.

The Morgan Hardware Co. advise that Beaver Board comes in large panels that are nailed right to the studding in new buildings or over the old walls for remodelling. The contractor, carpenter, and house builder find that this method saves time, work and expense. Beaver Board is used in winter as well as in summer.

This material is made by reducing logs to fibrous form and then pressing the fibre into panels that are clean and firm and of many sizes for all average uses.

It is said that Beaver Board makes rooms warm in winter and cool in summer and that it retards sound. It also eliminates the dirt, litter and delay of other methods.

The Morgan Hardware Co. will gladly show this material to all who call.

COLOURS THAT MAKE WOMEN LOOK YOUNG

It is a natural and laudable ambition for a woman to wish to preserve her youth as long as possible. Now, she cannot do this by dressing unsuitably, using make-up or behaving in a kittenish manner, or even by telling untruths about her age. She only makes herself ridiculous and people mentally put her down as five or six years older than she really is, which, after all her efforts, is rather a tragedy; but unfortunately she does not know this. If she deceives no one but herself she does the last very thoroughly.

Among all the schemes for putting back the clock of time there is none more successful than that of knowing exactly the right colours to wear next the face. Why will a certain thin type of woman with sandy hair and complexion, inclined to be sallow, insist on dressing herself in either yellowish tan that makes her look all one colour from head to foot, or else in gray unrelieved by white, which robs her complexion of every particle of colour and makes her look ancient even if she is but twenty-five.

Now if this same woman had remembered that gray was what is called a cold colour and needed vivid tints of hair or complexion to make it becoming, she would never have ventured to wear it unrelieved by white or soft pink.

If with her gray tailor suit she had worn a white shirt waist with one of the new muslin collars and a hat with a touch of colour, she ould have looked like a different woman.

But even in choosing pink or red care must be taken. It is the soft, rather dull pink of the rose shade and not the "salmon pink" that gives a touch of colour to a pale face and apparently takes off five or six years. And so with red; do not get too vivid a scarlet, but rather a rich, warm red.

The woman inclined to be stout will look younger if she will select dark colours for her gowns, but have the trimmings near her face, such as small yokes and narrow vests, of a soft shade of some colour that she knows to be becoming. If in her younger days baby-blue was her colour, let her choose now one of the pastel shades. White and cream shades near the face are becoming to almost every one.

If whites of eggs are not perfectly cold, or if they are too fresh, they will not beat very stiff. Cream will not whip well unless at least 36 hours old and very cold.

Another Step In City's Taking Over The Hydro-Electric

WORTH KNOWING.

A good chicken is known by soft feet, smooth skin and soft cartilage at the end of the breastbone. An abundance of pinfeathers always indicates a young bird, while the presence of long hairs denotes age.

Spinach is good served with hard-boiled egg. The white of the egg is chopped fine and spread over the spinach, and the yolk is forced through a fine sieve and dusted over the white. Add hot vinegar before the egg is put over the spinach.

SUSTAINED A FRACTURE OF HIS LEG

Thos. Shore, an employee of Mr. Eddie Graham's pool room on Hunter Street, sustained a fracture of his leg through falling, it is supposed, through a trap door into the cellar. The injured man states that in removing a chair that was standing close to the open door, he lost his balance and fell. Dr. Gallivan was called and attended to the man's injuries, after which he was removed to the hospital.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE T. McDONOUGH

McDonough, who passed away a few days ago, was held yesterday afternoon at three o'clock from the family residence, 723 Bethune Street, to St. Peter's Church and Cemetery. The Rev. Address Was A Masterpiece

Worthy Reminder of His Visit Here Presented to Duke Was Work of Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine

The only concrete momento of his visit to this city that the Governor-General took with him to-day was the address that was read and presented to him by Mayor Buller, at Central Park this morning, on behalf of the people of Peterborough. The address was a masterpiece, and an appropriate reminder of this city to the Duke and Duchess. Its illuminating, embossing, etc., was done by Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine, of this city, who deserves a good deal of praise for the handsome address that resulted from his labours. The address was handsomely bound, in morocco, and beautifully decorated, the decoration also being the work of Mr. Quartermaine. The wording of the address is given in another column of The Examiner.

TRIED TO SAVE WIFE.

Fragment of Cloth In Irving's Hand Tells Mute Story.

QUEBEC, June 2.—The corpse of Laurence Irving, the actor, was picked up on the west shore of the St. Lawrence, below Rimouski, Sunday night, and the information was given to the C.P.R. officials here yesterday morning. His face was badly bruised and hardly recognizable, but on his finger was a signet ring with the initials "L.I." He had a piece of a woman's nightdress in his dead grip, and it was evidently Mrs. Irving's, because when last seen alive, the distinguished actor was making a desperate effort to save her life. It was thought that in his brave efforts to save her life he lost his own.

The body of Leonard Palmer, the English journalist, was identified yesterday.

The duke has stated that he will attend the closing exercises of the military college on June 24.

Many Killed In The Impact

Most of the Bodies at Quebec Were Not Drowned at All

MANY STRUCK BY DEBRIS

QUEBEC, June 2.—More than nine-tenths of the victims of the Empress of Ireland disaster whose bodies have been recovered, were not drowned; they were killed, in most cases instantly, by injuries received either when the collision occurred or subsequently by falling wreckage and debris. This statement, made last night by the officials at the mortuary pier, following investigation by the embalmers and undertakers, accounts for the large number of dead bodies which survivors have repeatedly maintained were floating in the water all about them. "There is no doubt that nearly all were killed by injuries received before they were cast into the water at all," said Undertaker Craig of Toronto, in confirming the announcements.

While no official statement has yet issued from the Canadian Pacific Co., marine men here say that there is no doubt that efforts will be made to raise the foundered Empress. She is lying at the bottom on her side, in 130 feet of water at full tide. Her injuries are very extensive, according to the statements of those of her crew who manned the boat immediately lowered after the collision to ascertain the damage done. Several wrecking corporations have already tendered for the work of raising the liner.

On two of the bodies recovered gold and securities, to the amount of $23,000, were found. Mr. E. Anderson of London, Eng., had three drafts netting $14,000, and $1,000 in gold in a belt strapped round his body. Miss Ruth Morton of Fernie, B.C., had securities for $8,000 on her person.

Nightfall found eighty-nine bodies not yet identified. For two days the steady stream of friends and relatives of the lost have passed up and down, in and out, among the sleeping dead. There remain four score of "unknown." Death, the great leveller, has laid them side by side, all equal now. Summoned in the night to the embrace of the relentless deep, they had not even their clothing by which to aid recognition. No barrier separates the humble steerage tailer from the favored scion of wealth and position. Together they must sleep, in nameless kindredship, in one great grave, under one memorial monument.

Under the personal direction of his Honor Sir Francois Lingelier, Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, preparations for the memorial service and the burial of the unidentified dead are now proceeding. The band of H.M.S. Essex, the officers and crew of which have already shared largely in the tribute of service, will escort the remains to their last resting place.

Many miniature caskets still rest upon the mortuary bier. Few of "the babies" have been identified. The tol of children has been heavy.

All day the work of identification, now hourly growing more difficult, has gone on slowly. In some cases, certainty has given place to conjecture. In others dual claimants have urged recognition of the one body. Scores of telegraphic inquiries have had to be laid aside unanswered.

Woman Survivor Demented.

QUEBEC, June 2.—Word was received from Rimouski yesterday afternoon that a woman, evidently a survivor of the wreck, had been found wandering around naked near there. Apparently she was a Swede, but was quite insane and unable to say anything which would lead to her identification.

Beyond Hope of Salvage.

QUEBEC, June 2. — Commander Tweedie of H.M.S. Essex, which is joining in the search for bodies, is of the opinion that the Empress of Ireland is beyond all hope of salvage. This opinion is, of course, based on conjecture from a description of the damage done to the liner by the collier. He thinks that the hull will have to be blown up by dynamite so that it may not become a danger to navigation. The divers of the Essex have been offered to the Canadian Pacific officials if their services are required.

Treasure on Board Empress.

QUEBEC, June 2. — Two million dollars in Cobalt silver are stated to be in the strong room of the sunken Empress. Such was the word received in Quebec yesterday morning. Wires from New York also indicate a valuable consignment on board, and express anxiety that the wreck be salved at the earliest possible moment.

Found Much Money.

MONTREAL, June 2. — Captain Balanger, commander of the C. G. S. Eureka, made quite a salvage while cruising about in search of bodies, gathering in all $1,400 found in purses that remained afloat. One of $430 was picked up. All the money was turned over to Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the C.P.R., to await claim.

"DON'T BLAME UNDERLING."

LONDON, June 2.—A despatch to The Daily Telegraph from Sydney, N.S.W., says that the Premier, Hon. W. A. Holman, in announcing a message of sympathy in the loss of the Empress of Ireland, made the following statement:

"I expect that the enquiry will end in the condemnation of some unfortunate second mate or seaman. There will be no safety for the traveling public until the directors of the companies which send 1,500 people to sea in a ship capable of being destroyed in 15 minutes, are put on trial as accessories to manslaughter. I hope that the Canadian Government will deal with the calamity in that spirit. I am not saying who is innocent or who is guilty, but if the disaster was due to a human failing, the people who make money by gambling in human lives ought to be punished."

Redistribution Bill.

OTTAWA, June 2.—It is stated today that all difficulties in connection with redistribution have been smoothed over and that the bill will be put through this session after all. Richmond, N.S., and Russell, Ont., are to be eliminated. These were the last remaining points of difference.

TO CHECK A COLD
It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

COMMISSION ALREADY NAMED

Two Canadians and an Englishman to Probe Disaster

LORD MERSEY IS COMING

OTTAWA, June 2.—The House of Commons lost no time yesterday morning in facilitating the passage of an amendment to the Shipping Act which will give power to appoint a special commission to inquire into the Empress of Ireland disaster. With the unanimous consent of the House the bill was given a first and second reading yesterday morning and will get a third reading to-day when it will be sent to the Senate.

Hon. J. D. Hazen, who introduced the amendment, explained that under the present act the Minister has power to form a board composed of a Government official or judge. Only one commissioner could be appointed and the Government could not go outside of these classes for a member of the board. It was felt that in the case of the Empress of Ireland there should be the most searching inquiry. He proposed an additional clause to the bill, where in case of extreme gravity the Minister may appoint "two or more fit persons" to conduct an investigation.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said he agreed entirely with the bill, and commended the Minister for his action. There should be the most ample inquiry into the disaster.

Premier Borden added a few words, saying that the British authorities had already been notified of the Government's intentions as regards the investigation. He added also that the Canadian Pacific Co. had asked for a searching inquiry.

The investigating board will be composed of Sir Rodolphe Routhier, judge of the Quebec Admiralty Court, and Hon. E. M. McLeod, Chief Justice of New Brunswick, and also judge of the Admiralty Court of New Brunswick, together with Mr. George Vaux, the British expert, whom the British Board of Trade is sending to Canada.

The board will meet immediately upon arrival of Mr. Vaux.

It was announced last night that Lord Mersey will probably be with George Vaux, to represent the British Board of Trade.

In addition to the commissioners there will be three nautical assessors appointed to lend their assistance. One of these will be Captain Vales of Prince Edward Island, the other two have not yet been decided on.

The Government has been informed of the probability of Lord Mersey taking part in the inquiry. He presided at the inquiry into the Titanic disaster.

Unsinkable Ship Upside.

MONTREAL, June 2.—G. B. Hunter of the transatlantic and dreadnought firm of Swan, Hunter, Wigham, Richardson & Co., of the Clyde and Tyne, who is in Montreal, when asked last night if it would be possible to building an unsinkable ship. He said:

"An unsinkable ship can be built all right, but she would be little or no use as a carrier. She would be absolutely no use at all for freight, and very little good as a passenger ship."

Worst Than That.

French Cabinet To Resign.

PARIS, June 2.—The French Cabinet, under the Premiership of Gaston Doumergue, has decided to resign. The resolution was taken at a Cabinet council yesterday. The Cabinet will meet again to-day in order to draft a statement explaining the reasons for its retirement from office.

The chief factor in bringing about the resignation of the Government is understood to be the uncertainty of it being able to control a majority in the Chamber of Deputies, where some changes were brought about in the composition of the numerous groups at the recent general elections.

Two Trainmen Injured.

WINGHAM, June 2. — The early train, which left Kincardine at 8.40 a.m. was ditched two miles north of Wingham yesterday morning by a horse on the track. Mr. S. Moorehead, engineer, and Mr. Joseph Harrington, fireman, were injured when the engine rolled into the ditch. Both men were taken to the Wingham Hospital, where they now lie. They were badly shaken up, but not seriously injured. The balance of the train remained on the tracks. There were no other casualties.

(Miscou Harbour, Gloucester Co., N. B., June 1st.—(Special)—"For some five or six years I was troubled with backache. I tried many tonics, but kept growing steadily worse, until I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. They gave me almost immediate relief."
This is the statement of Mrs. A. Mark, well known and highly respected here. Asked to give more particulars in regard to her case, Mrs. Mark said:
"My trouble started with a cold, and gradually grew worse. I had stiffness in my joints and cramps in my muscles and suffered from neuralgia. I had heart flutterings and headaches, my sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I was always tired and nervous. I had dark circles under my eyes, was irritable and often dizzy and had a bitter taste in my mouth in the mornings. I also had attacks of rheumatism.
"It just took three boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills to fix me up."
Every symptom Mrs. Mark mentions spells kidney disease. That's why she found such quick relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS

On Nearly Every Point Accounts of Captains Disagree

ENQUIRY ON JUNE 9

MONTREAL, June 2. — Now that the first burst of excitement and grief at the loss of life through the sinking of the C.P.R. steamship Empress of Ireland has partially spent itself, and the general public is settling down to await the Government enquiry before giving judgment as to the responsibility for the frightful accident, an unhappy controversy between the commanders of the two vessels involved is looming large on the horizon. Doubtless each of them feels badly over the event itself, but at present it seems to be a case of blaming the other fellow" and shifting the blame, as far as possible.

While the tragedy is written so deeply on the hearts of thousands as never to be erased in life, the two men who stand out conspicuously before all the world as possibly more or less responsible for it are in wordy conflict over it. Captain Kendall of the Empress of Ireland tells the coroner at Rimouski that the captain of the collier Storstad might have prevented loss of life if he had kept the Storstad's nose in the gap she made in the Empress' side. Captain Andersen, of the Storstad, in interviews in this city, says he did try to do this, but the Empress "was going at good speed ahead" and drew away in such manner that the bow of the Storstad was forced out of the hole.

Captain Kendall's evidence, in brief, is to the effect that the captain of the Storstad was at fault, first, in proceeding ahead when the Empress of Ireland had signalled that she was "under way, but is stopped and has no way on her," and second in backing out from the gap she had made in the Empress' side. Captain Kendall is backed up by his chief engineer, William Sampson, an Irishman, and by James Rankin, a marine engineer, both of whom state that the collier should have kept her nose in the hole and held up the Empress long enough to allow the crew to hatch the towns and get the people off in safety.

Captain Andersen takes quite a different view of the Empress' actions just prior to the fatal crash by the Storstad. He says the Empress was going fast ahead, and it was impossible after the collision to keep his vessel's bow in the rent she had made because the Empress was going fast.

As to statements made by Captain Kendall and others to the effect that the Storstad did comparatively little towards using its boats to save lives, Captain Ove Lange, agent for the Storstad, says the collier, at great risk to itself, did everything possible to save the Empress people and took on board 350. Third Officer Sure of the Storstad, who was on the bridge at the time, corroborated this. The Storstad's crew seems inclined somewhat freely to lay blame on the Empress for the accident.

The truth, it is hoped, will be drawn by the official enquiry, which is announced to open on June 9 in Quebec City. A preliminary enquiry was begun yesterday in Montreal by Captain Lindsay, wreck commissioner. He is privately securing for the Government information to be used by the investigating board. This board will be composed of two judges of the Canadian Admiralty Court, to be appointed by the Dominion Government, and one representative of the British Admiralty, appointed by the Imperial Government.

Log Book Recovered.

QUEBEC, June 2.—Captain F. X. Pouliot of the Government steamer Lady Evelyn, recovered the Empress log book late Friday night, while coasting for bodies.

The book is not damaged. It was found in a water tight metal box. It is supposed that the first officer, whose body was identified here on Monday, leaped with it from the sinking boat, and that when he drowned he loosened his grip from the box, leaving it to drift.

Men Marooned After Karluk's Mishap Saved Their Outfits.

SEATTLE, Wash., June 2.—Cable despatches from St. Michael and Nome, Alaska, indicate that when Vilhjalmur Stefansson's exploring ship, Karluk, was crushed in the Arctic, near Herald Island, northeast of Siberia, Jan. 16 last, the men saved all their instruments, supplies dogs and food, and left only the crushed hulk and its coal cargo when they headed east over the ice to camp on Wrangel Island.

It is expected that the Canadian Government will see Capt. Robert A. Bartlett, who is at St. Michael's, where he arrived with a dog team on a journey from Wrangel Island, to engage a ship to go to the island and bring off the 18 men marooned there.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

An "arson squad" of militant suffragettes yesterday destroyed by fire the historic parish church of St. Mary's, Wargrave, three miles from Henley on the Thames.

Some time during Sunday night Fenton's sawmill, located on the Perth road, was blown up by dynamite. No reason can be given for the outrage. The mill is almost a total wreck.

Run down by a G.T.R. westbound train at the Cherry street crossing yesterday, Peter John, a Macedonian laborer, living at 10 Berkeley street, Toronto, was probably fatally injured.

A militant suffragette, evading the watchful officials in St. Paul's Cathedral, mounted the steps of the lectern at the services Sunday, and harangued the astonished worshippers upon "the wrongs of women."

Because he had been refused something to eat at the home of David Bauder near Kingston, John Simpson, a tramp, a big husky chap, drew a knife and attempted to stab Bauder. Simpson was arrested and given 30 days in jail.

No one in the House of Commons could be found yesterday who was willing to be sponsor for Senator Davis' Anti-tipping Bill. When introduced the Speaker named Hon. Frank Oliver and Mr. F. B. Carvell as mover and seconder. Mr. Carvell refused to act in that capacity.

BECKER HAS A YEAR.

Legal Proceedings To Appeal Case May Take That Time.

NEW YORK, June 2.—It is announced that a notice appeal in the case of Charles Becker, sentenced to death for the Rosenthal murder, will be filed within a few days. This notice, of course, automatically stays execution so that Becker will not have to die during the week beginning with July 6. The Becker lawyers have stated that they would be ready to argue the case before the Court of Appeals at the beginning of the fall term in October. It is believed, however, that it will be a year before the court can act on the case.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By LOUIS TRACY

Willard supplied details, and his sympathetic hearer swapped reminiscenses of a similar mishap on the Paris, Lyon et Mediterranee Railway. Incidentally he wasted a quarter of an hour before Willard could bring him back to the topic of the missing Power.

"Ah, yes—as to Power," nodded Dacre, seemingly recalling his questioner's errand. "Too bad you didn't turn up yesterday. Power is off to New York—made up his mind on the spur of the moment—and I rather fancy he will not be in Newport again this year. Indeed, I may go so far as to say I am sure he won't, because he has invited me to his place at Bison—somewhere near Denver, isn't it?—and I am to keep him posted as to my own movements, so that we can arrange things to our mutual concenience."

Willard laughed, intending merely to convey his sense of the absurdity of two men playing hide and seek across a continent; but Dacre's allusion to Bison brought a snarl into his mirth.

"You will write to the ranch, I suppose?" he inquired casually.

"Yes," said Dacre, knowing full well that he was being egged on to reveal any more immediate address he might have been given.

"Then I can only apologize for troubling you, and——"

"Not at all! What's your hurry? Let's adjourn to the verandah and smoke."

"I must go and see my daughter."

"Oh, fie, Mr. Willard! You, an old married man, proposing to break in on a lady's toilet at this hour!"

"My girl is up and dressed hours ago."

"Well, now that I come to think of it, you are right. Most mornings while Power was here he joined Mrs. Marten and others for a scamper across the island, and they were in the saddle by seven-thirty—never later."

In such conditions, being essentially a weak man, Willard was as a lump of modeler's clay in the hands of a skilled sculptor. He could not resist the notion of a cigar, he said; of course, it was easy to induce Dacre to gossip anent the lively doings of the Casino set. Ultimately, he entered a carriage at ten o'clock, whereat the Briton, watching his departure, smiled complacently.

"Heaven forgive me for aiding and abetting any man in running away with another man's wife," he communed. "But I know Derry and Nancy and Marten, and now I know Willard, and being a confirmed idiot, anyhow, I am mighty glad I was able to secure those young people a pretty useful hour and a quarter of uninterrupted travel. As we say in Newport, it should help some."

It had an effect which no one would have foreseen. It rendered Willard's arrival at "The Breakers" a possible thing had he reached Newport that morning, and thus, by idle chance, closed the mouth of scandal; for he positively reeled under the shock of the butler's open-mouthed statement that Mrs. Marten had left the town by the first train.

The man did not know him; but, being a well-trained servant he made, as he thought, a shrewd guess at the truth.

"Surely you are not Mr. Willard, sir?" he said respectfully.

"Yes, I am." Simple words enough; yet their utterance demanded a tremendous effort.

"Ah, there has been some mistake, sir," came the ready theory. "Mrs. Marten meant to meet you in New York, and had arranged to travel by the nine o'clock train this morning; but Mr. Power made an early call—you know, Mr. Power, sir?"

"Yes—yes."

"He seemed to have some information about you, sir, which caused Mrs. Marten to hurry away before seven. There has been a sad blunder, I'm sure. What a pity! But if you know what hotel Mrs. Marten will stay at, you can fix matters by a telegram within a couple of hours. . . . Aren't you well, sir? Can I get you anything? Some brandy?"

By some occult process of thought, Willard, though stupefied by rage and dread—for he never doubted for a second that Nancy had flown with Power—held fast to the one tangible idea that her household was ignorant, as yet, of the social tornado which had burst on Newport that morning. Could anything be done to avert its havoc? God! He must have time to recover his senses! While choking with passion, he must be dumb and secret as the grave! A false move now, the least slip of a tongue aching to rain curses on Power, and irretrievable mischief would be done. Small wonder, then, that the butler mistook his pallid fury for illness.

"Won't you come into the morning-room, and sit down, sir?" inquired the man sympathetically.

"Yes, take me anywhere—I'm dead beat. I've been travelling for days in this damn heat. . . . No! no, brandy, thank you. A glass of water. Mrs. Marten expected me, you say?"

"Yes, sir—at New York."

"Ah, my fault—entirely my fault. I misled her, not purposely, of course. She gave you no address?"

"No, sir. Said she would write in a few days, perhaps within a week; but she imagined your movements were uncertain, and she could decide nothing till she had seen you."

"Ah, the devil take it, my fault! I ought to have telegraphed."

He harped on this string as promising some measure of safety for the hour. By this time he was seated, and ostensibly sipping iced water, while his frenzied brain was striving an excuse to encourage the man to talk.

"Perhaps Mrs. Marten may return when she discovers her mistake," he contrived to say with some show of calmness.

"Well, sir, that may happen, of course. My mistress did not take any large supply of clothing, and left her maid here; so, when she misses you in New York, she will probably wire for Julie, at any rate."

"Julie?"

"The French maid, sir."

"What time did Mr. Power call?"

"Very early, sir. About six o'clock."

Willard was slowly gaining a semblance of self-control. He realised that he had been checkmated in some inexplicable way; but it was imperative that Power's interference should not give ground for suspicion.

"I am beginning to grasp the situation now," he said, forcing a ghastly smile. Mr. Power heard of the accident to my train—it was derailed late last night—and, fearing lest I might be injured, he hurried Mrs. Marten away without telling her."

"Then you came by way of New York, sir?"

"Yes. We were held up near Groton."

"Pity you didn't come by the Fall River steamer, sir. Then you would have caught Mrs. Marten, as the boat arrives here at a quarter of [illegible] in the morning."

Willard wanted badly to sweat at the well-meaning butler. He had chosen the train purposely in order to be in Newport the previous night, and his own haste had been his undoing. Why should this fat menial put an unerring finger on the one weak spot in his calculations?

But he felt the urgent need of action, and he was only losing time now, as it was evident that Nancy had covered her tracks dexterously where her servants were concerned.

"Is that cab still waiting?" he demanded suddenly.

"Yes, sir. I didn't notice any baggage. Shall I——"

"I don't intend to remain. I'll telegraph to New York, and go there by to-night's steamer. Meanwhile, I have some friends at the Ocean House whom I would like to look up. By the way, don't mention to anyone that I am upset by my daughter's absence. It might come to Mrs. Marten's ears, and she would be unnecessarily worried. My heart is slightly affected — you understand.

The butler understood perfectly. He could be trusted not to cause Mrs. Marten any uneasiness.

Then Willard set out on the trail of the runaways, following it with a grim purpose not to be balked by repeated failure. At the station he had little difficulty in learning that a lady and gentleman — lady young and good-looking, gentleman who walked with a limp — had taken tickets for Boston. He was in Boston within three hours; but Power had broken the line there to such purpose that the scent failed, for he had caused Nancy to go alone on a shopping expedition, and purchase her own ticket for Burlington, and, when he joined her in a parlour car, the fact that they were travelling in company was by no means published to all the world.

So Willard returned to Newport House—for some inscrutable reason he distrusted Dacre's smiling bonhomie—and occasionally occupied quarters in a less important hotel. Changing his name, by the simple expedient of ordering a supply of visiting cards, he called on the horse-breeding judge, who could facilitate his seemingly eager quest for Power only by telling him to send a letter to the care of a New York bank. This was something gained, and he hurried to New York, where, of course, he was suavely directed to write, and the letter would be forwarded.

Driven to his wits 'end after a week of furtive visits to restaurants, on the off chance that the fugitives might really be in the metropolitan city, he employed a private inquiry agent, and, five days later, received the first definite news. A "Mr. and Mrs. Darien Power" had registered at the Lake Champlain Hotel on the evening of the day of Nancy's flight, and had gone into the Adirondacks next morning!

On the principle that it never rains but it pours, quick on the heels of this startling intelligence came a letter from Nancy. It had been sent to Denver, and some bungle in re-addressing it had caused a prolonged delay. It was brief and to the point, and had been poster at Boston.

"My dear father (she wrote),—It will cause you much distress, but not any real surprise to hear that I have met Derry Power, and now I know just what happened at Bison when you forced me to marry a man whom I detested. I forgive you your share in that horrible deceit; but I cannot forgive Marten, and the action I am taking renders it impossible that he and I should ever meet again. You will learn the why and the wherefore in due course. Meanwhile, I hope you will not take this thing too deeply to heart, and I look forward to our reunion in more peaceful days. When the divorce proceedings are ended and Derry and I are married, I shall tell you where to find me. By that time, perhaps, you will have decided to accept the inevitable, and let the past be forgotten. I am well, and happy—very, very happy.

Your loving,
"NANCY."

Willard brooded long over this straightforward message. He was sad and deaf to its gentle reproach, finding in it only a confirmation of his worst fears. There was no need now to map out a course of action; he had limned that in the main before leaving Newport. Vengeance on Power, vengeance ample and complete, was what he craved for. He understood, in some furtive way, that he could not strike a mortal blow at a man of Power's temperament by using the bludgeons of the law to expiate an offence against society. Both Nancy and her lover must have discounted the effect of the social pillory before they transgressed its code bekound redemption. Indeed, they would hail with joy the edict which banned them—he it proclaimed from the housetops and carrier round the earth by the myriad-tongued press! Nancy's letter, too, showed that she would not scruple to make known her defence, and Willard was well aware that it would serve to rehabilitate her in the eyes of her friends.

So he devised a ghoulish and crafty punishment, which, the more he pondered it, the more subtle and effective did it appear. As the scheme grew in his imagination, he almost hugged himself in rapturous approval of it. So warped was his mind that he might have discovered, were he capable of making an honest analysis of his motives that he was actually gloating over the position in which his daughter was placed if only because of the weapon it placed in his hands against Power.

To succeed, two conditions were necessary—Power must not have written to his mother, nor Nancy to her husband. To his thinking, neither of these eventualities was likely. The very environment of the woods and lakes of the Adirondacks forbade hte notion. If he was right, he would turn Power's dream of happiness into bitterest gall; if rong, there was still another alternative, deadlier, more lurid, but far from being so attractive to a mean and rather cowardly nature. Time alone would show which project promised success—to fail in both was nearly, if not quite, impossible.

Meanwhile, no painted Indian ever camped on the trail of unsuspecting pioneer with more malign intent and rancorous tenacity than Willard displayed in his pursuit and tracking of the erring pair. He was not a righteously incensed father, but a disappointed man who saw within his grasp the means of glutting the stored malice of years. To appreciate to the full Willard's mental processes at this period of his life, not only his double-dealing in the matter of Nancy's marriage, but his vain longings for the lost wealth of the Dolores Ranch, must be taken into account. Even then, his apologist might plead an obsession mounting almost to insanity. Nothing else would explain his actions; but no words could palliate them, for the ruthless Pawnee he resembled would assuredly have chosen a less ignoble revenge.

CHAPTER X.
NANCY DECIDES.

A long spur of the Adirondack Mountains stretches across Hamilton County from the northeast to the southwest. In a hollow on the western slopes of the range nestles Forked Lake. Some five or six miles nearer the watershed, and some hundreds of feet higher in altitude, lies a smaller and prettier lake, difficult of access, and far from the beaten track of tourists. Hither, by devious paths, Power had brough Nancy. A guide, hired at Elizabethtown, was enthusiastic about the fishing in that particular sheet of water, and he vouched for it that there was plenty in plenty for gun as well as rod; moreover, attracted by the sport and scenery, he had built a hut on the unfrequented side of the lake, in which were stored a sufficiency of rough furniture, some cooking utensils, and a canoe. Given fine weather and good health, what more did anyone want?

"Let us go there at once, Derry," said Nancy. "A cabin among the trees on the shore of a lake has always been my dream."

"It sounds almost too idealic," said Power, trying to be cynical; "but we'll hire the outfit for a week, and move on to the next caravan in a day if we don't like it."

They arrived at night, in a drenching downpour of rain, the outcome of the first and only thunderstorm of the season, and were inclined consequently to view with critical eyes the accommodation at their disposal. The owner of the property, who also owned a peculiar name, Peter Granite, had gone to a wood hutch for dry fuel, and Power divested Nancy of a dripping waterproof; while Peter's dog, a nondescript of the hound type, known as "Guess," shook his shaggy fur noisily.

"'Peter' and 'Granite' each signify 'rock,'" he whispered; "but Guess seems to be of opinion that we are stranded in a swamp." Incidentally, he kissed her.

ELBOWS AND FINGERS WERE CRAMPED AND NUMB

Lived in Dread of Paralysis---Nerves Upset---Could Not Sleep ---Well Now--Thanks To Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Paralysis is frightfully common these days. We are living at high tension, and too often the nerves give way under the enormous strain. The only way to be safe is to be warned by symptoms, for the nervous system does not go to pieces without giving you many danger signals, if you only knew how to interpret them.

When you have frequent headaches, find yourself easily irritated and annoyed, feel discouraged and down-hearted, cannot rest and sleep well, and find appetite fickle and digestion bad, you may know that the nerves are in bad condition. Don't wait for these symptoms to become chronic, but start in early with the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and head off disaster.

Mr. John Matthews, farmer, Fawn Lake, Alta., writes: "I had cramps in my legs, pains in my knees and elbows, and my fingers would get cramped and numb. I could not sleep nights, and would have to get out of bed to rub the cramps out of my legs. For two years I suffered this way, and could not get relief. Then I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and did so with splendid results. I sleep well now, enjoy my meals and feel well generally. I only had cramps last winter and feel that my system has been greatly benefited by this food cure.'

Cures like this are reported almost daily in the public press, and you are invited to investigate these cases for yourself. If you cannot call personally write for particulars, enclosing stamp for reply. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

A SAILOR'S YARN

By RYLAND BELL.

One bright moonlight night during the fifties of the last century a company of tars were lolling on the forecastle when one of them, Jim Burns, told the following yarn:

"Mates, I've seen marvels on salt water, but the biggest marvel I ever see was on land. I'd been left in a hospital at Marseilles, and when I got well I shipped in the brigantine Northern Light, bound for New Orleans. But I wasn't fated to git to that port, for we was driven ashore by a nor'easter and every soul lost except myself. Bein' washed overboard, I hung on to a chicken coop that floated by me, was carried into the breakers and throwed on a sandy beach. Between spells I managed to crawl up beyond 'em, and somehow as soon as I saw they couldn't git me ag'in my strength went out o' me all of a sudden, and I didn't know nothin'. The last I remember, I was a lot o' corpses of my mates rollin' around in the breakers, and they seemed to be lookin' at me envious.

"There was a big change from this to what I saw when I got back to myself ag'in. A gal with a pair o' blue eyes was a-lookin' down into mine. She had just poured some grog down my throat from a bottle and was watchin' to see if it would bring me out."

"Bully," said Tom Nye. "I wouldn't give a piece o' hardtack for a yarn without a gal in it."

"There bein' nothin' the matter with me," continued the speaker, "except exhaustion, I rose on my legs and, havin' got my bearin's, axed the gal where I was. She said I was on the coast o' South Carolina, not far from Savannah. She p'inted to a house back on the shore and said she lived there. I could come up there if I liked and git some rest and somepin to eat.

"It was a queer lookin' house and seemed to have been built a long time before, when there was Indians in the neighborhood, cos there was loopholes in it. It had been kind o' elegant once, but was turrable run down. I concluded to go up there with the gal it only to git rid of the rollin' corpses. I found what they call a poor white family occupyin' the premises—the gal's mother, one or two white children and a few niggers. They give me some grub, and by this time it was growin' dark, and, havin' been two days and nights at the pumps, I told 'em I'd like to turn in. The mother and daughter did a lot o' whisperin' together, and then the daughter went off, come back with a key and told me she'd show me to my room. As soon as she opened the door a stunk-up smell come out that almost made me sick.

"The furniture was the old fashioniest I ever see. It was fine stuff, I kin tell you, but the curtains and the canopy to the big bed was all fallen to pieces. There was a fireplace big enough to roast an ox in and armchairs that for comfort beat a hammock all to pieces. But I was too sleepy to take much notice.

"Well, now, mebbe them covers wasn't musty. If I hadn't been ready to drop off I wouldn't 'a' stayed under 'em no time. As it was, I was asleep almost before I struck the bed.

"In the middle of the night I was dreamin' of my mates rollin' around in the breakers and woke up with a start. What d'ye suppose I saw? A man comin' in at the door. He held a candle to light the way, and it shined right on to his face, and it was the ugliest mug I ever see in any country. Why, a Malay pirate was a holy Joe to it. Wo'st of all, the feller clutched a knife as long as your arm.

"He wasn't lookin' at the bed at first. His face was a-workin' as if he was powerful mad. But he come right on and purty soon held up his candle so the light shined right on to my face. At the same moment I jumped. But I hadn't landed on the floor before the light went out, and it was as dark as the black hole o' Calcutta. I expected to git that knife in my ribs, but I didn't. Then I listened to hear the feller move, hopin' he'd go out. The room was as still as a burryin' ground.

"I had no way o' strikin' a light, for when I went to bed I hadn't thort about wakin' up in the night. I wondered if I hadn't been sufferin' from nightmare. Anyway I got back into bed, my heart a-thumpin' and the sweat standin' out on me. I lay awake till day came and I could see all over the room. There was no signs of any one except me havin' been in it durin' the night. So I turned over and went to sleep.

"I waked about noon and went downstairs.

"'Where's that piratical chap that come into my room last night?' I asked.

"'Law sakes!' said the gal, pale. 'Did you see him?'

"'Reckon I did. Who is he?'

"'He's a ghost. When this yere country was first settled a slave dealer built this house and brought a young wife here to live in it. One time when he come home from Africa sudden he found another man here. He killed both the man and the woman in that room. We've never been able to use it. We thort we'd try it last night on you.'"

The speaker stopped, having finished his yarn.

"Marry the gal? No! D'ye suppose I've been spinnin' one o' them cheap yarns that's printed? What I've told you is jist as true as plum duff on Sunday."

Remarkable Removal.

The waterman's cottage on an island in the River Thames at Caversham, Berkshire, which forty-five years ago was moved bodily 24 feet, is to be pulled down to make room for the larger bridge which will be built in place of the present one. The house, weighing 180 tons, was moved by hydraulic power, the occupants remaining inside during the operation, which took only three hours.

TRAGEDY OF FAILURE.

Folly and Disgrace Hidden in the Australian Bush.

"During the decade I spent wandering to and fro on the face of tropical Australia I saw the old order slowly changing," writes Bishop Frodsham in The Cornhill. "It has not yet quite gone, but one by one the old hands are 'crossing the great divide'—to use their own metaphor, with its faint aroma of the gum trees on the mountain ranges that once separated the colonists from their land of pastoral promise. The successful men die in their southern homes—for as a rule these leave the north to build themselves mansions near Melbourne, or homes by one of the landlocked inlets of Sydney Cove.

"The unsuccessful ones do as they have often done before. They start out alone on their last journey. The busy world who follow in their footsteps quickly forget the men who found and blazed the track. When they read in the papers that such and such an 'early citizen' died at the local hospital or was found dead in his solitary camp they remember for a while and then again forget. Yet the battered old derelict was yet infrequently one whose name will live in the nomenclature of mountains, river, lakes and plains.

"The story of Australian exploration holdeth alike old men from the chimney corner and children from their play. It is a record of men who knew how to face failure, and, when necessary, to die with dignity.

"It is a strange thing that gentlemen, like women, when they fall, seem to go under completely—irretrievably. One blazing summer noon I met a rough-looking man in the gray shirt and moleskin trousers so characteristic of the bush. I remember that I was similarly clad. He was leaving, as I was entering, a bush 'hotel.' We recognized each other at sight, although we had not met since the night when I sat next him at his regimental mess. I asked him to come and see me at Bishop's Lodge, and told him he could use any cognomen he like. But, with the smile I remembered almost painfully, he refused. He had forgotten how to behave, he said, and all I could urge did not shake his determination. There are many such. They meet their fate, as they met their disgrace, with a nonchalance that is not the least valuable asset of a gentleman.

"There are lower depths for gentlemen than boundary-riding under an assumed name — depths more abysmal because more hopeless. A man who is above the average gets on in Australia far quicker than he could do normally in the old country. Such a man may retrieve a folly, even a disgrace, and build up again an honorable name. But what about the feeble folk who are sent abroad to relieve their friends at home of their presence, with a remittance paid regularly upon one condition—that they themselves do not return? The late Mr. Whymper used to say that the hardest task of all in mountaineering was helping a weak climber. The same is true of these poor derelicts of family life. What is the frame of mind that makes fathers send such—sons of their own begetting—to the outposts of civilization? Is it the same short-sighted optimism as that which makes their boys so little capable of distinguishing between dreams and reality—castles in Spain and the squalid actualities of a bush hotel?"

A Swordsman's Prowess.

Among those who displayed their prowess before the King at the 2nd Life Guards' assault-at-arms recently was Corpl.-Major Grainger. He has won the title of Best Man at Arms (dismounted) in the army. Perhaps the best of his performances is the one that may be termed the razor trick. He takes a thin staff of wood, about the size of a broom-handle, and suspends it resting on two slips of thin paper. The rolls of paper are themselves suspended on the cutting edge of razors which are held by his assistant. The corporal-major, with one clean sweeping cut, slices the "broom-handle" in two and leaves the paper uncut by the razors.

WAS TROUBLED WITH Weak and Dizzy Spells.
Heart Would Beat Something Awful.

These feelings of weakness, these dizzy spells which come over people from time to time, are warnings that must not go unheeded.

They indicate an extremely weakened condition of the heart and a disordered state of the nerves. One dizzy spell may pass off, but eventually they will come frequently, and at the same time more serious.

Those who are wise will start taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills before their case becomes hopeless, for they have no equal for restoring the heart to its usual strength, and making the nerves firm and steady.

Mrs. Lee. Kinney, Moose Mountain, N.B., writes:—"I was troubled with weak and dizzy spells, and my heart would beat something awful. I got so I had those spells every day. I got so I would try one medicine, and then another, but nothing did me any good until I got Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I can safely say they did me more good than anything I ever took, for I feel like a very different woman. My friends often ask me what I have been taking, and I always say 'Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.' I tell all my friends who say their heart troubles them, to take your pills."

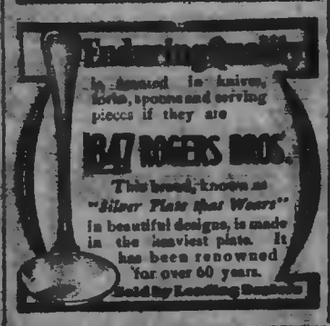
Buying a Title.

Attainment of titles by corrupt means is no modern invention, as witness the following excerpt postscript from a letter of the celebrated "Steenie" (Duke of Buckingham), to his majesty King James I., printed in Dalrymple's memorials: "Here is a gentleman called Sir Francis Leake, who hath likewise a Philosopher's stone; 'tis worth but Eight Thousand; he will give it me if you will make him a baron: I will, if you command not the contrary, have his patent ready to sign when I come down. He is of good religion, well born, and hath a good estate. I pray you burn this letter."—London Spectator.



SHOCKS FOR QUEEN MARY.

Her Precocious Young Sons Manage to Keep Her Nerves on Edge.

Queen Mary is always getting shocked by her offspring. It is reported that Prince Henry, her third son, not long ago was heard to make the remark "If I am king I will have more wives than Henry VIII."

Now comes a story about Prince John, the youngest son of the king and queen, who will be nine years old in July. He is said to have jumped on a bench in St. James' park a few days ago and shouted at the top of his voice, "Votes for women!" A small crowd collected, and it took an embarrassed nurse some time to get her charge back to Buckingham palace.

Prince John seems to enjoy life much as other boys of his age. He has gathered, doubtless from his older brothers, who bring it from the public school, university and navy, a lot of slang and has horrified his mother by his very apt use of it. Recently, while motoring with the queen, he was rebuked for his habit of slang and particularly for his use of the word "kids" as applied to children. At that he thought the thing was being overdone and pointed out the fact that all boys talked about "kids," asking, "What else would a fellow call them?" The queen gave it up.—London Cor. New York Times.

HE ENJOYS HIS MEALS NOW
For He Keeps a "Little Digester" Handy

Mr. Glassco, of Toronto, wrote us on May 12th last:

THE COLEMAN MEDICINE CO.,
309 Church St., Toronto
Dear Sirs,— I wish you would send me another box of your "Little Digesters". All the members of my family have been using them and have obtained the most satisfactory results.

I congratulate you on your success in putting up a tablet for the cure of indigestion. I suffered for years and tried everything that was recommended to me. Nothing gave me relief, until I was persuaded to try "Little Digesters". Now I never suffer from Indigestion. I enjoy my meals and am not afraid to eat, because I know a "Little Digester" after each meal will digest my food.

I recommend them to all my friends who suffer from Indigestion and would further say that you may publish the above if you wish. I know there are thousands of people suffering from Indigestion who will be glad to know there is a safe and sure cure for them.

Yours very truly,

Sweetbread Salad.

Prepare the usual way, cook in water for half an hour, then throw in cold water to harden. Cut in small pieces, season with salt and pepper and put in a cool place. At serving time, mix with an equal amount of crisped celery and mix with mayonnaise, line a salad bowl with lettuce leaves, arrange the salad mixture over them; put a spoonful of mayonnaise over the top and garnish with cut lemon.

Asparagus Salad.

Boil a bunch of asparagus in unsalted water for thirty minutes; then add a teaspoonful of salt and cook until tender, but not mushy, perhaps ten or fifteen minutes. Drain carefully, so as not to break the stalks. Arrange on a platter and set in the ice box to cool. Just before serving, garnish the stalks just above the tips with a chopped relish, or India chutney. Cover the whole with French dressing and serve immediately.

Beet Salad.

Line a salad bowl with crisp lettuce leaves, and pile on neatly alternate slices of boiled beets and hard boiled eggs. Let the beets predominate. Sprinkle the top with onion and parsley, chopped very fine and cover with Italian dressing. This is a wholesome salad.

GLAZED SWEET POTATOES.

Wash and bake in their jackets some medium sized sweet potatoes. When done, skin and cut in halves lengthwise and put in a buttered pan. Have ready a syrup made from one cup of sugar and a half cup of water. Add two tablespoonfuls of butter and then use this to baste the potatoes while they bake, which should take about 15 to 20 minutes.

Peterborough Pie.

One cup sugar, one-third cup butter, creamed together; one egg mixed with the sugar and butter; two-thirds cup milk, 1½ cups flour sifted with one teaspoon cream of tartar, one-half teaspoon soda, one teaspoonful vanilla. Bake in two layers in rather a quick oven.

Butter Frosting—One tablespoon butter, two tablespoons milk. Melt the butter in the milk, then add one cup confectioner's sugar and beat, beat! When smooth put between layers and on top. This is very nice with dates.

Stone and clean 12 good dates, press into the batter when it is ready for the oven.

Curried Potatoes.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter and cook in it a tablespoon of minced onion. Add a tablespoon of minced onion. Add a heaping tablespoon of flour and one of curry powder, one-half teaspoon salt and a cup of hot milk. Let boil five minutes. Strain over one pint of hot cooked potatoes. Serve hot.

New York, Saturday.

WHETHER one wants to crowd more business into his working hours or to save time for other things by condensing his business into fewer hours he will be interested in the first National Efficiency Exposition and Conference which has just opened in New York. If a housekeeper wishes to be rid of drudgery or to save time for other things than the dull routine of housekeeping she will find a hundred things that will suggest better and quicker ways of work and management.

With the passing of the spendthrift, careless, wasteful methods that have prevailed in recent years, the era of efficiency is beginning. The time is at hand when only the efficient man will survive in business, when success in the home and outside will have efficiency as its cornerstone. Every one is aiming at efficiency, but how to obtain it is a matter understood by few. This exposition will give assistance and throw light upon the dark places of stupidity and waste. Those who are ambitious to join the ranks of the efficiency army will have an opportunity to prepare themselves for service. The industrial engineers who were invited to participate in the conference will act as officers and guides and the notable achievements of applied efficiency shown will serve as inspirations for carrying on the work in many ways.

For the most part, efficiency applications will be made in three departments—the laundry, the office and the kitchen. How to save a thousand steps, how to prevent backaches, how to get an hour for rest or recreation and how to keep the workshop as neat as a parlor while doing twice the work accomplished in the old way are some of the valuable details that the intelligent visitor may learn at this exposition.

Saving Shipping Expenses.

Probably few things will show more effectively the progress that has been made in business than the display by the Bush Terminal Company, of Brooklyn. Its methods deal with the source of expenses that add to that bugbear exploited by all, "high cost of living." Much of this unpleasant condition results from the expenses of shipping and handling merchandise and food supplies. This exhibit will impress visitors with what has been done to reduce the labor and cost of moving of small packages and of great loads by the application of the principles of efficiency. Ingenuity is taxed to provide ways and means of getting produce from one place to another with as little handling as possible. The application of modern electric transportation machinery to interior haulage will be shown by a company which is effecting tremendous savings of time and money for manufacturers and transporters throughout the country.

What such great corporations as the United States Steel and the Interborough are doing to protect the health and safety of their employes and to make them happier and more contented will be shown in a series of impressive exhibits, and many persons who are daily endangered in the subway congestion will find food for hopefulness in the relief maps exhibited by the Public Service Commission showing progress on the subways now under construction and the plans of those that it is proposed to build in the near future.

There will be daily proofs of the service of the dictograph and of an invention of Mr. Edison that, for the first time, makes voice-writing practical by permitting an association between dictator and dictatee by which explicit instructions in the matter of corrections, enclosures, "rush" letters and extra carbons are given almost automatically while a person is dictating.

The broad business methods and the commercial devices displayed at this exhibition are well worth the attention of the entire community. Women will find a special interest in the kitchen and laundry. Every housekeeper has trouble with her laundry. It is not so much that one cannot find a laundress but that it is difficult to keep one. It would not be if there were the efficiency in its equipment that is shown in the home laundry fitted up in the Grand Central Palace. And even if the laundress does not come a woman with a fair amount of strength would be able to attack the hamper of soiled clothes with courage and the hope of getting through the job without assistance other than she obtains from the apparatus in the efficient laundry.

In the first place, there is a vacuum washing machine, driven by a motor, if one does not wish to incur the expense, easily operated by hand. This machine works by air pressure and suction and is designed for direct attachment to ordinary stationary tubs. It will wash, rinse, blue and bring clothes in a fraction of the time required by the old methods and is accomplished with far less wear and tear. Five minutes is long enough to allow for washing the clothes in the first tub. They are then passed through the wringer into the second tub and remain there five minutes longer. From there they go into the wringer and are again pass through the wringer and are ready to go into the drying cabinet. There is none of the trouble of hanging with a pulley or getting the soapy clothes to the roof. No odor of steam betrays the drying of clothes in the house. Moreover, the clothes soon dry. Then they are divided, the more elaborate pieces requiring careful ironing being put in one place, the flat pieces in another and skirts in another, each set being ironed by electricity, but with an iron suited to its particular character. As soon as they are finished they are put on a convenient overhead dryer to air well before being put away.

As a result of this well organized and efficient laundry the clothes look well, time has been saved and no one is tired out as on the days when the washing and ironing were events of the week to be dreaded and so exhausting that one could hardly recover from the work of Monday and Tuesday before the end of the week.

The remark is frequently flung about that the girl of to-day can't do the work that her grandmother did. Efficiency answers that it would be a shame if she did. She ought to know better. She should profit by the time and labor saving devices of the age as her brothers do in their work. Besides turning out more and better work in the efficient laundry she can prepare more appetizing meals without being too tired to eat them if she will make her kitchen an efficient workshop.

Mrs. Christine Frederick, who has such a kitchen, is going to show what can be done in it by scientific management. One side of the kitchen is set apart for preparing the dishes for a meal; the other side is devoted to clearing away the various dishes and foods after the meal. For example, the icebox, the kitchen cabinet, the electric stove and the serving table are on one side, the door leading into the dining room being directly beside the serving table, so that the food can be rushed directly to the dining table. On the other side of the door are the shelves for dishes, the sink with its sliding drain board, and a garbage incinerator. A closet for brooms and mops is in one corner and the door through which the iceman enters is between the closet and the icebox. That is a small detail, but it is one of many that makes for convenience and the saving of steps and time.

In clearing off the table a little wheeled tray is used, which enables the housekeeper to get the dishes off the table quickly, dispose of the waste food and get the dishes washed and put away in the most economical way. One of the features recommended for every home where a woman does her domestic work is the electric clock. When the alarm that has been set for a certain time goes off the oatmeal and coffee begin to cook and when the housekeeper appears her breakfast is well under way.

A thermostat to regulate the heat of the oven is another kitchen device that may save many a dinner from burning and a heart from aching in consequence.

Many prominent persons are interested in the crusade for efficiency which is being pushed under the auspices of the Efficiency Society. Mr. William R. Willcox is president of the society, Mr. Harry P. Payne, first vice president; Mr. Melville W. Mix, second vice president; Mr. E. C. Church, secretary; Mr. Boyd Fisher, executive manager; Mr. Travis H. Whitney, chairman of the committee in charge, and Mr. Wilton H. Tallis, exposition director.

Governor Glynn showed his interest by accepting the invitation to be present at the opening of the exposition, but he was obliged to cancel the engagement. Throughout the community the old adage, "Waste not, want not," is gaining adherents, and the holding of this exposition and conference shows the consideration paid to all kinds of efficiency.

BASKETS ARE IN VOGUE.

BASKETS are enjoying a merited vogue as adjuncts of the luncheon table. They come in the most fascinating of shapes and colors as well as in a great variety of weaves.

The woman who has skill and individuality of taste will prefer to color her baskets. In this way she can not only give them a tone harmonious with other fittings but she can save considerable money. The baskets in their natural colors can be bought cheaply and stained in dull tones or finished with shellac. Moreover the color can be changed from time to time as occasion or fancy requires.

For spring flowers a gracefully shaped basket makes the most appropriate kind of holder and, with the little glass supports that can be purchased of almost any size and inserted in the baskets, the flowers may be arranged to keep as well as in a vase. For an elaborate luncheon the centre basket may be supplemented by individual ones of corresponding shape at each place.

It is not only for holding flowers or fruit that the basket comes in such for table use. The baskets for rolls are extremely pretty and the very dainty ones may be utilized for nuts or candies.

From the Feminine Point of View.

THE smartest demi-saison toilettes for outdoor wear are of the composite order, coat and skirt diverse in fabric and color. A charming little costume has a perfectly plain short skirt of tete de negre velours, narrower at the hem than at the hips, but not draped at all. The coat is of blue and green silk tartan, cut on bias and with rather full basques of the mousquetaire type, and a belt of white soft green ribbon. The hat to wear with this matches the skirt, a very smart little toque with brim flaring up to great height at the back; and gaiters to match the coat are provided, an excellent little touch.

A gown of supple gray cloth, the skirt, simply draped, is worn with a coat of vivid garnet lined velvet, somewhat of the Russian type, with the long basques shaped up in novel fashion and bordered with silvered fox. The toque is of garnet velvet and fur. Nearly all the new coats have long, plain, but fitting sleeves, finished only with a tiny cuff or wrist frill.

For Evening Wear.

Magpie effects are still in tremendous vogue, and will be throughout the coming Lenten season. A simple and wonderfully effective evening gown has a plain tra'nail skirt, the lower part of black chiffon velvet and the upper of white satin over which is a straight full tunic of white plisse tulle, clasped round the hips with a wide lattice girdle composed of cut jet beads, terminating with a series of tassels. The white satin corsage is of the simplest kimono type, crossed with slender bretelles of the jet beads and the wide sleeves drawn into a lattice of jet above the elbow.

The very newest fabric for evening wear, which will be the leading one all through next season, is a gorgeous tissue composed of the finest chenille woven on a gauze foundation. It comes in the most exquisite colors and designs, and though it has such a rich, sumptuous effect, it is literally of feather weight.

These Prison Cells Ought To Be O K.----They Were Designed by an Inmate on Randall's Island

"I KNOW how I want this building to be constructed, but I suppose I shall have to get an architect to make the plans," said Miss Katherine B. Davis, New York's Commissioner of Correction, referring to a projected disciplinary building for unruly prisoners on Blackwell's Island.

"I can have them made by one of the men in the penitentiary," replied the warden. "Of course I will have to have the blue paper and other materials. We have nothing of the sort there."

"Very well," said Miss Davis. "Here is $5; get what is necessary and see what your man can turn out, but remember that the plans have to pass the scrutiny of half a dozen city departments and all kinds of experts. We're lucky if we do not have to get an 'O. K.' from the Art Commission."

So it came about that a prisoner drew the plans for the new building which is to be used for the punishment of other prisoners.

In the records of the department the prisoner is listed as a carpenter, but, as his work proves, he is really an architect, and he is also a skilled mechanic. The charge on which he was convicted is that of petty larceny, and he was sentenced to serve eleven months and twenty-nine days' imprisonment and to pay $500 fine. He has almost finished his prison term, but if he has to work out his fine he will not be released until next August. By that time the building for which he has drawn the plans will probably be finished. As the prisoner-architect goes back and forth to his meals he can get a glimpse of the building that is being constructed according to the plans which he made. His name is being withheld because Miss Davis does not want to call attention to his imprisonment.

To understand why there is to be a new disciplinary building on Blackwell's Island one must know the conditions of the penitentiary, in which about twelve hundred men are incarcerated. The greater part of the building is old. It is built in a T shape, the cells, four tiers of them, opening on connecting corridors which convey sound on the whispering gallery principle. If a prisoner becomes noisy, "goes crazy," every one else is disturbed, and as nothing is more contagious in prison than trouble and uproar the result is not only difficult for the guards to cope with but is hard on those prisoners who are willing to behave themselves.

Formerly there were dark cells into which the leaders of this sort of mischief were put for punishment, but humane and sensational persons alike condemned these dark holes; and they certainly had little to be said for them, since the only way that light or air could be admitted was through a grated door opening into the public corridor, and here the howling and obscenity could be heard as plainly as if the men were in their own cells. There were refrigerator doors that could be shut on occasion, but these shut off the air from the prisoners and caused much hostile criticism. Miss Davis' predecessor, Commissioner Whitney, abolished these cells, and since then there has been no way of separating the rebellious and troublesome prisoners from the others. Mr. Whitney also put in large windows instead of the small ones in the corridors.

Several times recently the necessity for isolation has been borne in upon the authorities. Trouble frequently arises in the mess room. Here there are only sixteen guards to take care of the twelve hundred men.

This case was cited by Miss Davis to show the urgent need of isolation cells. If these culprits could have been immediately taken out of hearing of the others much trouble would have been saved. One of the principal causes of disorder is the bringing of charges against the guards and attempts at retaliation on the part of the prison corps. This has become the more grave because of the investigations that have been going on and which tend to encourage the prisoners in their rebellion against authority. One of their favorite threats is that they will tell the District Attorney and the newspapers of their real or fancied grievances if concessions are not made to them. Thus the whole body of prisoners is in proper condition to participate in any riot or disturbance that may

Of course there are many exceptions. Miss Davis tells of a meeting of seventy-five representative prisoners which she called. When they were assembled all the officers, guards and other employes of the penitentiary were excluded and the men were invited to give frank comment and criticism.

"The first one," said Miss Davis, "made a just and intelligent criticism. He was a young Austrian, but he spoke English well, and his opinion was that most of the trouble arose from the lack of classification in the prison. That is true, and so were most of the comments that I listened to that day. They were very different, you understand, from the complaints of prisoners that have no real basis and which they try to make effective through threats.

"And now you understand why I felt it necessary to have a detached house where the unruly class might be disciplined. We had it at Bedford, where I was formerly and where the need was less imperative, as we had more than ninety officers to take care of five hundred girls, while in the penitentiary we have only eighty-nine men of all kinds, including the clerical force, physician and other non-disciplinarians.

"I sent the engineer from the penitentiary up to see our little house at Bedford, so that he would have a good idea of it, and then I indicated certain changes that I would like to see made. The prisoner with the architectural ability was able to include all of these in his sketches. The building will be of stone—we get it right on the island, you know—and the foundation has already been dug. It will be only one story in height and very simple, but effective, in construction. To conform to a law passed a few years ago prohibiting the erection of new buildings on the island, it will be an addition to the bath house. That will be convenient, as we will not have to provide a bathroom in the building, as is done in the Bedford disciplinary house."

In the new disciplinary house the ten cells will open, five on each side, on two corridors. There are also skylight windows for light and air and electric lights that can be turned on and off from the outside. The plumbing is of a kind recently introduced in a New Jersey institution for the insane, and defies human strength unaided by instruments to destroy. There is no furniture, a mattress and a blanket being given the prisoner at night. There are two doors, the inner of which has a protected opening through which food can be passed and the movements of the prisoner watched. This detail was put in at the suggestion of Miss Davis, who had been in danger of her life by having food and dishes hurled at her by a girl to whom she was handing a meal at Bedford. The isolated prisoner will be supplied with all the bread and water he wants night and morning and a heartier meal at noon.

"No building can be made escape proof," said Miss Davis. "The Russian government has tried it and been unable to achieve the result. But we can diminish the noise, and besides, there will be only the worst prisoners here, and so no others will be disturbed. If they want to roar and scream and use vile language they will have no audience except those of their kind, and in such a case they will get over their spasms much more promptly. I think these ten cells will be enough. If they are not, we can build another addition. I have every reason to believe that the discipline and order of the penitentiary will be greatly improved by the construction of this disciplinary house. I am grateful to the prisoner for his good work and have written to him of my appreciation."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A DEVOTED WIFE

She Proved More Efficient Than the Law

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Charles Foedick, newly married, having finished his dinner, rose from the table and said to his wife:

"I must do some work at the office tonight. If I'm not at home by 10 o'clock don't wait for me, but go to bed."

"No; there is nothing to be done that two can work at. I think I can do it all and get home at a reasonable hour."

"I'll sit up for you, no matter how late you are."

It was half an hour after dark when Charlie Foedick unlocked the office door of Converse & Co., private bankers, and, entering, turned on a light and went to work. He had been engaged some time when, looking up from his desk, he noticed that the door of the private room of Mr. Coolidge, the financial partner, who had also under his supervision the accounts of the concern, was ajar. This was noticeable, because Foedick knew that when Coolidge left his room he invariably locked it. Foedick went to the door, pushed it open and by the light that shone in from the counting room saw a sight that filled him with horror. A man lay on the floor. Foedick ran in, turned on a light and saw the financial partner lying on his back, his glazed eyes staring at the ceiling.

Foedick's first impulse was to run out and shout for some one. But it flashed upon him that he had better take counsel with himself as to what it would be better to do. Turning off the light, he left the room, closing the door behind him, and returned to his desk. He had been there but a few minutes when the night watchman entered.

"Hard at work, Mr. Foedick?"

"I'm a little behind," was the reply.

The young man's heart was beating like a triphammer. Should he take the watchman into Coolidge's room and show him what had occurred? He had no time for consideration. The watchman went out, saying before doing so:

"Oh, yes," was the reply, "everything is all right."

The man had no sooner gone than Foedick saw that he had been on the horns of a dilemma and had chosen the wrong horn. If he had shown the watchman the body he might have had some chance to escape being hanged for Coolidge's murder. As it was, the watchman would swear that he, Foedick, had been in the office between 9 and 10 o'clock on the evening of the murder and no one had been there later.

There was no hope but in flight. Catching up his hat and without having sufficient equanimity to turn off the light over his desk, he left the office and, running to his home, fell into the arms of his wife, trembling like a leaf.

"Charlie," she exclaimed, "for heaven's sake, what is it?"

It was some time before he could sufficiently collect his faculties to tell her what had occurred, and when he did he brought it out in disconnected, gasped sentences.

"Oh, Charlie!" she moaned. "Why didn't you give an alarm as soon as you saw the body?"

"Why didn't I? Because I must have been struck with madness. It was all fated. I shall die on the gallows."

Then the wife pulled herself together. She sat down on a sofa beside her husband with her arms about him and said:

"Probably the murder will not be discovered till morning. Mr. Coolidge was a bachelor, wasn't he?"

"Yes."

"Then it is not likely he will be missed from home during the night. You will not be sent for. You have a choice between two courses—either to go to Mr. Converse's house and tell him all that has occurred or disappear, hoping that during your absence some clew will be found as to the murderer."

Foedick could not get over the scene between the night watchman and himself and how it would be used against him when brought to trial, and his wife saw that he was so frightened that he would present a bad appearance and be a very poor witness in his own behalf. Feeling that by flight he would not make the matter much worse than it was, she consented to his going. There was plenty of time to prepare a disguise, and she bent her inventive powers to dress him up to that end. He wore a full beard, and she shaved it all off, doing the work herself because his hand trembled so that he could not do it without cutting himself. Then she dressed him in some of her old garments, rouged and powdered him and sent him away with all the money there was in the house, cautioning him to go to a foreign country before changing his apparel.

Foedick did not get away from home till near midnight, but when he did he was effectively disguised. His wife did not let him go before arranging a cipher code by which he might communicate with her. A newspaper advertisement informed the couple that a steamer would sail for South American ports at 1 a. m., or in a couple of hours, the tide serving at that time, a coaster under an assumed name got aboard and before the murder was discovered at 8 o'clock the same morning was well out at sea.

Before officers came to Foedick's house to arrest him his wife had consulted a lawyer, to whom she had told the whole story and asked his advice as to further procedure. Without either commending or condemning Foedick's flight the lawyer advised her to disclaim any knowledge of his movements, or, rather, to refuse to answer any questions whatever. Nothing was discovered to cast any suspicion on any one but Foedick. Indeed, it did not appear that there was any need to look for a clew since his flight was taken as a confession of guilt. Mrs. Foedick had a long interview with Mr. Converse, but he did not make it known to others whether or not he had gained any information from her. The truth is he did not. The wife did not dare trust any one except her attorney. Indeed, he strictly enjoined that she should trust no one else.

At the interview between Mr. Converse and Mrs. Foedick the lady represented to him that she had no income; that she had studied bookkeeping and served as a bookkeeper before her marriage. She asked if she might not be given her husband's place. The fact that she had been left destitute and that her husband was a murderer excited a great deal of sympathy for her, in deference to which the head of the firm granted her request, and within a week after her husband's disappearance she entered upon her duties.

During Mrs. Foedick's term of service with Converse & Co. her husband was in South America and soon after his arrival there secured a position in the interior of Brazil as an accountant on a coffee plantation. He dared not write his wife lest his letters be intercepted and his abiding place become known, but she sent him advertising cards, and he returned them with certain marks on them which she alone knew how to interpret.

Although the details of a plan to exonerate her husband had not been in Mrs. Foedick's mind at the beginning, there was a plan in embryo. She needed the income she derived from her work, but this was not her prime motive in entering the service of Converse & Co. She hoped by keeping her eyes and ears open and her mouth shut to find a clew to the murderer. If Mr. Coolidge had been murdered by any one connected with the business this might be possible; if he had been murdered by some one on the outside it would not be possible.

Mrs. Foedick noticed that John Carruthers, the head bookkeeper, kept certain of his books and papers in an old-fashioned safe, opened by a key instead of a combination lock. Shortly before the end of the firm's fiscal year she announced to Mr. Erskine, who had taken Mr. Coolidge's place, that she must work nights. She asked her if in view of the tragedy that had occurred in the office she would not be afraid of being there alone. She said that her nerves were strong and she would not mind it.

One night while Mrs. Foedick was working in the office Mr. Carruthers suddenly appeared [illegible] and, entering her in the act of locking his safe. He was white as a cloth, and when he spoke to her her voice, in spite of an effort to control it, trembled.

"So it is you who have been tampering with my safe," he said. "I noticed bits of wax on the lock and suspected an impression had been made as a model for a key. I have been on the watch, have caught you and shall report the matter."

"I don't think you will, Mr. Carruthers."

"Why not?"

"Before I tell you I wish you to know that I am armed. The only other person who possessed your secret was doubtless unarmed, and his life was at your mercy."

Carruthers staggered and caught at a desk for support. Mrs. Foedick took a revolver from under her dress and proceeded:

"My husband worked here the night of the murder and discovered Mr. Coolidge's body. Fearing that he would be held for the murder, he fled. It is time you took his place. The law works slowly and often unsatisfactorily. I am a practical woman and would rather get on without it. I have been through your books and have discovered a shortage of $50,000. Write me a confession that you murdered Mr. Coolidge—the only person who had knowledge of your deficiency—and you may go into concealment."

It did not take the man long to see that he had been offered the only chance there was for his life. He signed a confession, gave it to Mrs. Foedick, and about the same hour in the morning as Foedick had gone he sailed away into oblivion.

The next afternoon Mrs. Foedick went into Mr. Converse's private office and was closeted with him for an hour, at the end of which time she left with means to go to South America and bring her husband home.

Converse & Co., in order to avoid shaking their credit, kept the deficiency a secret. And when Mr. Converse received a letter from Foedick in South America stating that he and Mrs. Foedick would make that country their future home it was determined to publish simply a statement that the firm had come upon undisputed evidence that Foedick was innocent of the murder and to make no effort to find Carruthers.

Foedick and his wife concluded to remain in South America because there were those in the United States who would never believe in his innocence. In his new home no one knew that he had fled from justice, or, rather, injustice.

Consolation For Stammerers.

There are, of course, stammerers who cultivate the art in conversation and have not the least wish to be cruel because, as with Charles Lamb, the point of the remark is delayed for a moment by the hesitancy. Curiosity, expectancy, anxiety, are aroused, and then the amazing word comes. The tremendous fluency of our present political speakers raises a certain longing for a stammerer on the platform—the man who could make you wonder whether he were about to burst, what he was about to burst with and then after the dreadful suspense said it. But the word must have been there all the time.—London Chronicle.

Guns Recovered From Sea.

While fishing thirty-five miles off Sunderland, Scotland, the steam trawler Lord Chancellor brought up from the ocean bed a huge bundle of muskets. Antiquarians who have examined the find consider that they date from before Nelson's time, and that they are relics of some futile gun-running venture by a Dutch galleon. Other trawlers bound for the Dogger Bank intend to traverse the course of the discovery in the hope that other treasure may be located.

GILLETT'S LYE EATS DIRT

TRIED TO SAVE SHIP.

Engineers Worked Until Their Engines Failed Them.

TORONTO, June 2—Following the collision of the Empress of Ireland and the collier, there was desperate effort in the engine room to save the ship, and the engineers and assistants left the engines only when human power was of no avail because the steam had failed and the gigantic engines were rendered useless. The story told by Chief Engineer W. Sampson to his son of that last fight in the engine room to obey the captain's orders and save the ship and the 1,400 souls aboard, was told here yesterday by the engineer's son, Mr. J. E. Sampson of this city, as heard from his father in Montreal on Sunday.

Held up by two men, Engineer Sampson worked with the starting apparatus, which, because of the list of the boat, was over his head instead of at his side. In this position, really lying on his back in the hands of his assistants, the engineer worked the machinery until the steam failed and the big engines failed to respond. The telegraphic communication with the bridge and the captain continued its signals. The order came to beach her, and Sampson put on all steam, but in a moment all steam was no steam and the engines kicked once or twice and quit.

Obeying the great code of marine men, the rules of the Board of Trade, the engineer wired back to the captain: "No steam, the engines are gone." Back came the message from the bridge, the usual signal, but carried a message of death "Finished with the engines."

Then the lights went out and Chief Engineer Sampson gave his last order in the engine-room of the Empress, when he told his men to get out. "We climbed the ladder on the side which was really the ceiling now," said Engineer Sampson, "like the flies on a wall."

Doctor Tells How To Shed Bad Complexion

We cannot restore degenerated facial tissue any more than we can restore a lost limb. It is useless to attempt to convert a worn-out complexion into a new one. The rational procedure is to remove the complexion instead — remove the devitalized cuticle. Not by surgical means, however, as the underlying cutis is too thin, too tender, to withstand immediate exposure. Applying ordinary mercolized wax will gradually absorb the offending cuticle. By degrees, a new, youthful skin appears; a skin soft and delicately tinted as a rose petal.

No lady need hesitate to try this. Procure an ounce of mercolized wax of the druggist. Spread on a thin layer before retiring, removing this in the morning with soap and water. In from one to two weeks the complexion is completely transformed.

An approved treatment for wrinkles is provided by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. Bathing the face in the solution brings prompt and remarkable results.—Dr. R. Mackenzie in Popular Medicine.

TO GUARANTEE BONDS.

Government Will Back Issue Amounting to $16,000,000.

OTTAWA, June 2. — The Government gave notice of a resolution late last evening, which will be moved in the House to guarantee the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to the extent of three-quarters of the completion of the mountain section of the line. This will amount to $16,000,000. The estimate of the company is that it will take about $20,270,000 to complete the section, but there is interest also to be provided for.

For this the Government accepts as security a mortgage on the western division and on the Lake Superior branch subject to all existing prior mortgages thereon.

The Government will not be required to implement the additional bonds so guaranteed, and will not be required to pay interest without recourse on the bonds so guaranteed.

The amount of the bonds so guaranteed will include a sufficient sum to provide for interest thereon for three years after completion.

It was stated on behalf of the Government last evening that the obligation of the Government to guaranteed bonds for three-quarters of the cost of the mountain section was clear, but on the other hand the obligation of the company to give a first mortgage securing all such bonds was equally clear.

Conflicting legal opinions as to the liability of the Government were put forward on each side, but eventually a compromise was arrived at on the basis of the arrangement detailed above.

There is talk of winding up the business of the House by Saturday, with prorogation on Monday. At the outside the House will adjourn a week from Wednesday. Farmers' Bank legislation will come up to-day.

KING HEADS THE LIST.

LONDON, June 2.—The King has donated $2,500, the Queen $1,250, the Prince of Wales $1,250, and the Queen Mother Alexandra $1,000 to the Empress of Ireland fund. Sir Herbert Tree sent $461, the proceeds of the inaugural meeting of the People's Theatre.

These comprised only additional subscriptions to the relief funds yesterday evening. As the holidays have intervened the appeals have not yet had a full start. It is expected that a considerable move forward will be made to-day.

Henry B. Irving, brother of Laurence Irving, who was drowned in the wreck of the Empress of Ireland, at the close of a theatrical performance last night expressed briefly in behalf of his family, appreciation of the public demonstrations of sympathy and affection for Laurence Irving held here and of the American tribute to his greatness and noble end, so characteristic of the man.

President Cables Sympathy.

WASHINGTON, June 2—President Wilson yesterday sent a message of condolence to King George on the sinking of the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence river:

"I beg of Your Majesty," cabled President Wilson, "to accept my deepest sympathy in the appalling catastrophe to the steamship Empress of Ireland, which has brought bereavement to so many English homes."

Secretary Bryan instructed American Ambassador Page in London to call at the British Foreign Office and express this Government's condolence and his own in the disaster which overtook the British vessel.

VANCOUVER, June 2.—That the Maraj&hs of two of the most important Indian provinces be requested to call on the Viceroy to demand in turn that he shall appeal to the Imperial Government and to the Government of Canada to secure entry for the Hindus aboard the Komagata Maru, now in this port, was a resolution passed at a meeting of East Indians, when heavy subscriptions were made for their brethren on board the steamer. The threat was added that much unrest would be fomented in India if the party are not allowed to land.

The situation has become rather aggravated because 640 Chinese arrived on the Empress of Russia Saturday and were admitted on payment of $500 head tax each. Boards of inquiry in the individual cases of the Hindus convened yesterday, and will probably last all week.

Bandits on Trial.

MONTREAL, June 2.—True bills on the charge of murder were found by the grand jury in the court of King's bench in Montreal yesterday, against Arthur Foucault and Joseph Beauchamp, two of the four so-called bandits, who are alleged to have shot and killed Constable Bourdon at Cote des Neiges, one night last spring. Trial was fixed for June 8.

Retired King's Proctor.

Mr. William Brown, Assistant King's Proctor in England, has just retired after forty years' service. As an official he was very much of a mystery to the general public. He had to see that the parties in a case in the Divorce Court in which a decree nisi had been granted conducted themselves properly until the end of the six months which usually elapse before decrees are made absolute.

A MESSAGE TO THIN, WEAK, SCRAWNY FOLKS

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and protruding point. Your druggist has Sargol, or can get it from his wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervousness, dyspepsia, and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

Giant's Skeleton.

An interesting discovery has been made at Dysart, County Louth. Excavating excavations two men unearthed three human skeletons in separate graves. The skeletons were completely encased with stones. The skull of one skeleton was entire, and measured 12 inches from the crown to the chin. The leg bones were abnormally large, and altogether the skeleton appeared to be that of a person 10 feet high. The teeth were also very large, and the remains are supposed to be those of a prehistoric age.

A Wedding Present.

A widower in Scotland proposed to and was accepted by a widow whose husband had died but a month or two previously.

To celebrate the occasion he asked the widow's daughter what she would like for a present. She wanted nothing, she said, but being pressed to name something she replied:

"Well, if you want to spend some of your siller you might put up a headstone to my father." — London Telegraph.

In "In the Matter of a Private" Kipling tells how an English soldier in India goes suddenly crazed and shoots up his regiment. Recently it happened in Peshawar barracks, and three fell dead before the lunatic himself was shot.

Highest grade beans kept whole and mealy by perfect baking, retaining their full strength. Flavored with delicious sauces. They have no equal.

High Hats in England.

There is a dispute as to whether the top hat is going, gone or coming back again, for there are vested—and frock coated—interests in its survival. "The other day," says a correspondent from a southern suburb, "a man rang the bell; he wore a frock coat and a top hat, and he asked if he might trim the hedge." A curious inversion of dress. For the owner of the hedge has discarded both these emblems of prosperity.—London Chronicle.

Bees Like the Work.

Rev. J. W. P. Silvester, vicar of Wembley, Middlesex, Eng., has recently set his face against the use of the word "died" on tombstones in his churchyard, and allows only such expression as "at rest," "sleeps," and "passed away."

A WONDER WORKER

"It heals like magic," is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY, JUNE 2, 1914

LOCAL CONSERVATIVE NOMINATION CAPURED BY A DARK HORSE

R. J. Soden, Successful at Convention, Defeating the Present Member E. A. Peck by a Vote of 86 to 79 After a Scrappy Convention

RESULT A SURPRISE

Last evening's convention of the West Peterborough Conservative Association uncovered a dark horse candidate for the nomination in the person of Robert J. Soden, book-seller, who when the smoke of battle had rolled away, was found to be in possession of enough votes to give him the preference over E. A. Peck, the present member. The vote was 86 to 79 in favour of the new seeker after Legislative honours, and the result seems to be a surprise to the majority of the Conservative party, as well as to the city and county at large. Whether the decision of the convention delegates as expressed by their votes last night is a correct indication of the feeling of the Conservative party as a whole or only represents a certain section, remains to be seen, but a strong rumour has it that the name of E. A. Peck may yet be found on the ballot paper when June 29th rolls around.

That many stalwarts of the Conservative party are not satisfied with the verdict was plainly apparent last night. After the result was announced there was no attempt to make the nomination unanimous, as is customary in such cases. Many of the Peck supporters left the hall refusing to listen to Mr. Soden's address, and one of them shouted "We don't want to hear anything from you" as he disappeared from view.

There was a scrappy tone about the meeting all the way through. There were one hundred and sixty-five present, who were qualified to vote, and in addition many were there who were not delegates. The applause that greeted any mention of Mr. Peck's name was vociferous, but it was noticed that much of the enthusiasm was supplied by the non-delegates, and that among those qualified to vote the feeling was pretty evenly divided.

Mr. Jas. Kendry, president of the Association, presided, and with him on the platform were the other officers of the Association, and Mr. Jas. Thompson, M.L.A. for East Peterborough.

After the minutes of the meeting had been taken as read, the Assistant Secretary R. N. Ruddy read a letter signed by H. B. Cowan and A. B. Cunningham of the City Temperance League, stating the Leaguers' position in regard to the temperance question and the coming elections.

"Take it as read," shouted someone when Mr. Ruddy was half way through.

"Hear, hear," echoed half a dozen more.

"No, go on and read it," came from others.

"Rotten"—yelled somebody else.

Mr. Ruddy finished reading the communication after which it was received on motion of Messrs Webb and Manning.

The Usual Resolutions.

The usual eulogistic resolutions were galloped through in rapid order. One endorsing Premier Borden's work was moved by Geo. Moncrief and P. J. Scollard. Another, paying similar compliments to Sir James Whitney had as its sponsors Dr. Greer and Chas. E. Moore. Harry Garbutt and W. Fisher were responsible for a resolution expressing appreciation of the services of E. A. Peck, and W. H. Moore and T. H. Milburn fathered a similar expression of approval of the work of the Federal member, J. H. Burnham.

Election of Officers.

The election of officers was the next business. The following were chosen:

President—Jas. Kendry.
1st Vice-President—Mayor Buller.
2nd Vice-President—T. H. Milburn.
3rd Vice-President—Rich. Sheehy.
Secretary—Frank Adams.
Assistant-Secretary—R. N. Ruddy.
Treasurer—W. G. Howden.

The following chairmen were selected:

No. I. Ward—John Edgar.
No. II. Ward—Walter Fisher.
No. III. Ward—Jos. Mills.
No. IV. Ward—Ed. Manning.
No. V. Ward—John T. Craig.
North Monaghan—W. G. Howden.
Smith—Chas. E. Moore.
South Harvey—T. Elliott.
North Harvey—Peter Graham.
Ennismore—P. J. Scollard.
Galway—Mr. Dudman.
Cavendish—Alex. Simpson.

A Little Fireworks.

There was a little fireworks over the election of the No. I. Ward chairman.

When nominations were asked for the name of John Edgar was suggested.

"Why should a man be elected chairman who does not live in the ward and who is an entire stranger to the ward?" asked W. S. Robinson.

Samuel Currie Brings Action Against T. Duncan McGregor, Alleging That he Was Unlawfully Seized by Defendant

UNUSUAL CIRCUMSTANCES

Among the interest cases that are docketed to be heard before a jury at the coming sessions of the County Court is the case of Samuel Currie vs. T. Duncan MacGregor. Messrs. Gordon and Widdifield are acting for plaintiff and Messrs. Ruddy and Burnham are representing the defendant.

The plaintiff claims that on Monday, January 18th, 1914, he was attending the funeral of one Mrs. Davenport, at the Little Lake Cemetery.

While plaintiff was at the funeral, defendant assumed to arrest him for stealing an overcoat he was wearing, from a commercial traveller, by name Stairs, and said to the plaintiff in a loud voice, so that a large number of people could hear, "I arrest you in the name of the King," and thereupon took the defendant by the arms and pinioned them behind his back, and without heeding the plaintiff's explanations, forced him into an open express waggon, the name of whose driver is not known to plaintiff, and drove him to the police station, while he was forcibly detained by defendant and police officers there in charge.

The defendant compelled the plaintiff to leave the wagorn, and in the police station and before the Chief of Police, Daniel Thompson, and Detectives Newhall and Meagher, charged and published of the plaintiff that he had stolen the overcoat. The plaintiff, against his will, was detained at the police station for a considerable length of time.

The plaintiff further claims that the defendant did maliciously, and unlawfully, and without justification or excuse, assume to arrest him, and committed an assault upon the plaintiff, as stated above, in total disregard of the injury which would result from such conduct. The defendant is not a policeman, and at the time had not the authority to arrest the plaintiff.

The plaintiff was the owner of the overcoat he was wearing and did not steal it from Stairs.

At the Cemetery in front of several witnesses, it is alleged that the defendant used the words: "He is a thief"; "he stole this overcoat"; "I know the coat," and many other words of similar import, and meaning.

The plaintiff seeks such damages as the court may fix and assess. The defendant denies all the allegations contained in the plaintiff's statement of claim and puts him to the strictest proof thereof. Defendant also claims that he offered an apology after the mistake had been discovered, but plaintiff denies this.

LIBERAL CONVENTION NEXT FRIDAY NIGHT

Riots Are Likely In Paris

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, France, June 2.—That riots are possible following the resignation of the Doumergue Cabinet, was indicated to-day when President Poincare ordered troops now on manoeuvres some miles away to return to Paris at once. It is believed that M. Rene Viviani, the Minister of Public Instruction, will be called upon to form a new cabinet.

POLICE COURT

There were only two drunks at this morning's Police Court. They were each assessed the usual fine of $8 or ten days.

BUILDING PERMITS TOTAL $105,710

Substantial Increase Over May 1913 When Permits Amounted to $78,603—Some of the Larger Items

BUILDING HAS BEEN ACTIVE

The building permits for the month of May totalled $105,710, as compared with $78,603 during May 1913. Building in the city has been decidedly active during the spring months, and it is sincerely hoped that the midsummer will find present conditions well maintained. In the total for May the largest lump permits were for All Saints' Church $10,000, the Catholic Church in East City $20,000, and sixteen house which Mr. H. Baker is constructing at $1,400 each.

Y. M. C. A. CAMPAIGN IS UNDER WAY

Yesterday the Y. M. C. A. opened their financial campaign to raise $4,500, which is needed to carry on the good work of the Association.

A supper was held last evening in the Y at which the canvassers discussed the campaign. Mr. J. H. Connal, president of the Board of Directors, presided. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, chairman of the finance committee, gave a statement of the finances and why the local Association needs the money.

Mr. H. B. Cowan gave an address on citizenship to those present, and C. N. Mason, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. spoke on the methods to be employed in the canvas.

An appeal is being made to the public of Peterborough for financial aid and they will doubtless respond with liberal contributions.

IN REGARD TO RIVERSIDE PARK

In regard to the letter in the Examiner, last night, from "Mercantile League Fan" it might be stated that the owners of Riverside Park offered the Mercantile League the use of Riverside Park for $10 a Saturday, and in addition, offered to contribute $2 of this sum to paying umpires. Eight dollars a Saturday does not seem to be a prohibitive price for the use of such a splendid park and "Mercantile Fan's" communication leaves a wrong impression.

THE WORK OF RECOVERING BODIES SLOWLY PROGRESSING

H. M. S. Essex and Government Steamers Are Patrolling the Neighbourhood of Tragedy---Enquiry Will Not be Proceeded With Until Arrival of Lord Mersey.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

QUEBEC CITY, June 2.—The St. Lawrence River is slow in giving up its dead. Only five more bodies have been picked up in 24 hours, although the bluejackets from H. M. S. Essex and the sailors from the Government vessels, as well as special constables and watchers on shore, have been patrolling the waters and coasts ever since the Empress of Ireland went down, and the first [illegible] harvest of bodies was brought in. Experts do not expect more bodies will come to the surface until the vessel is raised or blown up. The admiralty divers and government surveyors are working around the wreck to-day, and it is likely that divers will go down to investigate this afternoon. The report that the funnels of the Empress are visible at low tide is untrue. She is lying on her side with some ten fathoms of water above her.

OTTAWA, June 2—The bill empowering the Government to appoint a commission of three with a representative of the British authorities upon it to make a thorough investigation of the sinking of the Empress of Ireland passed through the House of Commons in the record time of seven minutes, this morning. Quebec should be the place for the inquiry, said Sir Wilfrid.

We propose to send Hon. G. E. Perley to England to discuss Senate representation and for other purposes said Premier Borden.

"Anything about naval affairs?" asked Sir Wilfrid.

"My right honourable friend is very interested in naval affairs," said the Premier; "I can assure him that they will be discussed if the necessity arises."

"If the emergency arises," corrected Sir Wilfrid.

"No, 'necessity'," retorted the Premier, smiling.

OTTAWA, June 2. — The Canadian party which after the loss of Stefannson's ship, Karluk, travelled over ice to Wrangle Island, will be marooned there until late in July or August, and must depend on Russian or United States vessels for their rescue, was the information given to the house this morning by the Minister of Marine.

Mr. Hazen stated that the Government had communicated with the governments of Russia and the United States asking what could be done to help the Canadian scientists.

TORONTO, June 2 — Frank Wilson, a well-known Torontonian, is dead, practically of broken heart as a result of the sad sights attendant upon the Empress wreck. On Saturday he was in Quebec and he visited the death-house where the victims were laid out. The sight, especially that of a mother with her baby clasped tightly to her breast, so terribly affected him that he wept continuously till he died here. He came home on the train Sunday night and on his arrival the doctors said he was suffering from severe heart failure. He passed away soon afterwards.

MR. ROWELL COMING TO CITY ON JUNE 18TH

Mr. R. W. Rowell, K. C., leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, will speak at a mass meeting to be held on Thursday evening, June 18th, in the Grand Opera House. Further announcement will be made in a few days in connection with the visit of Mr. Rowell.

DAMAGES CLAIMED

A writ has been issued by Messrs. Peck, Kerr and McElderry for Wm. Mills of Dummer against Chas. W. Munn, and Ezekiel Munn of the Township of Belmont.

The plaintiff claims $305.12, being the amount due him for a promissory note, and interest thereon at 6 p.c. The note was dated 18th February, 1913, and made payable one year after date. The plaintiff also claims $25 costs.

THE FORMAL OPENING

Lt. Col. Clegg Officiated in Place of Minister of Militia Who Was Unable to Be Present

CITIZENS' RIFLE CLUB

On account of the inability of Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes to be present in the city yesterday afternoon to open the new rifle ranges, Col. Clegg, commander of the 57th Regiment took his plac and officially opened the ranges which are situated about a mile east of the Lift Locks.

A large number of men from the regiment went out to practice on the new ranges which are will situated and equipped. There are targets at intervals from 100 to a 1000 yards.

Before the opening a luncheon was held in the Armouries at which there were the officers of the regiment and a number of the leading citizens.

An endeavour is being made to organize a citizens' rifle club in which there must be forty members. They will use the new ranges, and the government will supply them with rifles and ammunition.

Presented Flowers Royal Visitors

An interesting incident of the visit of the Duke of Connaught, yesterday, was the presentation of bouquets to the Duchess and Princess Patricia as the Royal party came down Burnham Street, on their way back from the lift lock. Two little daughters of Judge Huycke ran out as the cars approached and made the presentation. Miss Rosamond presenting a bouquet of iris bloom to the Duchess, while Miss Audrey tendered an offering of forget-me-nots to the Princess. Both bouquets were graciously received.

AMUSING INCIDENT

An amusing incident occurred yesterday morning, when their Royal Highnesses were looking over the Armouries. The Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia were sitting down, talking when a small boy, the son of one of our prominent citizens stole between their chairs and started talking to them. In the midst of the conversation he pulled a chew of gum from his mouth and started rolling it between his hands and then walked off. This greatly amused the Royal visitors who were delighted at the actions of the child.

C.M.B.A. MUST RAISE RATES

Senate Bill to Permit Increase Met by Objections But Order Would Face Insolvency if Authority Withheld

C.M.B.A. MADE REQUEST

OTTAWA, June 1. — The Senate Bill to permit the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association to increase its rates was reported by the House Committee on Banking and Commerce to-day. The necessity of the increase has been pointed out by actuaries and by the Department of Insurance, but there was some question as to whether or not the matter had been brought to the attention of the members of the association, although the request was made last August by the C.M.B.A. convention. Several branches have since protested against the increase, and Major Sharp, M.P., introduced an amendment that the act go not into effect until it has been approved at a general meeting called for the purpose. Col. Hugh Clark, M.P., saw no necessity for this as the new rates had to go into effect, or the insurance branch of the society go into liquidation. The Minister of Finance read a memorandum by the Insurance Department which showed that the national fraternal tables would have to go into effect or the department would be obliged to warn the public that the society was actuarially insolvent, or cancel its license. The amendment was lost and the bill reported.

AN AUSTRALIAN SINGER

Scotch Ballads Her Favourites

The more one studies the biography of eminent musicians, whether composers or artists, the more the universality of the divine art is emphasized. No one country or clime seems ever to have been able to have a monopoly of music. In far-off Melbourne, Autralia, Nellie Mitchell Melba, was born. Her musical career was determined early in life and she gave up the family name of Mitchell when she made her debut after studying with Marchesi in Paris. Her debut in Brussels in "Rigoletto" was the occasion when the name of "Melba," suggestive of Melbourne, her native city, was first used. In European musical centres her voice captivated her hearers, whether cultivated or uncultivated in music. Her American tours were successive triumphs, and when the enthusiasm of the audience was at its height there was a swelling of hearts when her beautiful tones rendered "Robin Adair" or "Mary of Argyle."

"Robin Adair" and "Mary of Argyle" are both to be found in "Heart Songs," the famous song book now being offered by this paper at what might be called the price of printing. We cannot endorse too emphatically the wonderful opportunity to obtain a song collection that will give pleasure for years, for practically the publisher's cost.

DELEGATES TO CONFERENCE

Peterborough Methodists will be represented at the conference in Napanee, which is being held this week, and during the first part of next, by the Revs. J. N. Clarry, E. G. Peever and C. E. Cragg, as well as a number of lay delegates from the Methodist Churches of the City. The Revs. E. G. Peever and J. N. Clarry leave to-day for Napanee. The Rev. Mr. Cragg went to that town yesterday, and the Rev. Mr. Wilson of Pontypool, (representative to the stationing committee), and the Rev. Mr. Thompson of Lakefield, have already come and were at the meeting of the Stationing Committee which was held yesterday in Napanee?

The conference will open to-morrow and will likely break up a week from to-day. It is an exceedingly important gathering, owing to the fact that the General Conference of the Methodist Church, which is held every four years, meets in Ottawa, in September next. The recommendations from the Bay of Quinte conference to the General conference will therefore be presented at the General Conference this year.

The conference will open to lay delegates on Thursday morning, and the election of the President of the Conference for the coming year will be th first matter before the conference then. From the George Street Church Messrs. S. R. Armstrong, C. S. Thompson and A. V. Overman are the lay delegates and from the Charlotte Street Church the lay delegates are Messrs. W. G. Morrow and R. J. Kidd.

"CONSERVATIVE" NOMINATION.

The so-called Conservetive nominating convention held in the Conservatory of Music Hall last night, indicates that the party is prepared to put up a vigorous fight, if we are to judge from the lively character of the preliminary set-to. As was expected, and no doubt as arranged by the party managers, or the manipulators into whose hands the Conservative party has fallen, Mr. R. J. Soden was given the nomination. Mr. Peck was slated for retirement, as Mr. Bradburn had been before his nomination. Changing representatives seems to have become a fixed habit with the party, or its controlling element in West Peterborough. Mr. Bradburn, and after him Mr. Peck, had only the brief glory of one term, and even Mr. Peck's reign is cut short by the Whitney government bringing on the elections nearly two years before the maturity of the parliamentary term — a justifiable course as a matter of tactics, in view of the increasing hostility of the people to the reactionary and stand-still policy of the government. Herein we have the explanation of the short shrift West Peterborough Conservatives give their representatives. This is not to be imputed as a fault to the latter. No matter how personally fit and efficient they may be they find their hands tied and themselves reduced to representative cyphers. They are individually powerless to give satisfactory representation as supporters of a government chronically hostile to progressive measures and insistently-demanded reforms. In like manner the new candidate's reign will be short if he is elected, which he may be by the operation of an automatic section of the electorate, which has turned over the work of thinking and holding opinions to a party machine, or the machine of a section of the party. Of Mr. Soden, the nominee, personally there is little to criticise, but as a politician he has rapidly learned the game. He poses in the matter of policy on false pretenses. He declares himself in favour of the abolition of the bar, and in this regard cuts himself loose from his party, whose policy as expressed by its leaders, conforms to the intimacy of its relations with the liquor traffic. In this matter Mr. Soden, if elected, will be powerless. He will, as a supporter of a government with a keep-the-bar policy, be as powerless to give effect to his professed abolish-the-bar sentiments as a delegate to a Baptist convention would be to enforce his private opinion that infant baptism by "sprinkling" was the proper way. Mr. Soden may be sincere in his profession of bar abolition, but he is furnishing an excuse for other professed temperance men to vote party rather than principle. Mr. Soden will "sign the pledge" and that will be the excuse for voting the party ticket, with a convenient forgetfulness that any elector voting for a candidate also pledged as a supporter of a government opposed to bar abolition, will be as effectively strengthening the hold of the liquor interests as if he voted for Mr. John Barleycorn himself.

But it is not yet quite certain that Mr. Soden is the acceptable candidate of the best party element. Mr. Peck has been rather cavalierly and discourteously set aside, by the new wing of the Conservative party, and whether he does so or not, he has, humanly regarding the matter, reason to feel resentment. He has been a representative anxious to do as much for West Peterborough as he could do, being a supporter of the Whitney government. He has only served a part of a term and it would be no disregard of fair play and decency to have given him a decent consideration. But it seems to have come to pass that faction has influence to swing the great Conservative party.

A LETTER ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

June 1st, 1914.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—It has been my privilege recently to look over a number of issues of your paper, and a pleasure to note the high standard of matter you furnish your readers.

Your issues of the 19th, 22nd, 23rd and 26th May contained some references to Christian Science which require a word of explanation.

The Toronto Church, mentioned in your paper of the 22nd will cost in the neighbourhood of $80,000.00 for the building. It is improbable that the last dollar will be in the treasury before building operations begin, but it is generally understood that Christian Sciences Churches are not dedicated until they are free from encumbrance. The funds are provided through voluntary contributions alone, the only announcement of the need being the simple statement from the desk, that, the collections on the first Sunday of each month shall be devoted to building.

Referring to "Observer's" letter in May 23rd issue, it is just possible that his "intelligent business mind" may have been engaged with a baseless supposition.

I notice in your issue of the 28th in a Special Despatch from London, Christian Science is referred to in the time-worn way as neither "Christian nor Scientific." This of course raises the question, "What is Christian?" and the Standard Dictionary defines the term thus: "One whose profession and life conform to the teaching and example of Christ." Jesus definition of the term was: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also"; and the standard he gave us to measure ourselves by is "These signs shall follow them that believe; in My name shall they cast out devils; they shall speaq with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." If, judged by these standards Christian Science is not Christian, we would be pleased to be informed of some system which is.

Now, 'Scientific' is defined as being exact, invarjable, demonstrable, etc., and those who understand Christian Science sufficiently to practice it, are unanimous in their conclusion that Christian Science is 'demonstrable and exact' or scientific.

We understand that the Commission whose report is here referred to, was composed of clergymen and physicians, that this Commission in their report did not mention Christian Science, but reported on faith healing, which statement has been later taken to refer to Christian Science.

But, supposing it had been the intent of the Commission to refer to Christian Science in this way, have the Commission anything to offer in the way of either religion or medicine that is 'Christian' or 'scientific' as these terms are defined above? If so, the world waits.

Thanking you for giving space to this communication, I remain,

Very sincerely yours,

G. W. Allan.

"I WILL BE BRAVE; I AM A SCOUT."

Boy Scouts lined the roadway from his house to the churchyard when the funeral took place the other day at Ickleford, England, of Cyril Bruce Ellis, the boy who, when fatally injured by a motor omnibus at Hitchin, said: "I will be brave; I am a Scout."

The coffin was covered with the Union Jack, on which were placed the dead Scout's accoutrements, and borne to the grave on a Scouts' trek waggon, escorted by his comrades of the First Ickleford Troop. At the graveside many tears were shed.

Had The Storstad The Right-of-Way In River?

If Her Statement of Position is Supported it Seems So—Empress' Captain Was Obeying the Law—Situation is Confusing to the "Land Lubber."

Starboard is the right hand side of a ship looking toward the prow or bow; opposed to port or larboard.

Contrary to what might be expected the collier Storstad, with her 10,000 odd tons of coal under hatches, had the right of way over the Empress of Ireland, with 1,400 souls on board.

That is, of course, if the statement of the Storstad's people is established. In the particular upon which the right of way hinges the statement has not yet been challenged.

The Storstad's statement is:

"The vessels sighted each other when far apart. The Empress of Ireland was seen off the port bow of the Storstad. The Empress of Ireland's green or starboard light was visible to those on the Storstad. Under these circumstances the rules of navigation gave the Storstad the right of way."

This contention is correct. Marine law—Revised statutes of Canada, chapter 79, art. 10—says:

"When two steam vessels are crossing, so as to involve risk of collision, the vessel which has the other ON HER OWN STARBOARD SIDE shall keep out of the way of the other."

The Empress had the Storstad on her starboard side, for Capt. Kendall first sighted her bearing one point on the starboard bow, and then four points on the starboard bow.

This right-of-way is modified by a note to article 21, which says: "When, in consequence of thick weather or other causes, such vessel finds herself so close that collision cannot be avoided by the action of the giving-way vessel alone, she also shall take such action as will best aid to avert the collision." Also article 16: "A steam vessel hearing, apparently forward of her beam, the fog-signal of a vessel, the position of which is not ascertained, shall, so far as the circumstances of the case admit, stop her engines and then navigate with caution until danger of collision is over."

The Rule of the Road.

The position of the Storstad is told in the homely rule:

"If on your port bow is seen
A steamer's starboard lamp of green,
There's not much for you to do,
For green to port keeps clear of you."

But the Empress' duty is shown in this bit of verse from the rule of the road:

"If red to starboard should appear,
It is your duty to keep clear,
To act as judgment says is proper,
To port or starboard, back or stop her."

Capt. Kendall knew this, and "stopped her"; at the moment of impact, he ordered his engines ahead, to get out of the way if possible; but why he also ordered his helm aport, which would turn his vessel towards the Storstad, is not very clear. It might have thrown their courses nearer parallel, and lessened the shock of contact.

Couldn't Stop the Gap.

"As for the contention that the Storstad should have kept going ahead and plugged up the hole she made with her bows," said a sailor to-day, "it all very well in theory, but mighty unlikely in practice."

"When iron steamers ram one another they make ragged rents, not the sort of hole your thumb would make in butter. The Storstad would rebound from the shock anyway, unless she had cut more than half way through the Empress. Her engines, reversed to minimize or avoid the collision, would pull her out of the gap before they could be started ahead again, and she would probably make a second breach instead of plugging the first."

Confusion in Signals.

Then comes the question: Was the whole tragedy of the Empress of Ireland caused by confusion attached to the signal code authorized by the Revised Statues of Canada, Chapter 79?

Capt. Kendall says:— "The fog came on and the lights of the Storstad disappeared, so I ran at full speed astern and stopped my ship. At the same time I blew three blasts on the whistle, meaning "I am going full speed astern."

Article 15, section E, of the chapter quoted says:

"A vessel when towing, a vessel employed in laying or in picking up a telegraph cable, and a vessel under way which is unable to get out of the way of an approaching vessel through being not under command, or unable to manoeuvre as required by these rules? shall . . . . . at intervals of not more than two minutes, sound three blasts in succession, viz.: one prolonged blast, followed by two short blasts."

This was not the signal given by Capt. Kendall. He gave three whistles in conformity with article 28 of the code, which says:

Sound signals for vessels in sight of one another:

When vessels are in sight of one another a steam vessel under way, in taking any course authorized or required by these rules, shall indicate that course by the following signals on her whistle or siren, viz.:

One short blast to mean, "I AM DIRECTING MY COURSE TO STARBOARD."

Two short blasts to mean, "I AM DIRECTING MY COURSE TO PORT."

Three short blasts to mean, "MY ENGINES ARE GOING FULL SPEED ASTERN."

THE STORSTAD'S ANSWER.

"The Storstad answered with one prolonged blast," Capt. Kendall's story continued. Now what did the Storstad's one prolonged blast mean? Was is, "I AM DIRECTING MY COURSE TO STARBOARD?" or was it simply a fog signal in obedience to article 15, section (a), which says:

"In fog, mist, or falling snow . . . a steam vessel having way upon her shall sound, at intervals of not more than two minutes A PROLONGED BLAST."

"I then," continues Captain Kendall, "stopped my engines and blew two long blasts, meaning, "My ship is under way, but stopped."

This is quite in conformity with Section B of Article 15, which says:

"A steam vessel under way, but stopped and having no way upon her shall sound at intervals of not more than two minutes two prolonged blasts, with an interval of about one second between them."

But could the Storstad, in the confusion, or in the peculiar acoustic conditions of the fog, have taken the "two prolonged blasts" for the two short ones, signifying, "I am directing my course to port?"

Which?

Did the Storstad mean "I am directing my course to starboard?" or did the Storstad give this in conformity with the rule "A steam vessel having way upon her shall sound, at intervals of not more than two minutes, "a prolonged blast?" Probably the latter; but the difference between "short" and "long" in whistle blasts is not always very noticeable. A "short blast" is defined in the code as a blast of about one second's duration. The "prolonged blast" is defined as from four to six seconds duration. Three seconds make all the difference.

INAUGURAL TRIP OF THE "NORONIC" THE EMPRESS OF THE INLAND SEAS

Northern Navigation Company's New Steamer Unquestionably the Finest Passenger Ship on the Great Lakes.

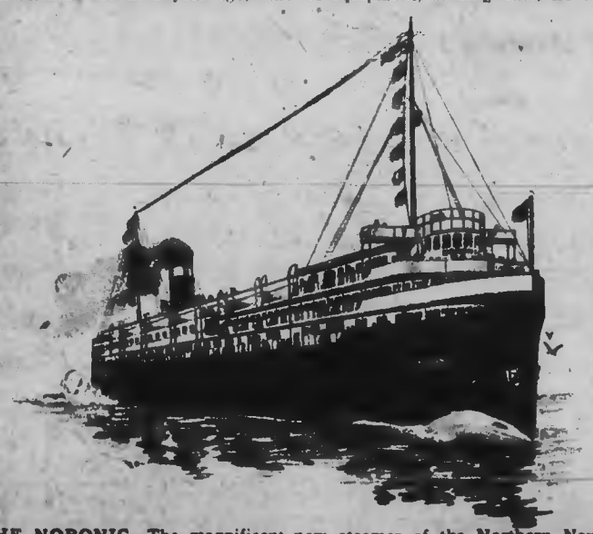
THE QUEEN OF LAKE LINERS

The Grand Trunk Railway and the Northern Navigation Company, the synonym of the "Grand Trunk Route," make a strong team as demonstrated by the success of their co-operation in making the virgin voyage of the "Noronic," a splendid demonstration of many things—of the magnificent possibilities of the route, of the splendid equipment of both rail and water facilities, and the unchallenged superiority of the new Noronic to everything hitherto achieved in the way of internal steamship navigation. The two companies are organically distinct; but they have a reciprocal interplay of interest—a working arrangement by which they mutually profit. The "Noronic" simply forms the connecting link between the sundered western and eastern systems of the Grand Trunk, in summer. The rapidly-developing traffic, due to the opening of 3,300 miles of the Grand Trunk Pacific, together with increased traffic movement, originating in the east, made ampler steamship service imperative, and the non-pareil Noronic, whose inaugural trip was made last Saturday, is the splendid and satisfactory answer to the demand.

Launched about a year ago, the work of finishing and fitting was completed after a year of assiduous application a few days ago. Accordingly the Grand Trunk Railway and the Northern Navigation Company put their heads — with brains in them—together, and jointly organised the inaugural voyage of the Noronic from Sarnia on Saturday, May 30th, with distinguished men as guests and witnesses to a new triumph of naval construction in Canada, and of internal water navigation enterprise.



THE NORONIC—The magnificent new steamer of the Northern Navigation Company, (Grand Trunk Route), whose inaugural trip on May 30 and 31st, is referred to in the columns of this issue.

The Guests.

The party invited to take the trip was composed of representatives of the Canadian Steamship Lines, Montreal, the custodians of eastern internal navigation interests; prominent officials of the Grand Trunk Railway from all its many divisions and representatives of the prominent newspapers of Canada and the United States. Special and specially excellent arrangements were made to convey the party from widely divergent points to Sarnia and return them to their respective homes after the trip.

The party on the land-locked guests of the Grand Trunk, and the royal manner in which one of the greatest railway systems of the world showed its hospitality was typical of the service, day by day that contributes to its popularity and success; while the inaugural trip of the Noronic showed how splendidly it will bridge the wide water stretches between eastern and western railway terminals at Sarnia and Port Arthur, respectively; and in conjunction with the Hamonic and Huronic, adequately solve for some time the problem of the navigation interests of the Grand Trunk route on the Great Lakes.

The Noronic.

When, at noon, on Saturday, the rail party drew up at the wharf in Sarnia, opposite the berth of the Noronic, they were simply astounded to see so imposing and complete a triumph of naval construction majestically reposing upon the breast of land-locked waters in the heart of the continent. The Noronic is a steamship surprise. A traveller, accustomed to ocean journeying, dropped down in an airship at Sarnia wharf upon the Noronic might easily think he had fallen upon some ocean liner. The greyhounds of the Atlantic are somewhat larger; but they do not surpass her in staunchness, steadiness, general seaworthiness and completeness and elegance, and even luxury of equipment, at all points, for comfort of passengers or movement of freight.

In the construction of the Noronic "safety first," the motto of the good old Grand Trunk, has been the watchword of naval architect and builders. A double bottom is fitted four feet, nine inches deep, the full length of the craft; and the hull is divided by eight water-tight transverse bulkheads into nine compartments. Two collision bulkheads, forward, make the Noronic virtually unsinkable. Her length is 385 feet over all. Her six decks of steel—main deck, spar deck, promenade deck, observation deck, boat deck, and hurricane deck—climb upward one hundred feet above the water. Complementary, if not consequent, to her strength, the steamer's steadiness is remarkable, and though her machinery had hardly yet been warmed in actual movement, her 5000-horse-power engines forced her through the water with effortless ease at nineteen miles an hour; and there was such an absence of vibration that one might think the steamer was "hove to" unless by comparison with stationary objects or other craft.

The Interior Arrangement.

The adaptation of the space within this steel-clad environment to the purposes of passengers and travelling comfort and luxury are, in the perfection of composition, material and distribution, in keeping. The appetite developed by lake air made the dining saloon a centre of interest, satisfying both in the gastromonic and æsthetic sense. The cuisine is excellent; the bill of fare, with its varied and splendidly served menu, recherche; while furnishing fitting and decorations are sumptuous, elegance and artistic taste materialized. This dining saloon is 50 by 180 feet in area, occupying the full breadth of beam. Plate glass windows, on both sides, give a full view of the passing scene on sea and shore. It has a seating capacity of 256 guests, served by a capable corps of uniformed coloured waiters.

For Concerts and Dancing.

The observation room occupies the forward part of the same deck. A palm-fenced platform for the steamer's permanent orchestra is so placed as to serve both apartments—the dining saloon during luncheon and dinner, and the other apartment for concerts, dances, etc., so that music from a common centre is provided for both dancing and dining. The acoustics of the observation room are excellent, the orchestra and singing being heard as distinctly at the nautical bow end, 180 feet distant, as at the musical bow end.

Above this deck is found the writing room with card-playing conveniences, etc. From a lobby on the main deck a stair-case leads to the spar deck and social hall where the intelligence department is also situated. A further inspection reveals the same richness and beauty of finish, harmony of decorative design and motif. Elegance and completeness of equipment and furnishing with an eye, at once, to decorative perfection of effect and comfort, and even luxury of passengers, is everywhere in evidence.

The Morpheus Department.

In addition to the ten parlour staterooms, panelled in mahogany, and carpetted in special colours, with private bath, there are about 150 double berth staterooms which command attention and admiration from the unusual features provided for the comfort of passengers. Each stateroom has an individual heating radiator, hot and cold water and berth electric reading lamps. All state rooms are carpetted to correspond with the general scheme of floor upholstering throughout the spar deck. The furniture is English or Queen Anne style, in oak and leather. There are also 100 second-class staterooms equal in the essentials of comfort and convenience with the other staterooms that provide for about 575 passengers. On the same deck will be found barber shop, bath-rooms, lavatories, etc.

Anything like a minute or detailed reference to even the striking features of the Noronic would be too voluminous for newspaper use. It is enough to say that everything that can contribute to the safety, comfort, pleasure and accommodation of its passenger guests has been provided in the planning, construction and interior furnishing, finishing and navigation of the Noronic. All this is enclosed by a wide promenade completely around the vessel, making an ambulatory one-sixth of a mile in length.

The Noronic on Voyage.

The magnificent Noronic was launched from the yards of the Western Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company of Port Arthur, on June 2nd, 1913; and when one considers the beauty and elaborate completeness of her interior finish, one can easily realise why it has taken an army of men nearly a year to make her ready for her inaugural trip of Saturday, May 31st, and ready for the first trip of her regular summer route from Sarnia to Port Arthur and Duluth, on Friday, June 5th. The round voyage, outward and return, is made in five and one-half days, and $40 for the round trip, over some of the most beautiful water scenery the good God has created, in one of the best nautical creations of man, is reasonable. On her regular route, between Sarnia, Port Arthur and Fort William and Duluth and return the Noronic will connect with the Grand Trunk Pacific from all points in Western Canada. The gross tonnage of the Noronic is 6,905 tons, with accommodation for 600 passengers, 3,500 tons of freight and a speed of nineteen miles an hour.

The Effect.

The placing of the Noronic in commission puts the Northern Navigation Company in possession of a fleet of steamers, unique and unsurpassed upon the inland seas of this continent. The Noronic, the new consort of the Huronic and Hamonic, will ply upon one of the most delightful water-courses of the continent, and it makes possible a "fresh-water sea voyage" unexcelled in scenic beauty and variety, with a comfort and even luxury, that meet all the popular demands of the modern development of travel de luxe.

A Credit to Canada.

As Hamlet said of the play, the Noronic's "the thing," and no apology is offered for extended notice of her nautical and navigatory character While materially and æsthetically and in all other essential ways she is the last word in naval construction, equipment and service, she has another claim to distinction, of which Canadians may well be proud. She is Canadian from keelson to truck—from her ballast to her wireless. Canadian enterprise, Canadian capital, Canadian skill of design, Canadian material and Canadian-developed resources made the Noronic. She is as much a triumph of Canadian construction, skill, and Canadian shipbuilding capability as she is of beautiful lines, sea-worthiness and general steamship superiority; and it is with pride and honest fervour that Canadians can wish the Noronic "bon voyage," and a continuity of success in keeping with the great success of her

Inaugural Trip.

When all the Noronic's guests were aboard, and hospitably and comfortably housed, she started upon her maiden voyage amid the salutations of the throngs of Sarnia citizens and the hearse greetings of the sirens of the ships in the harbour, and the whistles of the locomotive engines.

The first order of action was a taste of the larder of the Noronic, an inauguration of a hospitality that all through the voyage, seemed to spring from an obsession of officials and crew that the serious business of the occasion was eating and drinking, smoking, and being merry.

With the splendid luncheon splendidly served in the splendid saloon of the Noronic, her gastronomic stock went soaring. And everybody got a taste. Figuratively, a key of the larder and wine vaults was put on the same ring as the state room key and all through the stay aboard everybody was the subject of unremitting solicitude for his or her comfort and enjoyment.

With the smooth and pulseless glide of a spirit the Noronic passed down the St. Clair to Detroit. Here she "tied up" for an hour and a half, while the passengers enjoyed the treat of the Railway and Navigation Company officials, a motor drive through beautiful Detroit—especially her magnificent 750-acre, water-belted park—Belle Isle.

Then she slipped her cable and set off for a night cruise on Lake Erie, Cleveland-wards. From 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. the steamer's guests transformed an "informal dinner" into an internal dinner with the same delightful experience of fullness that was the accompaniment of the luncheon. Of course the orchestra helped good digestion wait on appetite, and also contributed to the social and grateful element, and introduced what some thought a dash of politics by playing the "Wearing of the Green," a colour of recent new vogue; but this was only a prelude to a musical and metrical laudation of the Noronic and the officials of the two companies. Some admirer, whose feelings were too deep for utterance, except through a poetical outlet, had voiced the sentiments of everybody to the air of "The Wearing of the Green." While its poetical merits might admit of difference of opinion, the spirit of the song and the vim with which it was sung by the company, led by Mr. Bevans Giles the noted Drummond "habitant" reader of Montreal, showed that it expressed their sentiments, and was indeed more truth than poetry. As a souvenir of the occasion and, by the way, not a bad bit of advertising, it may be reproduced, as follows:

Tune—The Wearing of the Green.

The Noronic, The Noronic,
The pride of Inland Seas,
With her colours all a-flying,
In the gentle summer breeze;
With the Presidents, Vice-Presidents,
And Managers on hand,
You can bring your wife and bet your life
This trip it will be grand.

CHORUS.

The Noronic, The Noronic,
The flagship of the Fleet,
The Hamonic and Huronic,
Make a Line that can't be beat,
With the Grand Trunk for connection,
Our arrangements are perfection,
And you'll find that thus every section
Of our service is complete.

There is E.J.C. and G.T.R. and H.H.G. and Others,
And M.E.S. and Mr. N. and also Mr. Carruthers,
They assemble to pay a welcome
And they hope you'll understand
That on this day in the month of May,
The Press are in command.

CHORUS—

So leave behind your worries,
And bring along a smile,
Let others know you're living
And that living is worth while.
You may dance the latest encore,
To music that will please,
And enjoy your trip, on the Noronic,
The Empress of the seas.

CHORUS—

Then the decks were cleared for action—by the removal of the rug carpets and a delightful informal dance was on till midnight.

The Last Day.

Sunday morning found the Noronic with her nose turned Windsorward; then breakfast, then the singing by the Manchester Male Quartette of Galt, of "Lead Kindly Light," other hymns of similar character, and splendidly given recitations of Drummond's habitant poems by Mr. Bevans Giles, and also recitations of some of his own poems by Mr. Sam P. Kiser of Chicago. Then luncheon, then Windsor; then the embarking of the happy party for the East on a Grand Trunk special of twelve coaches and a splendid farewell banquet on the train, a fitting finale of a continuous round of feasting and favour, from the time the party boarded the train on Saturday morning till they put foot on it for distribution over the wide stretch of country between Windsor and Montreal.

REPORTS OF THE ANNUAL MEETING

Presented at St. Luke's Girls' Auxiliary Last Evening

The concluding meting of the Girls' Auxiliary of St. Luke's Church was held last evening, the President, Mrs. Beauclerc, being in the chair. The delegates' report of the annual diocesan convention of the Auxiliary, held at Toronto, recently, was read by Miss Clara Adams, Mrs. Beauclerc and Miss Adams having represented St. Luke's. A very comprehensive resume of the addresses given at the Convention and of the work accomplished was presented and proved and both interesting and instructive.

It was decided, next season to inaugurate a mission study class in connection with the auxiliary.

At the close of the meeting last evening dainty refreshments were served.

REGULAR MEETING OF EPWORTH LEAGUE

The regular meeting of the Epworth League of the George Street Church was held last night and was well attended. The meeting was in charge of the Christian Endeavour Department and the topic was taken by Mr. Mole who gave some very practical suggestions for the improvement of the league.

Practically all the members of the league are selling tickets for the moonlight excursion on June 9th, and preparations are being made to give all a most enjoyable time.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE MRS. O'LEARY

The funeral of the late Mrs. Wm. O'Leary of Bridgenorth was held this morning from the family residence, Bridgenorth, to St. Peter's Church and Cemetery. The funeral cortege left the residence about eight o'clock and arrived at the Church shortly after nine. The number present testified to the esteem in which the late Mrs. O'Leary was held by all who knew her. A sad feature of the demise of the late Mrs. O'Leary was that her husband, who had charge of the floating bridge at Chemong, predeceased her about five weeks ago.

The FLORENCE AUTOMATIC OIL COOKING STOVE

How It Works—

Oil seeks its level—from tank to feed pipe. A turn of the control lever lifts the burner above the level, out of the oil. No oil—no flame. Another turn. The burner is lowered into the oil zone—a full supply of oil. A third turn of the lever. The burner is in an intermediate position—a limited supply of oil and a low flame.

The Florence gives you an instant fire—and of any degree of heat that you require. No overheated kitchen—no smoke—no smell—no labor—no delay.

ABOUT EGGS

Eggs which have been fertilized constitute the greatest proportion of the inferior stock which, when examined, proves unfit for food. It is not necessary that these shall have remained for a time under a broody hen, a temperature of 70 degrees being, in itself, sufficient to cause the germ to commence to grow. If the heat is constant the development of the chick will continue, but if it ceases or is intermittent, putrefaction at once sets in and the egg becomes bad. On the other hand infertile eggs which are free from the active germ cell, do not, under ordinary conditions, deteriorate seriously.

Farmers and others selling eggs for market are recommended to kill off or dispose of the male birds after the breeding season. As a result of their remaining with the flock after June 1st, Canadian farmers lose each year at least a million dollars, cubated eggs in the produce which is marketed. The fact that the best trade in many cities in Canada now offers the premium of from one to five cents a dozen, for non-fertilised eggs, suggests an additional financial consideration which but few can afford to overlook.

Local Conservative Association

"This election is not going to be a walkover. I'll nominate Alderman Saunders."

"I've lived in the ward five years," retorted Mr. Edgar.

Alderman Saunders settled the matter by retiring in favour of Mr. Edgar. The other chairmen were amicably decided upon. Just at this stage a voice from well back in the hall asked who would take Sir James Whitney's place in the event of his resigning. "If it's the same man who was in charge the last session he doesn't get my vote," the speaker wound up emphatically.

Preliminary Jockeying.

The election of officers over, the convention settled back for the real business of the night, the choosing of a candidate. When nominations were called for T. E. Bradburn nominated E. A. Peck, the present member. The nomination was seconded by H. C. Winch and was warmly received.

R. J. Soden was nominated by ex-Ald. Jos. atten and J. W. Lowes, and another round of applause followed.

T. E. Bradburn opened fire when he asked if men whose names were not on the voters' list had a right to act as delegates.

Chairman Kendry ruled that unless men were on the voters' list they should not vote as delegates.

As one of those affected by the ruling, happened to be Mr. Soden's brother-in-law, the candidate presumptive naturally put up a fight. He claimed that men who were good Conservatives and who would be on the list at the coming election were properly qualified to act as delegates. However he yielded to the decision of the chair.

Round No. 2.

Mr. Soden himself was the aggressor in Round No. 2.

May I ask how many certificates were given to North Monaghan?" he asked.

"Sixteen," replied Secretary Adams.

"There should only be five from each division and there are only two divisions in the township," answered Mr. Soden, and his camp followers applauded vigourously.

R. M. Waddell said that the population of North Monaghan warranted three polling divisions and that there would be three at the coming elections.

"Mr. Waddell has not acted fairly with me in this matter," said Mr. Soden. "I was talking with him a few days ago and he said that it was too bad that North Monaghan had not more delegates and that he had intended years ago to see that there were more divisions there, but that it had never been done."

Secretary Adams informed the meeting that at a meeting of chairmen it had been decided unanimously that North Monaghan was entitled to a larger representation.

The matter was discussed back and forward for a while, but delegates began to howl "Go ahead with the business," and finally the voting commenced with Messrs. Robt. Fair, S. T. Medd and W. F. Nelson acting as scrutineers.

The voting process took a long time and the counting a still longer period so that it was 11:30 before the result was finally known.

Mr. Thompson's Address.

In the interval Mr. Jas. Thompson, the Legislative member for East Peterborough, who was enthusiastically received, gave a short address. He opened by defending the Government for holding the election in June, claiming that the present month was most suitable for all concerned. As to the result of the campaign, he declared that there was no question of the return to power of the present government. The most ardent Liberals, he said, did not expect to see the Liberal cause successful.

There was considerable agitation among the Liberals, the East Peterborough member declared, as to who would succeed Sir James Whitney. Sir James, he said, was no older than Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and yet the question of Sir Wilfrid's successor never seemed to bother the Liberal press. Sir James would lead the Government in the present campaign, and also in the next session.

Mr. Thompson stated that the Liberal party wanted to talk abolition of the bar, to the exclusion of all other issues. Temperance, he admitted, was a vital question. Every man wanted to see the evils of drink minimized, but the question was as to the best method. General Booth had stated that Ontario led the world in its regulation of the liquor traffic. The Whitney temperance policy was local option, with abolition of the bar and shop licenses whenever they thought public opinion was ready for such a step.

Mr. Thompson said that during the last fifteen years of the Ross Government, every village that had passed a local option by-law had gone back to the license system. The reason was, the speaker claimed, that the government at that time had refused to give them any assistance and had winked at violations of the law. Now county after county, and township after township, were coming into the dry area because they knew the law would be enforced.

In conclusion Mr. Thompson remarked that the bi-lingual school question was one that would be very lightly touched upon by the leader of the Opposition, but nevertheless would have to be settled in the next twelve months.

Mayor Buller.

Mayor Buller, who was greeted with cries of "How's the Duke," spoke briefly. He said that he had been proud that day to be Mayor of Peterborough, one of the fairest cities of the Dominion, and to ride with the son of one of the best queens that ever sat on the British throne, and the brother of one of the noblest kings that ever ruled he British Empire. His Royal Highness had assured him that he had never had a better reception or had seen a better schedule arranged than in Peterborough. Mayor Buller remarked that no matter which candidate was elected it was the duty of the Conservative party to fall in behind him and see that he was elected.

Mr. R. J. Winch contributed several enjoyable recitations while the ballots were counted, and then the convention waited impatiently until at last thes cutineers appeared.

"Gentlemen, I beg to report from the scrutineers," said Mr. Medd, "that 183 votes have been cast, and that the vote stands 86 for Mr. Soden and 98 for Mr. Peck."

There was a wild cheer from the Soden faction as the significance of the figures sank in while the Peck adherents started to leave the hall.

Candidate's Speech.

"I have a message for you," said the victorious candidate as he mounted the platform. "If you'll just sit down a minute I'll not keep you long."

"We don't want to hear you at all," shouted one man as he disappeared through the door at the rear.

Mr. Soden stated that he had not been seeking the nomination. He had been urged from various sources in the Conservative party to allow his name to go before the convention, but had refused at first to consent. When any one came fault finding about the member he had advised them to go to Mr. Peck and give him a chance. Ten days ago it was announced from the Conservative executive that Mr. Peck had determined to withdraw. He, the speaker, had gone to members of the executive to ask if the report was correct, and had been informed that it was. He had then decided to be a candidate.

"I went to the executive because I thought they knew as much about it as Mr. Peck," replied the speaker.

As far as the Hydro-Electric policy, good roads policy and the general policy of the Whitney Government were concerned, Mr. Soden said that he would be a firm supporter of the Government. In regard to the temperance question he claimed the right to follow the dictates of his own conscience.

A Political Football.

"In the first place the question of temperance should never have been in politics. It has too long been made a football of between the two parties. I, as a man, have my own views. I believe in the abolition of the bar and of the club and shop license, and I will not allow any man to dictate to me where I should stand in this matter. I should prefer such measures to come from my own party, but I claim the right as a man to vote as my conscience dictates."

This brought the convention to a close. There were no cheers for the nominee, or any body else, except the King, and the gathering was on its way out before some one thought of His Majesty, and a belated cheer was given.

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT ST. JOHN'S

An impressive memorial service was held in St. John's Church on Sunday night in connection with the disaster to the Empress of Ireland on Friday last.

Canon Davidson preached an inspiring impressive sermon, and the choir and congregation rendered the solemn music with great effect. The following music was used:: "Crossing the Bar" (Bridge); "Requiem," (Barnby) and appropriate hymns. The service was concluded by the rendering of Chopin's Funeral March, on the organ, by Mr. R. J. Devey.

LINDSAY IN DARKNESS

(Lindsay Post.)

Lindsay was in darkness last night (so far as electricity was concerned), and there was a great demand for lamps, candles, etc., in many homes.

During the early part of the evening the flickering of the lights was an indication that something was wrong, and later in the evening the lights went out altogether. Services were being held at the different churches at the time, and some inconvenience was experienced until lamps and candles were brought into use.

The trouble seems to have emanated at Peterborough, on the Seymour Co.'s main line. An effort was made with a view to receiving sufficient light from the Fenelon Falls plant, but as the Government was building a new dam and as the stop logs were out, this was found impossible.

The Condition Of Bolivar St.

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I notice in your editorial of last Saturday's issue that you wish to interest property owners as well as the City in general to co-operate in beautifying the City.

I would like to draw your attention to one case in particular, regarding the condition of our roads for which the City is responsible, I refer to the west end of Bolivar Street, where you will find not enough room for two rigs to pass each other, owing to a deep gully on either side which in wet weather is filled with water.

The Council have been approached repeatedly to have this thing remedied, but without any satisfaction. This is a source of danger, being from three to four feet lower than the sidewalk, which some day is likely to render the City liable for damages if not attended to.

We in this section have been paying taxes for the past three years and have spent considerable time and money trying to make our property presentable, yet the City does nothing to remove the eyesore.

Let the City do its share of the work and give us a little encouragement to co-operate in this movement.

Hoping you will insert this in your paper so that it may meet the eyes of those interested in making the City beautiful.

Crew Obeyed Officers' Call

Reason Why So Many of the Empress' Crew Were Saved

QUEBEC, June 1.—A strong word of protest was uttered this evening by Capt. Murray, harbourmaster of Quebec, who for many years was commander of various C.P.R. vessels, and until her final fatal voyage was captain of the Empress of Ireland, against criticisms of the crew of the Empress of Ireland in the recent catastrophe. "I hear that there has been a lot of adverse criticism regarding the number of the Ireland's crew saved," said Capt. Murray to The Mail and Empire to-night, "and I want to say a word for these good fellows. It is hard for a landsman to understand the exact circumstances, but there are standing orders that in any emergency, such as a collision, the crew must immediately hasten to their stations at the boats. My information is that the instant Cap. Kendall saw that collision was inevitable he gave the order to the second officer to call all hands to the boats.

"This order was instantly obeyed, and that is why the men were saved. They rushed to the upper decks in an effort to launch the boats, and were tipped off into the sea when the Empress careened after the other vessel backed away.

"The spirit of both officers and crew was shown by the work of the chief officer, Mr. Steede, who marched up in his pyjamas and started chopping the boats free. He was crushed to death by the fall of boxes, hurtling down as the ship lurched. But before he was killed he got several boats cut loose, which later saved a number of people."

Captain Murray stated that there was no doubt many of the Ireland's crew got to their stations and were thrown into the water while trying to do their best to save he passengers. Mr. Jones, the first officer, and Mr. File, the third officer, were actually cutting the lifeboat grips clear with axes, when the final plunge came. Both went down with the ship, but later came up and were saved by the lifeboats they had released, which rescued many others.

Were All Britishers.

"The Empress had just as fine a crew as ever stepped on a ship's deck," said Captain Murray. "They were all Britishers and from what I can find they behaved as British sailors always do on such occasions. In fact it was their quick response to duty that saved their lives, since the disaster came so suddenly that although they were at their posts, they could do nothing more for the passengers."

Captain Murray's tribute to the Ireland's crew was endorsed by Mr. J. W. Langley, an Englishman, now resident at Camford, B. C., who said that the men did everything possible in the few minutes between the crash and the sinking of the Ireland. Mr. Langley remarked that much of the loss of life was caused by the passengers not knowing the ship, and losing their way. Although he knew the vessel well, he had to crawl out legs first through a port hole, dropping clear over to the sea and a moment later was sucked down by the sinking vessel. Being a strong swimmer he rose to the surface and was saved by a lifeboat.

FIRES IN MAY

During the month of May there were 14 fires which damaged property (buildings and contents) to the extent of about $1,000. None of the fires were serious ones. In May, 1913, there were 18 fires with a damage of $1,640.

IT IS SAID TO HAVE RESTORED SIGHT

A recent despatch from Paris says that Dr. Moreau of St. Etienne, has published notes of the results of an operation to restore the sight of an 8-year-old boy. The boy had double cataracts from birth and could hardly distinguish day from night. But he got the consciousness of exterior objects by the sharpening of his other senses to such a degree that he could distinguish the different cows in his father's stable merely by hearing them walk in the barnyard.

After the operation the boy spent eight days in a dark room. Then light was admitted, and every one anxiously awaited the boy's first impressions. But he said nothing and only uttered a few inarticulate cries. The new sensations seemed to be confusing if not actually painful. After a few days more in the dark room he was allowed free sight again; but he showed no emotion, and said that he did not know what various objects were with which he was perfectly familiar previously by touch.

He only recognized the hand of the surgeon when he took it into his own, could tell wine only by smelling it, and so forth. It was some time before he acquired the sense of colour, but as soon as he did so it seemed of supreme importance and overshadowed everything else. Everything that he saw was "black" or "white," according to whether it was turned toward the light or otherwise, and he decomposed everything he saw into colour points, like a silver-point artist.

Fifteen months after he was in the hospital he had not yet learned to read, in spite of the assiduous efforts of the nursing sister to teach him the alphabet. His father then took him home. A year later, when Dr. Moreau saw him there, he had lost most of the ideals he had gained in the hospital, without acquiring many new ones. The case is extraordinary at all points, and the patient seems less able to enjoy life than when he was totally blind.

SLOW PROGRESS IN THE PEACE MEDIATIONS

Special Wire to The Examiner:

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 2.—The mediation proceedings were delayed this morning pending the settlement of questions relating to Mexican representation among the delegates to the mediation conference. Progress has been very slow. It seems apparent that not one definite step towards agreement has really been accomplished, the time having been taken up [illegible] with preliminaries.

Situation Is Tense

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, Ill., June 2.—The situation in railroad circles this morning is extremely tense following the announcement of breaking off of negotiations for the settlement of disputes between the Western Railroads and their locomotive firemen and engineers which were commenced in February last. Seventy-two thousand men are involved directly in addition to thousands in other railroad brotherhoods who might take a hand, if the enginemen went on strike. All roads entering Chicago are interested, and the Grand Trunk, Michigan Central, Pere Marquette and other roads entering Canada would be seriously effected.

BABY HEATH. The little boy that went down with his father, J. L. Heath, on the Empress of Ireland. They had been staying with friends in Canada. The mother and wife in Minnesota is supposed to be still in ignorance of t[illegible] fate.

Elsie Janis Gets 4 Capital Calls

LONDON, June 1. — Elsie Janis, whose wonderful success in the revue at the Palace is still the talk of the town, has received offers to appear in music halls in Berlin, Vienna, Paris and Rome—and given enthusiastic affirmative answers to all four.

Already she speaks French and German fluently and is now studying Italian. Prior to her return to New York next Fall, immediately following the end of her engagement at the Palace, she will make a quick tour of the Continent, playing fortnight engagements in the four cities named.

Miss Janis' decision was the result of the advice of Charles Frohman, who was primarily responsible for her receiving the offers. In an interview in the New York American last week Mr. Frohman declared his intention of championing the cause of American artists and insisted that "genius needs no language in so far as stage geniuses are concerned."

He, himself, tipped off the European managers to extend the offers to Miss Janis and then urged her to accept. Miss Janis's two proteges, Eugene Rodiemich and Valentine Harris, whom she brought from St. Louis, and San Francisco, respectively, and who were to have been in the Palace revue, are now appearing in private entertainments under her management — and the fact that they have refused music hall offers of four figures is an evidence that they are being well paid.

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS

The Customs receipts for the month of May this year, show a decrease of almost 50 per cent., compared with the receipts of the corresponding month of 1913. This is undoubtedly due to the lack of business that has featured as a general fact throughout the whole of the Dominion during the past three months. The figures are:

May, 1914	May, 1913

A. O. F. of District Are Coming Strong June 18

The date of the big A.O.F. excursion to Peterborough has been decided for June 18th. About a dozen towns along the lake front are in this district of the A. O. F. and a big crowd is expected. About 3,000 people will be in Peterborough on that day and a long programme is being arranged. It will easily be one of the largest excursions into the City this year.

ARE YOU GOING TO MUSKOKA THIS SUMMER?

If so take the 10.20 a.m. fast express from Toronto, daily except Sunday, via Grand Trunk Railway, and arrive Muskoka Wharf 1.45 p. m., where direct connections are made with steamers for points on Muskoka Lakes. This train carries Parlour, Library, Buffet car and first-class coaches, and passengers are assured of a comfortable ride along the most interesting route to Muskoka Wharf, which is the origina gateway to the far-famed Muskoka Lakes.

The curative odour of balsam and pine, and the preponderance of water area to land surface, together with the high altitude (1000 feet above the sea), render hay fever an impossible condition and perfect immunity from this annoying ailment is assured.

Return connection is made with train leaving Muskoka Wharf 10.30 a.m., daily, except Sunday, arriving Toronto 2.55 p.m.

Tourist tickets at low fares are now on sale to Muskoka Lakes' points, good for stop-over and valid to return until November 30th, 1914.

If you are contemplating making a trip ask Grand Trunk Agents for full particulars or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont. 14d-122-3w22

COUNCIL WILL MEET TO-NIGHT

The City Fathers met in regular session last night, but the meeting was an unusually brief one. The total business transacted occupied about half a minute of time, and consisted of a motion to the effect that the Council adjourn until to-night. The reason for this was that other meetings (including the Conservative Conventions in the Conservatory) were being held at which several of the Aldermen wished to be present. Those present were Mayor Buller, and Aldermen Saunders, Duncan, Green, Johnston, Anderson and McIntyre. The regular monthly Council meeting will accordingly be held this evening at eight o'clock.

"ONE WHO KNOWS" ON TEMPERANCE

Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,— In reading Sir James Whitney's manifesto to the electors of the province, there is one item which I wish to dispute, and that is by closing the bars is going to cause more bottle drinking and more drinking at home. Now, does Sir James Whitney think he can stuff such rot down sensible people's throats. Not much! Now there is no need of bringing politics into this question, just good common sense, that is all. I claim that the bar is the cause of most of the drinking. You stop the bar and the club drinking and you strike the liquor habit in the most vital spot. Now, take for instance two men walking along the street. One says to the other let us go and have a glass. All right! Now these two men go into the bar-room with the intention of just having two drinks at most, but what happens? When they get there they meet five or six friends, and it is: Come and have something with us. And what is the consequence? Instead of two drinks, perhaps it is six or eight and these two men come away, perhaps intoxicated. It is the social glass that causes the trouble every time.

You can go into any bar-room and take an average of ten men drinking, and not more than one out of the ten would think of going to the store and buying a bottle. The hotelkeeper may say he cannot make it go without the bar. Well, charge up on other things. We will say one man is getting a good dinner for 35 cents when the hotel man says he should have 50 cents. You are in the bar drinking while the other man is having a good meal, and you are helping to pay the difference. He is getting his meal and you are getting the poison. Now, I have been through the mill, and I know what I am talking about. Close the bars and the club drinking and there will not be so much of the poor man $10 or 30 days and the big guns being drawn home in the hacks at two and three o'clock in the morning from right under the policemen's nose and nothing said about it.

One Who Knows.

Lucky Grab By Beavers' First Sacker Resulted In Loss For Petes

With Two on Bases Schneider Nailed Swartling's Sizzling Liner and Cut Off a Chance for a Peterborough Victory

KING IN LIMELIGHT

TORONTO, June 2.—Three runs did the Beavers spot Peterborough at the Stadium yesterday by reason of four errors in the first innings, but they showed that they are a fighting team by coming back with a vengeance and winning 5 to 4. The result was more or less decided on the last hit of the game, and Schneider, Manager Lee's giant first baseman, was the person who sent the fans home in glee.

It was Peterborough's half of the ninth, and they were one run behind. King, the first man up, was out, Murphy to Schneider. Wilcox, however, who had in the previous inning led off with a double only to be left on base, delivered a screeching hit over second base. Things began to grow interesting when he stole second, but Gorman flew out to Loud, who all but doubled Wilcox on a beautiful throw. Kelly was given a base on balls, making two out and men on first and second. Manager Blount sent in Swartling, a substitute first baseman, to bat for Sterling. Swartling, after fouling off several, drilled one down the first base line. Schneider was playing off his bag, but came in like a flash. He reached out and just did grab the ball with his finger tips and made the out on Swartling unassisted. It was a great play and a brilliant ending to an uphill fight made by the Beavers.

Both teams showed a lot of pepper, and played good ball after the first innings. The Beavers seemed unable to do anything right in that session.

Frank Hallinan, a local boy, made his initial debut behind the plate as a Canadian League umpire, and, like the Beavers, got away to a bad start in the first inning, but on the whole his work was very good. Outside of Schneider's great play in the ninth, the other features were Loud's brilliant work in centre-field, and a grand pickup and throw by King, the visitors' shortstop, the latter robbing Moseley of a hit in the seventh by getting his sizzler in deep short and pegging the runner out at first.

Sterling and Galm were the respective twirlers, the latter, who was with the Buffalo International, making his Canadian League debut. Galm did not allow a hit in the first five innings, but he weakened towards the finish, and the visitors collected five. His control was also good, he only passing one. Sterling was no puzzle for the Beavers, even if he did fan six, as eight hits were recorded off him, while in addition he passed four and hit one.

Blount, the first batter for the Petes, got a lift on Loud's error, and went to third when Schneider let Byrne's hunt go through his pins. Welsh dumped a hit down in front of the plate, Trout hitting the runner going to first, while Blount scored. Stewart hit to Schneider, who had Byrne caught between third and home, but instead made the play at first and then threw wild to the plate, both Byrne and Welsh scoring.

Trout's double and Ort's sacrifice fly scored one for the Leafs in the first, while in the third another was added. Trout was passed, went to second on Moseley's infield hit, and advanced to third when Ort forced Moseley at second. Ort tried to get away with the delayed steal, but was out at second. However, he served the purpose, as Trout scored on the play.

The Beavers took the lead in the fourth by counting two. Schneider singled, and stole as Isaacs fanned. Loud's single tallied Schneider, while Lond made second on the return. Murphy was passed, and Galm flied to right, Loud going to third on the return, and counting when Sterling made a balk.

Peterborough tied it up in the sixth. Welsh singled with two out, and scored on Stewart's double. In the ninth the visitors looked dangerouts, with Wilcox on second through a single and pilfer, and Kelly on first by virtue of a pass, and two out. Swartling was sent in to hit for Sterling, and drove a liner down over first, which Schneider corralled with his bare hand, and beat the runner to the base.

The Beavers won the game in the eighth on Schneider's triple over third and Isaacs' sacrifice fly. Score:

Hilliard Is Going Strong

Dave Hilliard, slugger of last year's Peterborough team, is going great guns with the Cleveland American Association team. In the last averages published he was hitting .333, standing eleventh in the American Association list, and second among the Cleveland hitters. He has been clouting the ball to all corners of the lot. A Cleveland correspondent to the Sporting News says: "Sheikard at last has hit on a winning combination. Jay Kirke now is being used at first, and Hilliard, a fench breaker, down south this spring, has been shoved into an outfield job. The change has worked wonders for the team."

A Louisville report says: Jimmy Sheckard has gotten a good bunch of players together, and since reaching their home lot they have been going like a house a-fire. Dave Hilliard, a Louisville boy, has finally been given a regular job in right field, and is certainly making good. He is hitting and fielding like a fiend and the chances are that they will not be able to take the place away from him."

Hastings Is The Dangerous Team In This District

Wednesday Night's Game May Prove Very Important in the Present Series—Trent Team Looks Strong and Has Been Playing the Game

The Peterborough lacrosse team opens its season with what will probably prove to be the important game of the local district. The blue and white will meet Hastings at six o'clock on Wednesday evening at Riverside Park and the boys from the Trent town make no bones about their intentions of grabbing this game. They realize that Peterborough will likely trot out a strong team, and with a game or two already played they figure on being in good condition for this encounter. They gave Campbellford a sound drubbing on Victoria Day in an exhibition game, they have been practicing faithfully for five or six weeks and to begin with they have a team that knows the game. Look over this line-up and observe the names that are familiar in lacrosse:

If the names, Clapper, Dodds and Scriver are as formidable as in the past, this should be the team to reckon with.

The local team will be picked from the following: Gerald McFadden, Flemming, E. King, W. Meagher, A. Doris, G. Mein, Jack Crough, Grover Halpin, Charlie Manion, Len Johnston, Fred Kelly, Lou McCoy, M. Kenneally and several others. It is the intention to select the strongest team for this game, and other players will be given every consideration in later games.

Alex. Kemp of Norwood will referee and the game will be commenced on the stroke of six o'clock if possible.

First Game in Six Years.

This is the first lacrosse in Peterborough for six or seven years. The teams will consist of ten men aside and the field is somewhat abbreviated in comparison with that of former days. The statement that this is an important game for the local team is not offered with any view of luring the lovers of the game. Hastings were lucky in securing a schedule that gives Peterborough its first two games with the Trent team. However, there is no promise made of what the local team will do: In practice they have showed up encouragingly, but as they have had no game yet, it remains to be seen how they will acquit themselves on the field. They realize that Hastings is dangerous and they are going out to stop them in the first game if possible. Six o'clock, Riverside Park, Wednesday, June 3rd.

NOTES

The Petes are a fine road team. They have lost exactly eleven out of twelve games played away from home.

Three runs in the first innings was not a big enough lead for the Bloutmen yesterday.

Fox is on the bench on account of his failure to hit. He has made one safety in the past ten games.

The reason why a man wants to kiss a girl against her will is because he wouldn't want to kiss her if he thought she was willing.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

Mr. Francis was about to start away to attend the funeral of his rich old uncle.

"Put a couple of large handkerchiefs into my grip, dear," he said to his wife. "The old gentleman promised to leave me $20,000 and I shall want to shed some appropriate tears."

"But suppose when the will is read, said the wife, "you find he hasn't left you anything?"

"In that case," replied he, "you had better put in three."

NO CHANGE IN THE LEADERSHIP

Manager Curly Blount still remains at the head of the Peterborough Ball Club. The directors of the club held a meeting last night, but no change was decided upon, and the Youngstown man will be given a further chance to make good. Every effort will be made to strengthen the team. Manager Blount is hot on the trail after players. Dad Stewart has already shown himself a source of strength, and Swartling will add offensive strength when he gets into the game.

The Petes play Toronto again to-day and to-morrow and then move on to Ottawa for four games, returning to Peterborough to open a three-game series with Toronto next Monday.

WILL BE COLLECTED.

Scribbler—I believe that my poems will be collected after my death.

ECCENTRICITY IN SOME WILLS

There are reported instances of a will chalked by a man on a cornbin and of one inscribed on a bedpost; both cornbin and bedpost are said to be filed in Doctors' commons, London.

Of whimsical wills of modern times we may note Jeremy Bentham's, which bequeathed his body to a hospital with instructions that it should be embalmed and his head preserved entire and that he should, when thus treated, preside at the meeting of the hospital directors and be present at banquets of his old friends. Whether his bones ever presided at directors' meetings is not recorded, but his body was kept in the hospital museum for many years.

Even more extraordinary was that will of Solomon Sanborn of Medford, Mass., who left his body to Prof. Agassiz and Oliver Wendell Holmes, to be by them prepared and placed in the anatomical museum of Harvard after having two drumheads made of his skin. Upon one was to be inscribed Alexander Pope's "Universal Prayer" and on the other the Declaration of Independence. These heads were to be presented to the testator's friend, the drummer of Cohasset, but on condition that on June 17 each year the drummer should beat "on the drumheads at the foot of Bunker Hill the spirit-stirring strains of "Yankee Doodle."

THE WEATHER

The temperature last night went down in the neighbourhood of the frost mark. Thirty-eight was the figure for the lowest during the night. Rainfall for the month of May was decidedly short in this district, less than three-quarters of an inch being the total for the whole month.—W.P.

WHY IS IT SO?

Why is it that so many people still give so little thought to making a kitchen attractive and bright and cheerful? The idea used to be to have things in a kitchen that would not show the dirt. The idea now is to have things in a kitchen that can be scrubbed. Many kitchens are done in blue, probably because porcelain utensils and crockery bowls are made in such lovely shades of blue. If you have only a few utensils of this blue porcelain ware they give a note to the kitchen that can gradually be followed out in everything.

Kitchen walls should never be papered. Even the glazed papers are not practical. Paint is the only thing that can stand both the wear and tear and the constant scrubbing that is necessary over the sink and on other parts of the walls that are apt to be spattered with grease from the stove. It is a good idea to paint the walls and ceiling the same color. Linoleum is, in the long run, about the best floor covering for a kitchen. It is easily cleaned, the grease and dirt do not sink in, it wears well, and comes in very good designs.

It is well to have in a kitchen just as many shelves as possible and have these covered with shelf oil cloth that looks like shelf paper and hangs down over the edge. The great advantage of the oilcloth, as against the paper, is that it can be wiped off with warm suds and, if cared for, lasts for years. Have plenty of little brass hooks screwed in the under side of the shelves. They are the greatest possible comfort. Under the china shelves cups can be hung, and you can in this way avoid stacking them, in perilous piles that look like the leaning tower at Pisa. Under the shelves where the utensils are kept, skillets and saucepans may be hung.

If the kitchen is so small that it is possible to have only one table in it, a good plan is to have a shelf about three feet long and two feet deep hung against the wall on hinges about the height of the table. Under this there should be two legs, that drop down automatically as the shelf is lifted up into position. This device has been found very useful in small kitchens. It answers the purpose of a table when one is needed, and can at other times be dropped flat against the wall. A white oil cloth stretched over the kitchen table and tacked underneath adds to the clean, neat appearance of things, and is much more desirable than half-soiled red and white tablecloths.

SIMPLE THINGS APPROPRIATE

There is no reason why kitchen chairs should be ugly. When the fact was once commented upon that two young people had chairs of real artistic value in their kitchen, they answered "they cost no more than ugly ones." However, it is not always possible to pick up real pretty things in a second-hand shop for almost nothing. But it is easy to buy the simplest, plainest things, and these are always appropriate in a kitchen. It is the fussy, cheap things that take away the restfulness and charm of many a home.

In the kitchen of every woman who does her own cooking there should be a fireless cooker. They are labor-saving, time-saving, efficient, and economical.

There are many labor-saving devices now available, and it is the woman's turn to buy machinery that will in any way lighten her work in the home. We have all seen the value of machinery on the farms, and it will not be long before we recognize the same fact in the home—that brains can be put to good use while machinery is made to do the manual labor.

Stock Markets

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

Latest reports foreshadow a dragging market. Bullish activities may be confined to specialties. President Wilson's views on business in his second and latest talk have caused some professional offering of stocks on the grounds that he thereby exhibits lack of understanding of real conditions, and that his efforts therefore are misdirected and not constructive. His statement that exports are increasing and imports decreasing, and that the tariff has nothing to do with the business depression, astonish business men, who are asking whether or not the government figures to the contrary are erroneous. Roosevelt, will it is reported, use this as an example of incompetent politics.

Good buying is reported in U.P., S.P. and U.S. G.Q. and K.S.U. are noted by room traders as being well taken. Central Leather and Bethlehem Steel are understood to be accumulated. Professionals continue to offer B.O., New Haven, Atchinson and B.R.T.

Postal Bill In Senate.

OTTAWA, June 3. — The Senate committee yesterday morning disposed of the Postal Bill, which gave the Postmaster-General the right to fix maximum rates on newspapers. It agreed to the principle of fixing a maximum up to a certain point, but did not state the amount of it, inasmuch as, the question being one of revenue, the Senate cannot amend the bill, even though it may reject it. It was intimated, however, that if the maximum is not fixed above 1 1-2 cents it will not be opposed.

Perley Off For England.

OTTAWA, June 3.—Hon. Geo. H. Perley, with his wife and daughter, will leave for England on the Allan liner Alsatian, which sails from Quebec on Thursday. Party In Danger Says Lloyd George.

LONDON, June 3.—Addressing a meeting at Criccieth yesterday afternoon, Lloyd George said that the great rock ahead of the Liberal party was dissension in its own ranks.

"If we do not heal it, having already suffered a few hard knocks from it, we are not worthy to have in charge such great questions as the leaders of the Liberal-Labor party are committed to," he said.

Will Church Union Go Back to Churches Again?

ASSEMBLY BEGINS TO-DAY

WOODSTOCK, Ont., June 3.—One of the outstanding questions to be discussed at the Presbyterian General Assembly which opens in Woodstock to-day will be the problem of church union.

While it is impossible to forecast with certainty what the recommendation of the union committee will be, it is probable that they will recommend that the whole matter be sent back again to the Presbyterian congregations and sessions for their final judgment under the Barrier Act.

There will be a minority report from the anti-union members of the assembly and the debate will be a notable one.

A short meeting of the committee was held last night to decide upon recommendations to the assembly, but after deliberating for some time they adjourned until to-day. It is expected that they will be occupied all day in drawing up their recommendations.

The first business of congress will be to elect a moderator. It is expected Rev. W. P. Herridge of St. Andrew's Church, Ottawa, will receive the honor, although Rev. D. D. McLeod of Barrie will probably receive a large measure of support from the congress. Rev. Murdoch McKenzie, the retiring moderator, will preach the sermon at this service.

After a short session the committee of the Board of Education and the committee to strike standing committees for the following year adjourned till to-day. Dr. W. J. Clark of Ottawa is convenor of the church union committee. Dr. D. M. Ramsay of Toronto is in charge of the committee of the board of education, and Rev. S. H. Easton of Port Stanley of the committee for striking standing committees.

Royal Party at Belleville.

BELLEVILLE, June 3.—This city was en fete yesterday, in honor of the visit of H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, the Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia. The civic reception took place on the court house lawn. Mayor Willis read an address of welcome and His Royal Highness made a felicitous reply.

The royal party visited the Ontario School for the Deaf, the County House of Refuge, St. Agnes' School and the City Hospital.

Toronto's Medical Health Officer says: "If you come across any flies in your house kill them now." Therefore all good housekeepers should commence using WILSON'S FLY PADS early and continue their use through the season.

M'NAUGHT TURNED DOWN.

N. E. Toronto Refuses To Nominate Hydro Commissioner.

TORONTO, June 3.—Toronto Conservatives received a surprise last night at the nominations for the riding of Toronto, N. E., held in the Granite Rink, on Church street, when Mark Irish defeated W. K. McNaught, M.P.P., and member of the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission, by a majority of 27 as candidate for the Provincial Legislature.

Mr. Irish, in addressing the delegates before the election took place, referred to the fact that since Mr. McNaught had taken up his residence on Huron street the boundaries of the riding had been extended to include his present residence, and asked who had done it. Mr. McNaught said he had not, but T. R. Whiteside, M.P.P., insisted that Mr. McNaught had. There was a stormy moment before order was restored.

Seat A went by acclamation to Hon. Dr. R. A. Pyne. In accepting the nomination, Dr. Pyne spoke briefly of the Government's good roads policy, the Workmen's Compensation Act, and the proposed Hydro-Electric extensions and said in this connection that he hoped in the near future to see the houses of Toronto not only lighted but heated by electricity from Niagara Falls.

Drugged For Feeding?

LONDON, June 3. — The charge that imprisoned militant suffragettes were drugged in order that they may be forcibly fed, was made yesterday at a meeting of the Women's Social and Political Union, by Mrs. Mildred Ellis Mansel, one of the organizers of the militant society, who presided.

Mrs. Mansell referred to well-known society women who received Cabinet Ministers as their guests, and warned them that if they continued to harbor the Ministers they would have to pay the consequences.

C. N. R. Bill Passed

Measure Read a Third Time and Sent to Senate

SIR WILFRID'S POSITION

OTTAWA, June 3.—The bill authorizing the Government to guarantee bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway Co. to the amount of $45,000,000 and to acquire thereby forty per cent. of the capital stock of the company, passed the House of Commons last night and was at once sent up to the Senate. Upon the final vote a roll call was not demanded.

An amendment proposed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which called upon the Government to obtain an option upon all the capital stock of the company at a price not exceeding $30,000,000, was lost upon division by a majority of 43 and Mr. Verville's amendment making the assistance of the Government conditional upon the settlement of labor difficulties at all mines at Vancouver Island in which Mackenzie and Mann are interested was defeated by 45 of a majority.

Upon Mr. Borden's motion for the third reading of the bill, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that he desired to summarize briefly the reasons why he and his followers were opposed to the measure. They did not desire to see the railway collapse. Personally, he believed that Canada needed at least three transcontinental railways. When in power his Government had generously aided the Canadian Northern system, and that system would be completed and a financial success today had it not undertaken the enormously expensive British Columbia section. The Borden Government had brought about embarrassment by encouraging the extravagant construction across the mountains and on the Pacific coast.

Postmaster-General Pelletier declared himself in favor of state ownership of railways. The acquisition of forty per cent. of the stock was a long step in that direction. The debate was continued by Hon. William Pugsley and Solicitor-General Meighen.

Thereupon the House divided and the Laurier amendment was defeated. Yeas 42, nays 85. Mr. Nickle (Kingston) voted with the Opposition.

Mr. Verville (Maisonneuve) moved that the bill be referred back to committee of the whole with instruction to so amend the same that it would not come into effect until the Government was satisfied that Mackenzie and Mann had consented to the appointment of a board of conciliation under the Industrial Disputes Act asked for by operatives in their coal mines on Vancouver Island.

Mr. Clements (Comox-Atlin) said Mackenzie and Mann owned no coal mines in British Columbia.

Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, said that Mackenzie and Mann were interested in the Canadian Collieries, Limited, but did not have control. Moreover, no workmen in these mines had ever applied for a board of conciliation.

Mr. Carroll (S. Cape Breton) insisted that Mackenzie and Mann were in control of a number of coal mines in British Columbia where the men were at present on a strike.

The House then divided upon the Verville amendment and the same was defeated: Yeas 38, nays 85. It was a party vote, except that Mr. Nickle, the Conservative member for Kingston, voted for the amendment and Mr. Charlton, the Liberal member for Norfolk, voted against it.

The bill was then given a third reading and declared passed amid enthusiastic applause from the Government benches.

Conspiracy To Oust Poincare.

LONDON, June 3.—The Daily Express Paris correspondent claims to be able to reveal an astonishing plot on the part of President Poincare's enemies, which aims at enveloping the President and Mme. Poincare in such a scandal as to compel M. Poincare to resign.

RINGWORM ABOUT CHILD'S HEAD
In Several Places. Blister Raised Up, Swollen and Scaly. Hair Fell Out. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured in Four Weeks.

Lorne, Que. — "My little son, aged nine years, was afflicted with ringworm in several places about his head. The ringworm began with a few pimples and as it grew worse it was one dark colored blister raised up and swelled. It was kind of scaly. The worst place was behind his right ear. It was about the size of a silver dollar, dark and swelled, the worst kind I ever saw. It used to pain so he could not rest. It looked very badly. His hair fell out gradually.

"Finally I sent for a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used to take real hot water and the Cuticura Soap and that used to clean it off. Then I would put the Cuticura Ointment on the affected part. There was pus in the sores and the Cuticura Ointment drew that out and healed at the same time. We saw the Cuticura Soap and Ointment were very good so I got some more and it was four weeks from the time I started using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment till he was completely cured." (Signed) Mrs. Thos. Bagley, May 26, 1913.

Many Yet Unknown

Sixty Bodies Remain Unidentified at Quebec Docks

GHOUL STORIES ARE DENIED

QUEBEC, June 3.—There still remain some sixty "unknown" among the 188 bodies of the Empress of Ireland victims which reached here on Sunday. Three full days have now been diligently devoted to identification. The sad task grows more and more difficult, and hope of restoring all the recovered dead to their relatives and friends seem past. Every remaining body has been embalmed and carefully photographed, and will be held for possible recognition as long as possible. Then the bodies will be prepared for burial and removed to vaults at the city cemetery.

All respect has been paid the dead. They have been guarded night and day by officers of the Government and the company. No foundation can be found here or at Rimouski for ghoulish tales seemingly started in the evil imagination of some unfortunates, that victims were stabbed to death by frenzied steerage passengers, or bodies robbed when recovered from the waves. Such stories do terrible injustice to both dead and living.

Mr. William Stitt, general passenger agent of the C.P.R., who is in Quebec directing the care and conveyance of survivors and dead, expressed amazement and horror when questioned concerning the reports. "I never heard anything of the kind even suggested," he stated emphatically.

Statements of survivors, and of Government officers and residents at Rimouski, all corroborate this declaration.

There are sixteen of the survivors still in the hospitals here and at Levis. Only one, however, is in a grave and critical condition. Mr. Archibald Brown of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, has developed pneumonia in its worst form, and his recovery at the present time is regarded as very doubtful.

The Government steamer Lady Grey returned to Rimouski on Sunday afternoon, and has remained on duty continuously in the vicinity of the scene of the wreck, patrolling the waters in search of additional bodies.

His Majesty's cruiser Essex, whose officers and marines have already won for themselves warm appreciation in the hearts of the residents in the community for the efficient and reverent services in connection with the removal of the dead, is lying at anchor in the river here. Yesterday she coaled up, to be in instant readiness to depart for Father Point on receipt of any message that further assistance could be rendered. The abiding conviction, however, seems to be that practically all of the unrecovered lost have their tombs in the staterooms and corridors of the sunken liner.

A public funeral for the nine identified members of the crew will be held jointly at the English Cathedral and St. Patrick's Church on Thursday. Contingents from the British warship Essex, the Canadian vessels now in port, and the local military forces will be in attendance. The Lieut.-Governor, Sir Francois Langelier, Capt. Wilson and Commander Tweedie of the Essex, Col. Burstall of the Citadel, and the officers of the Sailors' Club and of the Canadian Pacific will be again the mourners.

Funeral of Crew.

MONTREAL, June 3.—The C.P.R. states that the funeral of the members of the crew of the Empress of Ireland, who lost their lives in the St. Lawrence disaster, and whose bodies have not been claimed by relatives or friends, will take place on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, at Quebec. The C.P.R. will bear the expense.

Sailors as Witnesses.

MONTREAL, June 3. — A private investigation at present being held by Captain Lindsay, Dominion Wreck Commissioner, into the collision of the Empress of Ireland and the Storstad was continued yesterday. Captain Lindsay was closeted all yesterday morning with Mr. Willard, an agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

They have given orders that the members of the crew who were on watch at the time the vessel collided must be held here until the inquiry is over. The majority of the crew arrived here yesterday morning by special train.

CHARGED WITH THEFT.

Two Storstad Sailors Accused of Robbing a Survivor.

MONTREAL, June 3.—Two sailors of the collier Storstad were arrested yesterday by city detectives, and charged with the theft of $1,000 in travelers' checks from Lionel Kent, manager of the Energite Explosive Co., Montreal, who was one of the survivors from the Empress of Ireland. The arrest of the men, Manuel Chute, a native of Honolulu, was made in the Merchants' Bank of Canada, when he was cashing one of the checks, and the other was taken on board the Storstad by six detectives. He was Carmel Sperritti, a native of Malta.

Suspicions were aroused in the bank and on board ship simultaneously. The cashier at the bank noticed the name of Lionel Kent on the checks he was asked to cash, and a sailor of the collier reported to the first mate that Chute had offered him $15 on Monday night as a free gift. The latter fact, it is said, was known to Captain Andersen of the Storstad, but he had not taken any action up to the time the detectives boarded the ship.

A search of the men and their bunks brought to light $550 in checks and $41 cash in the possession of Sperretti, and $400 in checks in the possession of Chute. The latter, who speaks English, said he had been given the checks by a Montreal hotel man. Sperretti has not made a statement yet through inability to speak English or French.

Mr. Lionel Kent said in Rimouski that he had lost $1,000 between the time he left the sinking Empress of Ireland and when he was taken on board the Storstad. He had hidden the papers in his shirt, but supposed they had been lost or stolen while he was in the lifeboat in a semi-conscious condition.

Captain Andersen stated that his men had found a great deal of money in the lifeboats, which they had turned in, as far as he knew.

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

By LOUIS TRACY

"Hush! I have faith in Peter. He told me to-day that some famous author came here every summer till he died; so the place must have a charm of its own.

"Perhaps the famous author was a detached soul; in other words, a queer fish."

"And perhaps you'll get that wet coat off, and make yourself useful. Please strike a match. If it were not for Guess, I should be sure that something was going to leap out of the dark and grab me."

So Nancy was admittedly a trifle nervous; but the feeling passed at once when Granite had a fire roaring in a stove, and an oil lamp was swinging from a hook, and the cabin was filled with warmth, and the scent of a stew mixed with the steam of drying dog and garments. The sleeping arrangements were so primitive, however, that Nancy dared not undress. Every inch of the tiny bedroom was lit by lightning almost incessantly, and the constant dripping of water from the roof, added to the howling and whistling of the wind, kept her and Power awake tilllong after midnight. They would have risen and gone back to the more comfortable living-room, where the stove might have induced drowsiness, and Power could smoke, at least, but certain regular sounds from that quarter revealed that Granite cared little for the storm, was even expressing his unconscious contempt for it audibly; while Guess had met some lifelong foe in his dreams and was fighting a Homeric battle.

To while away the slow-moving hours, and perchance close their senses to the external uproar, the lovers talked, or, rather, Nancy talked and Power listened. A casual reference to some such wild night in France led the girl to discourse of her Parisian friends, and she gave full play to a ready wit and gift of close yet kindly and humourous observation which, in different conditions, would certainly have won her a place among contemporary writers on French life and manners. American ways and habits of thought owe so much to the Gallic leaven introduced at the beginning of the eighteenth century that a Modern American woman assimilates French ideas with more ease and surer touch than her British sister; so Nancy would have brought to the task both radical sympathy and natural equipment. She knew Daudet and Turgenieff—had been present at one of their famous quarrels—and her description of the Russian's unbridled fury and the Frenchman's ironic good temper caused the scene to live again. She spoke French fluently, and even gleaned some scraps of Russian, and Power found himself transported in imagination to the brilliant salons where litterateurs like Zola and Coppee bickered, where artists like Rodin and Bonnat founded schools, where Massenet played snatches of operas yet to reach the ears of a wider world, where the men and women who occupied the stage on the Dreyfus drama were already stabbing reputations with poison-tipped epigrams.

Often she brought laughter to his lips; as, for instance, when she spoke of the beautiful and fascinating wife of a struggling artist, a lady notorious in many walks of life, who attended a fancy dressed ball at the American Embassy. "Ah," said someone to the Duchess de Brasnes, "here comes the latest star, gotten up appropriately as Madame Recamier!" "No," chirped the witty old lady instantly, "You have given her the wrong name. You mean Madame Reclaimer!"

Luckily, Power's acquaintance with the French language was close enought to enable him to appreciate the caustic humour of the words. He was far too absorbed then in the girl's vivid impressions of personalities familiar to him only in the columns of newspapers to indulge in a speculation as to the why and the wherefore of this flow of anecdote and quaintly analytical glimpses of character. But he understood later. During three long years she had existed in an atmosphere that checked every natural impulse. She had become a statute, beautiful, but impassive. Now she was once more a woman. The marble was coming to life. Love had breathed on her, and the red blood was flowing freely in her veins.

He could have listened till dawn; but the sweet voice suddenly grew husky, and she expressed a desire to rest.

"Derry," she said, with the unthinking confidence of a tired child, "let me lay my head on your shoulder. With your arm around me, I do believe I can forget even this dreadful lightning."

Within a minute she was asleep. She merely smiled and murmured something about "putting the light out" when he laid her gently in a roughly carpentered but fairly comfortable bunk, and covered her with a rug. Then he, too, after a brief vigil to assure himself that she would not waken, stretched himself in the second bunk.

When next they opened their eyes the sun was shining from a cloudless sky, and Peter was shouting that they had just time to dip their hands and faces in the lake before the "crawfee kem to a bile."

They were out in a jiffy, and found themselves in fairyland. On the one hand, green and blue mountain rose in an almost unscalable rampart; on the other, across two miles of a silvery mirror ordinarily as like, a wooded landscape fell away in gorgeous tints and ineffable distances. The song of birds trilled in the air, and the fresh, keen scent of the rain-washed pines was pungent in their nostrils. After one delighted glance at this circumambient Paradise, they raced to the water, and, as they ran, Nancy noticed the phenomenally clean-cut reflection of the opposite shore.

"Derry," she cried, "just look at that picture! Can you wonder if I hardly know whether I am standing on my head or my heels?"

Perhaps, of all the tender memories which Power has hoarded through the years, he is most tenacious of his recollection of Nancy as she was that morning. She seemed some wood-nymph clothed in the garments of civilisation, that modern cult which the Greeks, those true poets and clear thinkers, would have scoffed at. Yet so graceful were her movements, so bewitching her mobile face, so artistic the careless knot into which she had twisted her wealth of nut-brown hair, that not even the Boston tailor of a bygone generation who had equipped her at sight with a fan-coloured coat and skirt could hide the symmetry of her form or impair her winsome beauty.

The lake was oval in shape, and an imaginary line drawn from shore to shore at its centre would measure more than a mile. The hut stood half a mile north of the eastern end of this line, and a summer hotel, patronized mostly by sealots of rod and hook, lay half a mile south of it on the rare occasions when a fishing canoe came that way—and the water was so alive with fish that the requisite paddling meant time and effort—they were absolutely shut off from the world. Even while they were scampering to the spot where they had landed the night before, Power was noting a tree-crowded creek where a tiny stream from the hills babbled the last of its brief life into the placid bosom of the lake. There, he decided, it would be easy to contrive an admirable bathing place for Nancy, as she was only a timid swimmer, having acquired the art quite recently. He himself was equally at home in sea, river, and lake. On one occasion, during his engineering novitiate, he had swum across the Arkansas River when it was almost at flood level, and it needs those who have seen and heard that turbulent stream roaring through its rocky canyons between Pueblo and Las Animas to appreciate the feat at its true worth.

Then he would teach her how to fish and shoot; for they must be self-supporting to a large extent, though the hotel provided a well-equipped base for this foray into the wilds of the Adirondacks. Yes, they would have a glorious time, living like Indians, yet tempering their savagery by the sweet communion of kindred souls, with never a newspaper nearer than the hotel, their address a tangle of wooded mountains, and their solitary book a copy of Milton's poems, which, Nancy had said once in Newport, she had never appreciated properly, and which Power, an enthusiast, had recommended to her close study as the well of English, pure and undefiled.

Nor was their earliest day dream any fantasy, or other than a superficial glimpse of delights which expanded hourly beferoe their enraptured vision. A whole fortnight slipped away so rapidly in this Elysium that Nancy, keeping a housewifely eye on stores, discovered the flight of time only by the urgent need need of replenishing a cupboard bare of coffee, and sugar, and bacon, and other essentials, notably matches; for the summer camp has yet to be built in which the supply of matches has endured to the end.

Usually, when a visit to the hotel became necessary, Peter Granite took the canoe, while Derry and Nancy, escorted by Guess, rambled off for the day into the hills behind the hut. They had no fear of getting lost, because Power was endowed with a sixth sense in all matters pertaining to topography, while the dog as credited by his master with an infallible knowledge of the homeward way at dinnertime. But on this day, by unhappy chance, Nancy announced that she wanted the cabin clear of men while she indulged in a feminine foible, common to all her sex, known as spring cleaning. Season or clime is immaterial; when that microbe seizes a woman she has to undergo the disease from the earliest symptoms to complete convalescence. The premonitory signs are unmistakable. She begins by a ruthless survey of corners, floors, spidery rafters and grimy windows. Her eyes sparkle, she turns up the sleeves of her blouse, dons an apron, and arranges for unlimited quantities of hot water and soap. Nancy possessed no apron; but a square of sacking and some cord soon settled that difficulty.

Therefore, deeming themselves wise, Derry and Peter fled, leaving the dog and a double-barreled shotgun as safeguards. Not that any favoured region. The medatory tramp cannot exist there; the inhabitants are the most courteous and law-abiding people in America; the only strangers are city holiday-makers of the quiet and cultured type.

The men promised to remain away two hours. Considering the time altogether too short for the thorough cleansing of the hut, Nancy set to work with a will, and when first she thought of glancing at her watch she found that one hour had sped already. Guess was sitting in the sun, blinking lasily at a beetle which had been disturbed, and was now scuttling away for dear life. Possibly the dog was wondering why uneasy mortal should not rest when not hunting; but, despite his canine philosophy, he was keeping watch and ward with due viligance, for he rose suddenly, and growled.

Nancy knew that he hardly ever barked; but his growl was an unfailing indication of the near presence of some intruder; whether man or animalremained to be seen. An occasional wolf, and a species of small black bear—the latter very scarce—were the only dangerous creatures which could possibly come near the cabin, and then only by accident; so Nancy was merely obeying Peter's behests in picking up the gun, and making sure that both barrels were loaded, before going to investigate the cause of the dog's uneasiness. Out of the tail of her eye she noted that he had stalked away deliberately toward the back of the cabin. Whatever it was that had disturbed his siesta, he was still bidding it defiance; so she hurried somewhat, and, the morning sun being in her eyes, saw, without instant recognition, a man of small stature standing motionless some yards away among the undergrowth.

Then a well-remembered voice chilled her heart with terror; for her father cried angrily:

"Call that brute off! He looks like flying at my throat!"

During a few seconds of icy fear and foreboding she could neither move nor speak. The dog, quick to come, snarked ith wlonder menace, and the fur rose along his spine.

VITALITY REGAINED KIDNEYS CURED

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 26th, 1913.

"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My kidneys and liver were not doing their work, and I became all run-down. I felt the need of some good remedy, and having seen "Fruit-a-tives" advertised, I decided to try them.

Their effect, I found more than satisfactory. Their action was mild and the results all that could have been expected.

My liver and kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my old time vitality. Today, I am as well as ever, the best health I have ever enjoyed, and I unhesitatingly give you this testimonial for publication if you wish"

WOMEN CAN HARDLY BELIEVE

How Mrs. Hurley Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased every month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, and had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world. After I had tried most every female remedy without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it? Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Obeyed Instructions.

A fond father vouches for this. His little girl had much disturbed her father and mother by using the word "devil."

"My dear," said mother, "that is a word we do not use in polite society, and I never want to hear you say it again."

She noticed that her admonition was carefully heeded. Then on Sunday evening, about two weeks later, the mother inquired what the day's lesson had been about.

"Why, mother," was the answer, "it was about the temptation of the—by — by — the — the gentleman that keeps hell!"

REVIVE GEORGIAN DANDIES.

London Youths Would Return to Sideboards and Peg-tops.

A determined attempt is being made by a group of young London art students to revive the forgotten fashions of the Regency. They at present represent the most forward movement among the "nuts" by virtue of the daring distinctiveness of their costume.

The "uniform" of the Georgian "nut" consists of a "waisted" coat cut low in front, with a broad collar roll, and large buttons; the waistcoat is also cut loose and low, showing an expanse of white frilled shirt. The collar is almost hidden by a wide stock-bow, usually of a grey and white check, to match grey and white check socks. From the neck is suspended a gold-rimmed eyeglass on a black silk ribbon, half an inch wide, which is carefully arranged to fall across the dazzling white frills of the shirt, to provide contrast. In place of a watch-chain, a heavy fob on a broad black ribbon dangles from the pocket.

But the climax of the scheme lies in the return to peg-top trousers. They are not strapped under the boots, but are made very tight, and at the bottoms are very little wider than the ankle. The favorite color among these modern beaux is buff worn with black coat and waistcoat and check bow and socks. Very thin boots with square toes are de rigueur with this costume. The hair is worn long, but carefully trimmed and short, close-cropped side whiskers, extending to the level of the base of the ear, complete the reproduction of the fashions of the Regency "buck."

A number of young artists, of whom the leader is a former Slade student, wear this dress nightly at restaurants and dinner clubs in the West End in the hope of restoring variety of color and form into masculine dress.

Wit of Sydney Smith.

Sydney Smith, once entering a drawing room alone in a fashionable mansion in the west end of London found it lined with mirrors on all four sides. Finding himself reflected in every direction, he remarked: "Ah I see. There appears to be a meeting of the clergy here, and there seems to be a very respectable attendance!"

Buying a Wife.

In Uganda a wife can be obtained for a score of cartridges. The Australian black obtains his helpmate for her weight in butter, and in Turkestan the Tartars can buy as many wives as they please for a box of matches each.

Was Confined To His Bed For Four Months With Rheumatism.

Mr. W. H. Riley, Ruddell, Sask., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure that I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to all suffering with rheumatism. I was so bad with this terrible disease, I was unable to get up from my bed for four months, and nothing seemed to relieve me until a friend recommended Doan's Pills. I had my doubts about them, but was so desperate I would try anything suggested to me. After taking half a box I was able to get up, and after taking two boxes could get around quite well. After taking six boxes I was completely cured, and able to work for the first time in five months, and have not had a touch of rheumatism since. Anyone who saw me then would not know me now, as I am strong and active since taking your valuable medicine."

Doan's Kidney Pills help the kidneys to flush off the acid and poisonous impurities which have collected, and thus clean out the kidneys, and dispel the rheumatism from the system.

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

TRAFFIC IN DIAMONDS.

How Illicit Business Is Carried On in South Africa.

Some good instances of the seamy side of the diamond traffic are told by Douglas Blackburn and Capt. Caddell in their engrossing work "Secret Service in South Africa." A young Englishman of good family arrived on the fields, and having about a couple of hundred pounds but no experience, joined a Scotsman who was working a claim that seemed promising. They did little for a month or so beyond just paying expenses; but presently the average finds rose very considerably, then dropped to below the previous worst. At the end of about four months the Englishman announced that he was sick of the business and would retire, leaving it to the generosity of his partner to return his partnership money if luck turned. The Englishman celebrated his departure by standing drinks with suspicious liberality to a crowd at a canteen.

Knowing—or, rather believing—that the young man was so short of money that the raising of the homeward fare had been a matter of difficulty, the partner began to think and ask a few questions. He noticed that a German Jew, who was suspected of being an illicit buyer, was on very friendly terms with the Englishman, and drew certain conclusions, on which he resolved to act. He joined the drinking party, encouraged his departing partner to linger over final glasses, and carried him home very drunk. He took the opportunity of making a domiciliary search, and was rewarded by finding over £4,000 worth of stones concealed in various parts of the baggage; besides conclusive evidence that the faithless partner had sent through the post to Cape Town parcels whose contents could be well guessed. The young man left for Cape Town next day, bearing the signs of a broken heart and head. That he carried little away with him was inferred from the fact that for a couple of years after leaving the diamond fields he was working as a clerk in a store.

A simple method of transferring stones to an accomplice was practiced by a famous I. D. B. (illicit diamond buyer), who amassed a fortune without having to undergo the indignity of arrest and search. His sleeping-partner, but very active and alert treasurer and custodian of his illicitly acquired stones, was a barmaid, who afterwards became his wife. The I. D. B. called in at regular periods, and ordered such drinks as his naturally parsimonious disposition and the day's luck or ill-luck suggested. They ranged from champagne to beer. When a bottle of stout was called for, the barmaid understood the signal. The I. D. B. would drink about half of it, engage in conversation with someone in the bar, and either go off hurriedly, after glancing at his watch or accept the offer of someone to take a drink. In either case, he did not finish the stout. This the barmaid would put apparently among the dirty glasses awaiting washing, but actually in a place of safety, for she knew that diamonds had been dropped into it from the mouth of the I. D. B.

The largest parcel of diamonds ever captured at one time would have been got through but for an accident. Just on the Free State border, the police patrol came up and began a systematic and microscopic search of a suspected wagon. They even cut the dissel-boom—or wagon-pole—into small pieces, and sounded or prodded every part of the wagon large enough to conceal a stone, but in vain. On the way, one of the detectives remembered that he had left a knife or gimlet on the wagon, and returned for it. He found the men ruefully repairing the damage as well as they could, and replenishing the water in the water-kid, which had been emptied out in the search. The detective asked for a drink, and, in helping himself, was struck with something odd about the large bung which closed the kid. He examined closer and found a packet nailed to the bung—in fact, it was the bung—one solid mass of pitch containing four pounds' weight of extra fine stones.

Wonderful Lace Veil.

Devonshire (Eng.) lace workers have been engaged for three years, and will not finish for another nine months, on a beautiful court veil with flouncings and trimmings made on a fabric of the finest Brussels net. The edging is about thirty yards of lovely Honiton lace, and the centre part contains 240 large sprays of hawthorn with over 200 small sprays of the same flower. Scattered over the whole are hundreds of butterflies. The wearer of this elaborate adornment will be a lady (now in India), and the occasion will be one of the functions of the British Court of 1915.

Wisdom From Wives.

A man who had been married three times used to say, even in the presence of his third wife, "I married the world, the flesh and my present wife." And he gave his experience, says Rev. E. J. Hardy in "Still Happy Though Married," as follows: "My first wife cured me of romance, my second taught me humility, and my third made me a philosopher."

Salt For Malaria.

Seeking a cheap and non-poisonous substitute for kerosene oil in tropical sanitation, Dr. J. W. Scott Maffe, of the West African Medical Staff, has experimented with common salt as a means of suppressing malaria and yellow fever. In solutions of sufficient strength, it has proven remarkably effective in destroying larvae of the yellow fever mosquito.

Certainly Misreported.

Probably most public speakers have at one time or another suffered the annoyance of being misreported. A peculiarly unfortunate instance is recalled by Mr. G. W. E. Russell in one of his books. "A clerical uncle of mine," writes Mr. Russell, "took the pledge in his old age, and at a public meeting stated that his reason for so doing was that for thirty years he had been trying to cure drunkards by making them drink in moderation, but had never once succeeded. He was thus reported: 'The rev. gentleman stated that his reason for taking the pledge was that for thirty years he had been trying to drink in moderation, but had never once succeeded!'"

Witty Churchmen.

A study of the wits of the world reveals the fact that there is a fair proportion of clergymen among them, and a very good illustration of the powers of repartee on the part of clerical celebrities is afforded by an incident which happened when Bishop Boyd Carpenter was addressing an open-air meeting.

An atheist asked the bishop if he believed that Jonah was swallowed by the whale. "When I go to heaven I will ask Jonah," said his lordship. "But supposing," the other persisted, "he is not there." "Then you will have to ask him," was the quick retort.

Lords as Landowners.

It is stated that there is not a member of the House of Lords who does not own a thousand or more acres. None of the landowners is a real farmer, but all rent their land in small lots, generally on long leases, to men who make the most of it. It is not uncommon for one family to live on a rented farm for more than a hundred years.

A DIRECT AND MOST EFFECTIVE TREATMENT For Cold in the Head and Catarrh

Some internal remedies, such as Na-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne, undoubtedly help a great deal in checking a cold in the head. But you get the quickest action from Fossal Balm.

This is applied directly and conveniently through the new nozzle-shaped end of the collapsible tube in which it is put up. This little nozzle reaches well up into the nostril, and a gentle squeeze on the tube discharges enough of the Fossal Balm to spread over the membrane lining the nasal passages, kill the germs of the cold or catarrh, soothe the smarting inflammation, make breathing through the nostrils free and easy, and check the cold or relieve the catarrh at once.

The fact that this new means of applying the Fossal Balm is so handy, and gets it right up where it is needed, adds much to the value of this splendid remedy.

REAL "DOGS OF WAR."

Regular Members of the French Army Hospital Corps.

In all parts of Europe, and notably in such countries as France, Switzerland, Belgium and Holland, dogs are compelled to take life much more seriously than in the United States. This is due to the fact that in the old world the natural function of the dog is that of a draft animal rather than a playfellow for young people.

The French people have long been employing them to draw carts and small wagons. Now they have gone a step farther and have actually put dogs to work in their army. Real "dogs of war" they call the picked animals which have entered upon a military career. These four footed soldiers have been enrolled in the hospital corps of the French army, and their work will be to assist the doctors and the Red Cross nurses in camp and on the battlefield.

It is suspected that the always ingenious French got the idea from the famous dogs of St. Bernard, whose work in carrying succor to storm-bound travelers in the Alps is known to every reader. At any rate, the newly enlisted Red Cross dogs of the French army are being trained to carry stimulants to the wounded, to search out injured soldiers and lead doctors or nurses to the scene and perform other services requiring more or less resource, as well as to act as messengers for the surgeons and to fetch and carry bandages, medicines, etc., in time of emergency, just as a well trained American dog brings his master's mail or newspaper.—St. Nicholas.

HOPPING AEROPLANES.

Machines With Clipped Wings to Be Used by Shackleton.

Aeroplane sledges and a hopping aeroplane with clipped wings are being built for Sir Ernest Shackleton to be used in his south pole expedition next winter in the hope that they will prove more efficient in getting over the ice than the motor sledges, which had a little but far from perfect success in the Scott expedition.

The aeroplane sledges will get their forward motion from great air propellers like those of a flying machine, while the motor sledges depended on a sort of belt movement under the sledge. Air propelled boats are now a real success, and a few air propelled sleds have had some success on roads in winter. Enough forward push can be obtained by this method without any doubt, the expected difficulties being with the engines in intense cold and with a rough surface.

An aeroplane with clipped wings, which can take long hops over bad stretches of surface, but most of the time will be running on skids, with only part of the weight held up by the wings, is a more novel idea. It was suggested a year ago by French officers for Sahara desert sand trips, though no reports of the building or success of any such idea have been made.—Saturday Evening Post.

Swiss and Their Teeth.

Only within the last few years have the Swiss people generally become interested in the preservation of the teeth. This is true especially among the middle and poorer classes. It is noticeable among these classes that little or no care has been taken of the teeth and to find one of them with sound teeth is the exception. It is generally accepted that the Basel water causes early decay and disintegration of the teeth. Conditions had become so bad that in 1912 the city of Basel established a municipal dental clinic.—Argonaut.

Irrigation and Cantaloupes.

Imperial valley, California, this year expects to produce for shipment not less than 5,000 carloads of cantaloupes. Shipments in former years have sometimes reached 3,500 carloads, and as the area planted is this year larger than ever before, the estimate of 5,000 carloads is not unreasonable. This entire region a few years ago was a desert with an annual rainfall of three or four inches. Irrigation has transformed it into one of the most productive sections in the world.—Argonaut.

Flameless Powder.

After years of experimenting a young Florentine chemist named Guido Fel claims to have discovered a flameless powder which causes no erosion of the tubes of even the largest cannon. He says it is superior in carrying power to any other powder. In an experiment in the presence of scientists and representatives of the army in a room which had been completely darkened Fel fired a revolver loaded with his powder and there was not the slightest flash.

Earthquake Proof Buildings.

Earthquake construction has now reached a very practical stage in the seismic districts of Italy, where all new buildings are being erected under strict supervision with respect to their ability to resist earthquake shocks. Professor Omori, the Japanese authority, has estimated that 99.8 per cent of the deaths in the great Messina earthquake of 1908 would have been prevented if the buildings had been properly constructed.

Big Warships For France.

On Jan. 1, 1915, the French admiralty will begin the construction of four super-Dreadnoughts of about 20,000 tons, which will each carry sixteen 13.4 inch guns in four quadruple turrets. These ships will be able to fire eight guns ahead, eight astern and sixteen on each broadside. The French believe that these ships will be superior to the British Queen Elizabeth type, which can concentrate half the number of fifteen inch guns in the several directions of fire or four ahead and astern and eight on each broadside.

Island of Sorrow.

A fishing disaster is reported from Fugio, in the Faroe islands, north of the Shetlands, which resulted in one of the smaller islands being almost denuded of its male population. Twenty-six of the twenty-seven men on the island set out a few months ago on a fishing expedition in small boats, all of which were swamped, and every man was drowned in a terrific gale. The only man left on the island is too old for work, and he alone is left to protect the wives and families of the drowned men.

With only a portion of the fleet equipped to burn fuel oil, the American navy is now using 30,000,000 gallons of fuel oil a year and, according to the secretary, the time will soon come when the annual amount required will be 125,000,000 gallons. It is proposed to establish tanks at various ports and strategical points.

A Medico-Legal Museum.

There has just been formed at University College Hospital, London, a museum of specimens, illustrating how many and various are the pitfalls that often surround the medico-legal expert who gives evidence in the law courts. The difference between wounds made before death and after is illustrated in striking fashion by a photograph of Leon Beron, the man murdered on Clapham Common some years ago, which shows the remarkable series of cuts and gashes made after death upon the cheeks of the victim. On the brow is a deep horse-shoe, shaped wound—evidently that by which the murdered man met his death. Exhibits illustrating gunshot wounds of various kinds are given a prominent place. The fact that the site of entry of the bullet is usually marked by a small hole, while that of its exit presents a large ragged wound, is illustrated by a specimen of a human foot. This foot was pierced transversely to its long axis. On one side there is a small aperture about the size of a sixpence; on the other side there appears an extensive laceration extending from the ankle almost to the roots of the toes.

A number of knives showing dark stains on their blades, a heavy piece of iron, similarly stained, and some pieces of cloth and wood, are specimens which have been selected to illustrate the effects of various fluids and corrosives.

NEWS OF THE WEEK GLEANED FROM ALL PARTS OF EUROPE

A GLIMPSE INTO THE LIFE OF THE KAISER'S ARMY

Officers Have Hard Struggle to Exist if They Would Keep Up with the Extravagance of Fashionable and Aristocratic Society.

[illegible] (Special Dispatch.)

BERLIN, May 30, 1914.

RECENT scandals and the issue by the Kaiser the other day of a circular forbidding his officers to have any dealings with matrimonial agencies have called attention once again to the peculiar position of the army officer in the German social cosmos and his incessant struggle between extravagance and simplicity of living.

In Germany the officer is, of course, the lion of fashionable and aristocratic society, the object of admiration for the ordinary tradesman and always a person of absorbing interest, if not always an idol, for the crowd in the street. He is the hero of the schoolgirl and the ornament of every social function of note. To take a significant example:—On the race course the officer is practically supreme. He commands the greater share of the popular interest which in France goes to the new dresses of the day and in England so largely to the smart and youthful aristocracy.

And while the races owe much of their popularity to him, it is here that he in turn acquires much of his popularity. Races with officers in the saddle (wearing their uniform) occupy quite a large proportion of the list of races for the season. The military riders, indeed, are scarcely less known to the racing crowd than the professional jockeys, and the nicknames that the crowd gives them are soon current coin. Such, for example, as "Krieg ein' Rieger" ((ride a winner), popularly given to the successful Lieutenant von Egan-Krieger.

The officer is also easily the greatest passive helper for both the caricaturist and the writer of popular novels, for whom he is constantly serving as model. Indeed, a glance at any railway station bookstall shows him to be altogether without rival in this respect. Among the front pages of the half dozen comic weeklies there is sure to be one at least showing a smart, tall lieutenant, generally in long gray coat, with red or blue collar, usually accompanied by one or two of all that is most captivating or most fashionable of Teutonic femininity.

And next to the comic papers one sees the covers of the travel literature of the day. Not a bookstall in Germany but can show at least three or four of the works of Baron von Schlicht, every one of them with an officer's face or figure decorating the cover, some officer or other designated in the title and the heroes of first, second [illegible] all of them officers. Together the Schlicht novels hold the record for circulation, and from this fact alone it is plain that the officer occupies an unusually important place in the life of Germany.

There are two reasons why this should be so. In the first place, the German Empire was founded by the sword, and a great number of the leading statesmen also have been soldiers in their original profession; also the rule that officers shall invariably wear uniform is applied here more strictly than in any other country in Europe. Officers, therefore, are far more frequently noticeable. Yet, over and above this, the officers owe much of their position to their breeding and character. These tall young fellows impose first of all by their looks. Their tanned faces, crowned by a pale forehead (sheltered by the forage cap), and their physical fitness are attractive in the outset to a race which is essentially a race of the open air and of the soil. The absence of "side" that they will often show by visiting quite a simple tavern for their midday meal appeals to a people which still has many traces of its old democratic culture.

Yet a great many of these popular idols—aristocratic as they may be—are poor, as poor as the traditional church mouse. And the pay is so moderate that their parents have to pledge themselves to supply an allowance of $15 a month to a lieutenant in the infantry, $20 a month to an artillery lieutenant and $25 to a cavalry lieutenant. A few of the crack regiments demand openly a higher allowance, including one of the Guard regiments in Potsdam, which demands $5,000 a year.

Officers have to remember that they are practically, "ipso facto, "Hof-fähig" (received at court), and have to comport themselves accordingly. Heavy bills for lace and braid and other furbishments come in, and naturally the sons of the plutocracy can set a pace. The officer must appear also from time to time in the Tiergarten, or in the Rotten Row of the provincial town in which he happens to be garrisoned, and the quality of mount that is exacted here has risen only less rapidly than the cost of it. He must also appear at the race meetings. And when in the evening there is time for other amusements his choice of theatre and café, and even of the seat he occupies, is limited—limited at first by its standing, ultimately by its cost.

The officer must never descend to the level of the ranker; he must never ride in the half-penny omnibus, and he is even expected to pay double the usual tip to the cabby and chauffeur. To do all this on a pay of only two to three hundred a year, including the family allowance, requires the assistance of either a carefully kept account book or a still more carefully chosen money lender. And when the money market fails the matrimonial market is often too tempting to be ignored. For America has by no means the monopoly of wealthy daughters willing to bring regenerating banknotes into impoverished aristocratic households. Tradesmen often seem to count on the idea, and none obtains credit so lightly as the officer in Germany. Hence the first origins of many of the most celebrated causes célèbres of recent years, including the recent remarkable case of the Countess Treuberg.

Careful inquiries have shown that money lenders and marriage makers have lately come to play an all too important part in regimental affairs. Therefore the latest order of the Emperor. This order, however, is only one of many, and some have had rather incongruous and unexpected results. On the other hand, the Emperor himself makes an allowance every year to a certain number of deserving officers of moderate means, and by his frequent orders relating to the menus at the officers' mess and to the consumption of French champagne he has certainly cut out an appreciable amount of extravagance, even in spite of the notoriously refractory ways of some of the regimental messes.

MME. LA CAPITAINE.

(Special Dispatch.)

PARIS, Monday, May 30.

"WOULD you travel in a steamer where a woman was the captain?"

This question, provoked by the news from Copenhagen that Mme. von Bouditz has been made captain of a transatlantic steamer, has been put by a writer in the "Intransigeant" to some distinguished French people.

M. Marcel Prévost says he would not be afraid. "Each time," he says, "that a woman takes the place of a man in any work she succeeds admirably. Women are only inferior to us physically.

"I would travel in a steamer captained by a woman as peacefully as I would ride in a motor car, with a woman at the steering-steering wheel."

The only decisive criticism comes from Admiral Touchard. He says:—"Brrr—— I hope the first mate will be there to help her." But after all, he is only an admiral.

A Late Portrait of Brunswick's Young Ruler

The DUKE of BRUNSWICK

For many weeks past the newspapers of Brunswick have contained many charming stories relating to the happy domestic life of "the young ruler up at the palace," says the London Sphere. The Kaiser's only daughter and her husband are described in true German fashion as "a pair of turtle doves," and the palace is quite seriously referred to as "the nest." The duchess, it is said, has only to hint at any wish to have it immediately fulfilled. A few days ago when talking about photographs she remarked to her husband that although she had some hundreds of his portraits in her album there was not a single really good one among them. The duke laughed, and within an hour telephoned to Mr. Raab, the court photographer. Three pictures were taken and all three met with the unqualified approval of the duchess. This is one of the approved portraits.

FIRST WOMAN DOCTOR OF LETTERS

(Special Dispatch.)

PARIS, May 30.

MLLE. JEANNE DUPORTAL, granddaughter of one of the popular representatives in the National Assembly with some celebrity at the time of the end of the Second Empire, has won the proud distinction of being the first woman admitted by the old Sorbonne to the dignity of "Doctor ès Lettres."

The theme she chose for the examination was "The Illustration of Books in the Seventeenth Century," and she upheld her argument brilliantly before a [illegible] somewhat indulgent jury of savants, who maliciously tried in vain to trip her up with insidious questions and finally covered the blushing candidate with flattering praise. The fair student was somewhat timid at the commencement of the formidable ordeal, but as she warmed to her subject she proved quite equal to holding her own in discussing the subject she had taken.

Her paper will be used as a foundation for a catalogue of ancient prints and engravings Mlle. Duportal intends to compile, and now the example has been given she will doubtless not remain long the only woman doctor of letters.

WAGNER'S CHILDREN.

(Special Dispatch.)

BERLIN, May 30.

LEGAL proceedings to establish whether Frau Isolde Beidler, wife of the Munich conductor, is the daughter of Richard Wagner, the great composer, or Hans von Bülow (Frau Cosima Wagner's first husband, from whom she was divorced), was begun at Bayreuth.

Frau Beidler is prosecuting her mother and her brother Siegfried for seeking to deprive her of the right to call herself the daughter of Wagner, alleging that they are actuated mainly by financial motives, as the composer settled an annuity of $7,500 on each of his children. The prosecution demands that Frau Wagner shall declare on oath whether Isolde is Wagner's or Bülow's child. She has expressed a readiness to do so, claiming that Isolde was born on April 10, 1865, five years before she was divorced from Von Bülow. She declares that it is irrelevant to say that she had already "given her heart" to Wagner at the time of Isolde's birth, and alleges that Isolde is actuated by a desire to extort money from her.

Isolde retorts that her main interest is that her twelve-year-old son shall be recognised as a grandson of Wagner. Part of the evidence offered in support of her contention is that Wagner dedicated a book to one and [illegible] seem to "My little daughter Isolde" on [illegible] fifteenth birthday; that the original text of the "Rheingold" was inscribed, "composed on the day of the birth of my daughter Isolde;" that Wagner once said to Isolde "You know you are my daughter, not Bülow's, though I suppose you would rather have been of noble birth," and that the official notice of Wagner's death described Isolde, Eva and Siegfried as his children.

(Special Dispatch.)

[illegible]NNA, May 30.

AN interesting anecdote is told of the present ruler of the [illegible] of Herr Theodor Lücher, a well known sportsman, who recently met with a fatal motor car accident. He was quite a young man and of a sublime insouciance, and was extravagant in his habits as he was keen in sport.

Two years ago he lived at Ischl during the winter months, and one day, feeling very dull, he sent out telegrams to twelve of his best friends and to twelve ladies, asking them urgently to come down to Ischl to have supper with him. Some of these friends lived at that time in Vienna, others in Hungary and even on the Riviera, while among the ladies eight were at Vienna and four in Paris.

In order that their journey might be as comfortable as possible each of them had a special train placed at his or her disposal, and in order that every one of them might preserve a pleasant memory of the occasion each of the male guests received a souvenir in the form of a golden cigarette case and each lady a gold handbag with the exact date of the supper set out in diamonds. The whole affair cost the young spendthrift $170,000.

FUN AT THE ESCALATOR.

(Special Dispatch.)

LONDON, May 30.

THERE were amusing scenes on the largest escalator in the world, which was opened to the use of the public at the Oxford circus tube station recently. When the shops closed every one seemed to have a homing instinct by this particular route. The consequence was that there was not a step of the moving stairway but bore its four passengers, squeezed together, into the heart of the earth. Meanwhile the upgoing stairs were quite deserted.

However, a lost sheep inadvertently got on the upward route, and before he shrank back from the fire of chaff to which his solitary figure would be exposed on the right flank he was borne upward. Then the torture began. He suddenly felt self-conscious; all those faces looking down on him, all those backs sliding past him, frightened him. He adjusted his tie, straightened his frock coat and tried to look as if it were all part of the day's work. It was no use. He was utterly alone, and there beside him were some hundreds of londoners all staring at him. Ten steps [illegible] unfolded, then twenty, and he still hoped to escape unscathed. Not a bit of it. Coming to it will not let an opportunity slip. [illegible] himself could not help, [illegible] at last boldly. Looking at the descending crowd. Whether or not that haunting provoked the others, he was [illegible] to a fire of good humored [illegible] as he was borne upward.

Everything went without a hitch, and the only difficulty was to find the upgoing stairway when one was once downstairs. Still the geography is easy to learn and Oxford circus station will now become a boon to all shoppers.

AN INVISIBLE AEROPLANE

(Special Dispatch.)

PARIS, May 30.

A GERMAN engineer named Knobel, living at Munster, has invented a more or less invisible aeroplane, which is considered in military circles to be of considerable value for war purposes.

Instead of having the ordinary cloth fabric or other visible material used for the wings, this particular aeroplane is constructed of a transparent variety of celluloid, which is likewise stated to be fireproof. The wings thus made let the light through, so that at a height of 3,000 feet it is almost impossible to detect the aeroplane. The machine is also fitted with a silent motor. A further advantage is that the aviator has an unobstructed view in all directions.

SMOKER LAUREATE.

(Special Dispatch.)

BERLIN, May 30.

WHAT is believed to be a world record has just been set up at a congress of South German smokers, held at Frankfort.

A special trophy, consisting of a silver eagle on a red and white ribbon, was offered to the smoker who took the longest time to turn a Mexican cigar into gray-white ash without letting it once go out. The competition began at eleven o'clock, and very nearly two hundred persons contested for the award. By twelve o'clock only twenty competitors were in the running; the rest had secretly finished their "weeds" or had laid them at rest in the ash tray too long.

The rivals dropped out rapidly, and by one o'clock only one smoker was left—Herr Henz, a Sachsenhausen business man, who [illegible] puffed away in peace until he perforce had to throw his diminutive cheroot away, two hours forty-six minutes and seventeen seconds after he had set light to it. Herr Henz has thereupon been proclaimed smoker laureate.

EUROPEAN NATIONS ASTIR OVER NEW WONDER TRAIN

Further Tests of Great Speed Car, Already Described in These Columns, Prove Inventor No Dreamer and Has Discovered New Mysterious Force.

(Special Dispatch.)

LONDON, May 30.

THE flying train has become the talk of nations.

Since the first description of Mr. Emile Bachelet's wonderful invention appeared in these despatches its fame has spread from England to France, Holland, Germany and even to far away Japan.

The laboratory at Saffron-hill, with its glittering instruments and its tense, "electrical" atmosphere, is filled daily from morning until night with a distinguished throng of visitors, many of them representing powerful official interests.

The Admiralty and the War Office have sent special commissioners and experts to make a close inspection of the invention. The former department was represented by Admiral Sir Henry B. Jackson, Chief of the Admiralty War Staff; Rear Admiral Edward F. B. Charlton, Assistant Director of Torpedoes; Captain Clement Greatorex, Naval Assistant to the Third Sea Lord, and Commander Alldin U. Moore, of the Naval Ordnance Department. The Naval Air Department was represented by Lieutenant Spenser Grey.

Dr. Harold Spitta, bacteriologist to the King; Sir David Salomons, the famous scientist, and Mr. Otto Belt, the financier, were others who lost count of time as they stood engrossed in Mr. Bachelet's repeated and patient demonstrations of his appliances.

Among early callers were two representatives of the Japanese government, and Lord Edward Grosvenor, while Mr. Gray, chief engineer of the Marconi company, was also an interested observer.

All those before whom Mr. Bachelet lectured and demonstrated with tireless energy were tremendously impressed with the possibilities of this mysterious flying train, which at the touch of a switch can shoot through space at a speed of three hundred miles an hour.

Admiral Sir Henry Jackson and his colleagues watched the demonstration for more than an hour. They cross-examined the inventor closely on every conceivable point in the working of the flying train, but Mr. Bachelet had an answer for every question, a convincing case against every argument, and the naval experts freely admitted that Mr. Bachelet had made a deeply interesting discovery and one that promised great things.

They were particularly attracted by Mr. Bachelet's passenger carrying model, which, unlike the mail and parcel carrying train, is not intended to be propelled by "solenoid" pulling magnets, but by an ordinary air propeller and motor. They asked many questions concerning the application of the system to the launching of aeroplanes from the deck of a battle ship.

"Aeroplanes would have to have an aluminum surface underneath in order to be raised by this system," said Admiral Sir Henry Jackson, and Mr. Bachelet agreed. (It is the resistance offered to the magnetic influence by the aluminium under body of the flying train that raises it in the air.)

"Could the system be applied to the firing of guns?" asked Rear Admiral [illegible]rton. Mr. Bachelet confessed that he had not thought of its exploitation in such a way, but could see no reason why the force of magnetic repulsion should not be utilised as successfully in that direction as in any other in which power to lift heavy articles would be a desirable thing.

Sir David Salomons had a long conversation with Mr. Bachelet on technical points of his invention. He pointed out that the principle of magnetic repulsion was not new, and Mr. Bachelet admitted this to be so.

"But," he added, "I have found a way to make it do what it has never been made to do before—lift heavy weights in the air and keep them suspended there."

"That is quite right," said Sir David. "You have made a most wonderful advance, and the development of your invention will be watched with the keenest interest by all scientists."

The large number of letters that have poured into the Bachelet laboratory from all quarters indicate a keen desire among all classes to see the flying train in operation. Mr. Bachelet has decided to throw open the laboratory to the public in due course, making a small charge for admission, which will be devoted to charities.

CONFIDENCE IN SUBMARINES GROWS WITH EXPERIENCE

(Special Dispatch.)

LONDON, May 30.

THE voyage just made by the French submarine Coulomb and the attention given to it in the English newspapers indicate the increased confidence placed in the capabilities of under water craft and the growing influence which their achievements are having on public opinion.

Now that the seaplane has taken its place as an effective weapon of naval warfare the wisdom of those who favored the provision of submarines has received a striking confirmation. It is becoming more and more recognised that, with the seaplane to give it long range vision, the submarine is now beyond question a dangerous adversary of the battle ship. This feeling is not lessened by the increased range which the torpedo, the weapon of the submarine, has now attained.

It is not surprising that in regard to this particular engine of war the trend of construction is toward an increase in size. This growth is utilized in all directions, to give greater offensive power, more speed, and, what is of consequence to those employed in the vessels, increased habitability and comfort.

It is stated in a German newspaper account of one of the new British submarines that this vessel, although she has a crew of fifty-two, has most comfortable accommodation, there being double cabins for the officers, beds instead of hammocks for the men, and an electric cooking range for preparing hot food, while each member of the crew has a safety helmet, electric torch, a thermometer, a Morse alphabet and a hammer for giving sound signals. A boat thus equipped will provide an enormous contrast to the submarines of only four or five years back.

The Coulomb's voyage is a remarkable one for a small boat of 394 tons, but it is by no means unique. Some of the early British submarines have been sent to the Mediterranean and to China, and long distance runs have been common in the American flotilla. An illustration of the cruising powers of the larger "E" type in the British navy is afforded by the voyage of the first two Australian boats, which have arrived in Commonwealth waters after a journey of more than 11,000 miles.

The largest submarines at present in commission are the vessels of the British "E" type, which have a displacement of 800 tons when submerged. France and Germany have boats in hand which will, it is understood, have a displacement of 900 tons, and the French boats are to be driven by turbines. The German submarines are to have a speed of twenty knots on the surface. Larger still are the boats building in Russia, which have a displacement of more than 1,000 tons. Largest of all, however, according to the reports which have been published on the Continent, will be the British vessels of 1,200 tons. If this figure proves correct a great advance in under water navigation will have been made, and the day of the submarine [illegible] to have arrived. From being a vessel for use in narrow waters the submarine will then have become available for oceangoing work.

Death of Little Nell Removes Dickens Link

Passing of Mrs. Tice in London Recalls the Novelist and His Many Haunts.

(Special Dispatch.)

London, May 30.

THE death of Mrs. Tice, the little lady who claimed to be the original Of Little Nell in "The Old Curiosity Shop," removes another link with Dickens.

Some links time will find it very difficult to remove. Every time a Londoner walks along Fleet street the sight of St. Dunstan's tower may remind him of Trotty Beck and his exquisite dinner of tripe, and the message of the bells. And while nearly all of the unwholesome slums east of Chancery lane that figure so largely in "Bleak House" have been swept away, the water still goes splashing on in Fountain court as it splashed when Ruth was waiting there for Tom.

Dickens' own abodes in Doughty street, Devonshire terrace and Tavistock square still stand, to the joy and satisfaction of those who can see, or think they can see, in the streets surrounding these houses the originals of many of his most famous passages. To many it is a source of perpetual interest to speculate which of the streets in Bloomsbury it was that Dickens had in his mind when he described those wonderful Christmas scenes, those heart-warming, glowing scenes of happiness through which Scrooge's clerk passed on his way home to Tiny Tim.

But while houses and churches and streets to a large extent remain the same, the persons who formed the models for Dickens' characters must now, with the death of Mrs. Tice, be totally extinct. There can be no one now who remembers Dickens' own father, the original of Mr. Micawber, who was constantly urged by Mrs. Micawber, Dickens' mother, to "throw down the gauntlet to society."

Leigh Hunt, the model of Harold Skimpole, seems already to belong to the dead classic past. Mrs. Gamp had her representatives all over London before "the lady of the lamp" came to throw the bright beams of her intelligence on this dark corner of English civilization. Now one would search in vain for a model of that lady—in England. A few might still be found on the west coast of Ireland.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE MISSILE MEMENTOS

When Bert Franklin went out to fight for the Union in the summer of 1861 he was as handsome a young fellow as ever wore a uniform.

He was straight as an arrow, had a superb figure, which showed to great advantage on horseback — he enlisted in the cavalry — and his merry laugh was equalled only by the jingle of his spurs. As to his eyes, he could look more love through one of them than any other man could through two.

And Bert was as brave as he was handsome. In his first fight he was wounded and made a corporal. In his second he was wounded again and made a sergeant. In his third he received still another wound and was made a lieutenant.

Now, it so happened that the first bullet lodged in the flesh and was cut out by a surgeon. Bert sent it to the girl he loved best, who treasured and revered it. His second wound came from a fragment of a shell. This fragment he sent to another girl he loved best. His third wound was made by a pistol ball when the regiment was charging. It went clear through the calf of his leg, so he did not secure it, but he sent one like it to a third girl he loved best.

Bert steadily rose from private to captain and was constantly getting wounded. The consequence was that before the war ended no fewer than five girls possessed missiles that had pierced him in battle, and each girl thought that she alone possessed the only one that had been preserved. Shortly before the surrender at Appomattox the hero was so badly wounded that he was mustered out of service and after lying several months in a Washington hospital went home to limp about, an interesting character.

There was something sacred in each of these missiles he had sent to his best girl that led her to treasure it in secret. It was not till the hero was at the height of his glory — that is, when he was walking about at home on crutches, pale and thin — that the secret of the many mementos of his sufferings and tokens of his love got out.

Then one morning the postman left for him a little pasteboard box, and on opening it he took out one of the many missiles that had wounded him. No word came with it as to why it was returned to him, but for the first time in his life he felt a sinking about the heart.

When the next delivery of mail was made Captain Franklin was handed another box, this time a wooden one. Opening it he took out a piece of iron that had been sent from a bursting shell.

This, one of the many mementos he had sent out was also returned without explanation.

When the postman came again he brought two boxes, each containing a piece of lead which had been sent from the barrel of some kind of gun. Neither these returns was commented on by the sender. Bert laid them before the others on the mantel with a trembling hand.

Every memento he had sent out was now returned to him except one. A bullet had struck the metallic clasp of his sword belt and been flattened by the impact. He had shaped it with his pocket knife into the form of a heart and sent it to the fifth girl he loved best. Miss Alice Farnsworth, writing her how his clasp had saved his life. Alice pierced a hole in it and wore it on a gold chain about her neck.

Bert did not know of the reception of his gift, but he wondered if it, too, would come back to him.

The next time Captain Franklin went out on the street, hobbling on his crutches he met one of the girls. She cut him dead. The same day he met another of these young ladies and received the same treatment. Within a week every one of the four who had returned his mementos had had an opportunity to show her displeasure, passing him with her head in the air.

One day when he was wishing that some one of the various implements of war he had sent North had killed him he met Alice Farnsworth face to face.

She smiled at him.

That smile was a healing balm to his distressed spirit.

"How happens it that you deign to notice so unworthy a person as I?" he asked.

She took him to her home and when they were alone together, seizing a gold chain about her neck, drew forth the heart-shaped bullet.

"The secret that you had sent these mementos to all the girls became known by comparing notes soon after your return. I found an excuse for not joining in your punishment — a poor excuse, I admit—in the fact that while each of the others received a missile that had drawn your blood I had been sent one that had done you no injury whatever. I, therefore, declined to participate in their plan."

This is the end of the story so far as the old vet tells it today, but not only the flattened heart-shaped bullet, but the four other souvenirs, have been in the possession of Alice, his wife, ever since the memroable day he learned that she had stood by him in his degradation.

"One of the talesmen blew out the gas last night," announced the sheriff. "We brought him around, though."

"Which one was it?" inquired the attorney for the defense.

"That pale fellow over yonder."

"Just the man for jury duty," commended counsel with enthusiasm.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HAD INDIGESTION.

Almost Despaired of Ever Getting Well.

When your food has not been properly digested, your body has not received the benefit it should. The exertions of the gastric juice have been confined entirely to removing the unmasticated, undigested portions of food, which they cannot properly digest as speedily as possible from the body, therefore only giving the blood a small percentage of nourishment with which to feed the tissues. No wonder then that Indigestion and Dyspepsia attack the stomach. No medicine can surpass Burdock Blood Bitters as a cure for this particular disease. It regulates the bowels, promotes perfect digestion, makes pure blood, tones the stomach, and thus restores perfect health to the debilitated system.

Mrs. Mary MacKay, Hunter's Mountain, N.S., writes:—"I was troubled with Indigestion for more than ten years. I tried several Doctor's medicines claiming the power to cure, but all without success. Having heard of the many cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles I was completely cured. My appetite which was very poor, is now good, and I can eat most everything without any disagreeable feelings. I can strongly recommend B.B.B. to anyone suffering from Indigestion."

DAYS OF OLD PRESS GANG.

'Twas a Hard and Brutalizing Life In King George's Reign.

There can be no question about it—life in the Georgian navy was insufferably hard. According to Mansfield, "it was brutalizing, cruel and horrible, the kind of life now happily gone forever, a kind of life which no man to-day would think good enough for a criminal. There was barbarous discipline, bad pay, bad food, bad hours of work, bad company."

This is putting the case strongly and to one not born or bred to the sea it is exactly what it must have seemed. How then did they get men to enter the service? There were several ways in vogue. A captain on being appointed to a vessel, besides attending to her armament and equipping her for a voyage, had also the responsibility of furnishing her with a crew. He set about this by establishing a recruiting office ashore, generally at a sailors' tavern, and placarding the fact through the town and the surrounding country with the announcement that "Captain Blank, R.N., was now fitting out H. M. ship So and So for a cruise in foreign waters."

FoHowing this came promises of unlimited rum, prize money and the King's bounty. When the gullible one came to the bait he was plied generously with drink and flattery, the King's gold jingled before his staring eyes and befuddled brain, filled with stories of the joys of life in the King's navy loudly bawled in the sea ballads of the day. That these joys were not unknown is shown by the fact that the bounty was at one time above $350.

When these gentle means failed to complete his number the captain sent a few boat loads of sturdy fellows ashore after dark in charge of an officer. This party or "press gang" proceeded to the resorts of merchant sailors and picked up any stragglers they found in the streets. In times of need no male between boyhood and old age was safe.

BLACK WATCH IN INDIA.

The Kilted Men Spread Terror Among The Bengalis.

The recent concentration of the troops at Dacca, in Eastern Bengal, caused much excitement among all classes. Never has such a large body of soldiers been gathered together in those parts, and few people can realize the feelings of wild terror and dismay that stirred the hearts of the inhabitants when they heard that not only was a Highland regiment to pass through their midst, but was to halt amongst them for some days.

The very name of the Black Watch suggested something sinister to these simple-minded folks. Those of the native who can read English, and especially those who have studied it for examination purposes, have learned from the novels of Sir Walter Scott that the Highlanders are a very wild race, with no regard for property of any kind, and quite above all laws, certainly as these are set forth in the Indian Penal Code. So they declared when they heard the news of the coming of the Black Watch, and promptly made arrangements for the safe bestowal of their womenfolk and children, and above all, their store of rice just put aside for the new year.

Indeed their terror was so extreme and so real that the district magistrate considered it advisable to send a notice by beat of drum round the country side to reassure the people. He described the corps as one of the best in the British Army, and as a well-disciplined body of men. Many were the questions eagerly asked by the babus. "Were the men of the Black Watch the same color as the sahibs? What do they eat? Do they understand the English language? Do they wear clothes like the sahibs? Are these men really Christians?"

The regiment at last marched into the town of Barisal with the pipes playing gaily and watched along the route by anxious eyes hidden in the jungle. As it always does in this quaint land, word spread quickly that the soldiers were "very gentle," and a few of the more daring spirits came to watch the men playing football in the afternoon.

Next morning a ceremonial parade was held — a wonderful sight for these Bengalis, who gathered in great force, and then the whole regiment marched through the town, up and down the main bazaars and streets, to let every one, male and female, get a chance of looking at them. It was particularly important that the women should see the soldiers, for their power in the country is immense. By this time many of the houses in the town had been decorated in honor of the event, and the streets were thronged with people.

Ere the regiment left Calcutta the colonel had received a letter stating that he would be bombed if he dared to enter Barisal at the head of his men. At one point of this march one of the officers, seeing a man stoop down as if to lift something, was ready to act if it chanced to be a bomb, but to his surprise and relief the man threw flowers symbolizing good luck over his company.

On the Bengali mind the impression made by this visit will be a lasting one, for they have had it clearly shown to them that power and resource are in the hands of the British Raj. At last the dwellers in the country places have seen with their own eyes, how British soldiers behave, and from personal knowledge, can confute the agitators who spread the tales of atrocities committed by the regiments. All classes are loud in praise of the men.

LEPER ESCAPED.

Much Feared Man Takes Rooms In Fashionable Hotel.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—John R. Early, who for the last five years has made many enforced journeys about the country in box cars, and been held under quarantine in many cities while medical experts have disagreed on whether he is a leper, turned up in Washington again yesterday and took quarters at a fashionable uptown hotel.

The newspaper man at once recognized the noted patient and informed the authorities, who took Early back to his old place of isolation outside the city limits.

The alleged leper escaped May 18 from the Diamond Head quarantine station, near Port Townsend, Wash., was traced to Victoria, B.C., where officers lost track of him.

DYNAMITE UNDER HOUSE.

U. S. Secretary of Agriculture's Home Scene of Plot.

WASHINGTON, June 3. — Four sticks of dynamite, with burning fuses attached, were found late yesterday in the Department of Agriculture, under the office of Secretary Houston. The fuses were extinguished before damage was done. The watchman who claimed to have discovered the dynamite was held pending investigation. Officers went in search of another employe recently discharged, who had been making threats.

The police took Daniel H. Jauch, the night watchman who found the dynamite, to headquarters, and expressed some doubts of his mental responsibility. The sticks of dynamite were taken away in a bucket of water.

Jauch, who formerly was a private in the army, is said to have been under treatment for nervous trouble recently at the National Soldiers' Home Hospital.

Later it was said that Jauch had confessed that he had placed the dynamite, hoping that by discovering it he would win a promotion.

FARMERS' BANK BILLS.

Measures To Aid Depositors Debated In the House.

OTTAWA, June 3.—Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, moved the second reading of his bill for the relief of the depositors of the Farmers' Bank.

Mr. White said the Government, in presenting the legislation, acknowledged a moral obligation upon the Government of Canada. The certificate which enabled the bank to open for business and invite depositors, had been granted by the late Government without proper legislation. In spite of warnings from Sir Edmund Osler, David Henderson, M.P., and Mr. Leighton McCarthy, formerly a member of the House.

A. K. Maclean (Halifax), financial critic for the Opposition, opposed the measure. He said if the Government came to power under the weight of a moral obligation to the depositors of the bank, it must be admitted that they had shown no haste to discharge that obligation.

Mr. Maclean moved a six months' hoist. He was followed by Mr. Morphy, (North Perth), and the debate was then adjourned. The debate, by agreement, will be concluded to-day.

SENDERS LOSE.

Postal Department Not Liable For Mail Sunk on Empress.

MONTREAL, June 3.—The statement of the Montreal postoffice officials indicate that registered mail amounting to 1,903 packages, which went down on the Empress of Ireland, is a total loss, and there will be no compensation for the senders or addresses of those packages. The postal regulations provide that the Department is only responsible for registered mail actually lost in the mail, and then only to the extent of $25 for each package.

Notices are now being sent out by the Montreal postoffice to 34 exchange offices in all parts of the world, notifying them of the loss of the mail and providing a list of the registered letters.

The Empress of Ireland carried 159 bags of newspapers, 51 bags of letters, 8 baskets containing 301 parcels, and 19,033 registered articles.

Mexican Rebels Beat Federals.

DURANGO, Mexico, June 3.—Three decisive engagements with Federal troops, between Zacatecas and San Luis Potosi, were won by the Constitutionalists on May 30 and 31, according to reports received yesterday by Gen. Carranza. Col. Fernando Reyes, with 600 men of the command of Gen. Carrarra Torres, who is investing San Luis Potosi, administered a decisive defeat to a large Federal force at Salines, and later defeated a force sent from San Luis to reinforce the Salines' garrison.

Mortimer Singer, $1,500; Lord Michelham, $1,000; also anonymous gifts of a hundred guineas and fifty pounds.

HOW TO PREVENT ACID STOMACHS AND FOOD FERMENTATION

By a Stomach Specialist.

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to the conclusion that most people who complain of stomach trouble possess stomachs that are absolutely healthy and normal. The real trouble, that which causes all the pain and discomfort is acid in the stomach, usually due to or aggravated by, food fermentation. Acid irritates the delicate lining of the stomach and food fermentation causes wind which distends the stomach abnormally, causing that full bloated feeling. Thus both acid and fermentation interfere with and retard the process of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy and normal, but irritated almost past endurance by these foreign elements—acids and wind. In all such cases—and they comprise over 90 per cent. of all stomach difficulties—the first and only step necessary is to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation by taking on a little warm or cold water immediately after eating, from one to two teaspoonfuls of bisurated magnesia, which is doubtless the best and most really effective antacid and food corrector we know. The acid will be neutralized and the fermentation stopped almost instantly, and your stomach will at once proceed to digest the food in a healthy normal manner. Be sure to ask your chemist for the bisurated magnesia, as I have found other forms utterly lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties.—J. J. G.

ANDERSEN UPHELD.

His Claim Regarding Collision Borne Out by Condition of Ship.

MONTREAL, June 3. — When the Storstad was relieved of her load of coal at the Dominion Coal Co.'s dock yesterday it was seen that her stem was twisted so much to starboard that it almost formed a half circle. Some of the lowermost plates in her bow were also twisted to starboard and torn away. There is a large indent on either side of the stem, and the rivets are torn away.

The condition of the Storstad's stem is regarded as favoring Captain Andersen's claim that when the collision with the Empress of Ireland occurred it was impossible for the collier's stem to remain in the hole because it was twisted out by the forward movement of the Empress.

Sir Alfred, who is well known in Canada, has for many years rendered valuable public service as principal proprietor of The Westminster Gazette, whose influence is proof, gratifying alike to political friends and opponents of the power of clean and dignified journalism.

Aid From Russian Government.

OTTAWA, June 3.—Hon. Mr. Rogers yesterday informed the Commons that effort was being made to rescue the men from the Karluk, Stefansson's ship, stranded on Wrangle Island. Captain Bartlett had been communicated with at St. Michael's, Alaska, and asked to advise the Government as to the most expeditious met' ods to be applied. Captain Bartlett suggested that the Russian Government, whose ships patrol the Northern coast of Siberia, be asked to take the men off Wrangle Island, and this has been done. The United States Government is also being asked to render whatever assistance may be in its power.

MERCHANTS ON MARKET

Presented Budget of Recommendations for Improvement of the Local Farmers' Market

A SPECIAL COMMITTEE

A strong deputation from the Retail Merchants' Association waited upon the City Council last night and presented a number of recommendations which the merchants felt were in the general interest of the City.

Thos. Barrie stated that some of the farmers had been complaining of certain alleged conditions and the merchants investigated them with a view to making the local market as beneficial as possible to the farmers, the citizens and the business men.

The deputation also presented a plea that the furniture dealers' request for an early closing by-law be granted. The contention that it was not sufficiently signed should not be upheld on the ground that the second hand dealers had not placed their names on the petition. They were licensed as second hand dealers and were not actual furniture dealers. Mr. Barrie claimed that the petition was sufficiently signed by regular retailers.

The President of the Association also requested that the business streets be carefully cleaned. Berlin secretary had explained the method employed in that city. The streets are thoroughly watered and a rubber roller cleaner passes over them daily washing the dust into the gutter and leaving the pavement comparatively free from dust.

The Market Report.

Mr. T. C. Elliott, chairman of the Market committee, stated that it was not the intention to consider the market only from the advantage to the business men, but to consider the welfare of the whole city in so far as the market contributes to it. There was an impression among the farmers that they were required to unhitch their horses from the vehicles. This was only a recommendation, and as it was a considerable inconvenience to the farmers, they should understand that there was not a by-law to this effect.

Another point brought out was the absence of a covering for the farmers and purchasers on the outside market. The committee recommended that a covered pavilion be erected and that the stand for vehicles be paved and kept clear of snow and water in the winter and spring.

Re Weight of Fowl.

Regarding the weight of fowl on the market as required, the farmers found this a great inconvenience, and also stated that the sale by weight made little or no difference to the purchaser.

The Sale of Butter

The Committee recommended that a basket of butter averaging sixteen

The Famous Parepa-Rosa and Flotow's "Ah So Pure," From "Martha"

Almost within sight of Holyrood Castle in Edinburgh, Euphrosyne Parepa-Rosa was born. She was the daughter of a Wallachian gentleman, and in her walks down Princess street she could not resist singing the ballads of her native land. She made her debut in La Sonnambula" in the Island of Malta. Then she assumed the name of Parepa. No one has been able to understand just why. She married a Captain Carroll in 1863 but was left a widow two years later, and obliged to return to the operatic stage. She made several notable tours of the United States and later married Carl Rosa, the celebrated violinist, and took the hyphenated name which she has made famous. She was one of the first to organize the English opera company in the United States, although she sang for many years in Italian opera. While she sang in Cairo, Egypt, and three continents, she always felt that the most genuine appreciation of her talents was in the United States. To hear Parepa sing "Ah, so Pure," from the opera "Martha," the veteran opera-goer of to-day delights to tell about.

This famous classic, from "Martha," with many others equally celebrated, is to be had in the great collection of 'Heart Songs" now offered by this paper at a cost so small as to really constitute a gift. We ask our readers to seriously consider the book offer that now appears in our advertising columns as a tribute of this newspaper to its subscribers.

ROWELL'S OPENER

Record Meeting Expected in Massey Hall; To-morrow Night When Leader of Opposition Will Make First Pronouncement

MANY OUTSIDERS

TORONTO, June 3. — Indications point to a record meeting in Massey Hall to-morrow night, when Mr. N. W. Rowell will open his campaign, and announce his progressive platform and particularly "Abolish-the-bar." Delegations from twenty-one cities and towns in Ontario will be present and all features of a brilliant opening meeting will be in evidence. There will be no reserved accommodation except the limited space set apart for the out-of-town delegates. The principal address of the evening will, of course, be that of the Leader of the Opposition, whose first pronouncement of the campaign will be awaited with interest throughout the Province. In addition to Mr. Rowell there will be other prominent speakers, including addresses by F. S. Spence, A. T. Dyment, Wm. Proudfoot, M.P.P., Rev. John McNeill, Dr. H. A. McKim, president of the Ontario Young Manhood Association; Joseph Oliver and other prominent Liberals and temperance supporters. The doors will open at 7 o'clock. One of the city bands has been engaged and will play popular music.

NATIONALIST VOLUNTEERS INCREASING

Editor of The Examiner.

LONDON, Eng., June 3.— (Special cable.)— Calmer students of affairs reckon as a serious factor the great increase in the Nationalist volunteers which, now that they have secured the blessing of the Nationalist leaders, are making great strides. Late returns from Irish National volunteers now show that they claim a total muster of one hundred and twenty-nine thousand, of whom forty thousand are enrolled in Ulster, and numbers in Tyrone, Donegal and Derry counties, including Derry city. Their opponents place the numbers at fully fifty thousand. The arms and equipment are poor, but improving, and there's every sign that they will spread like wild fire over the south west. Northwards they are becoming more assertive in districts where the Ulster and Nationalist volunteers drill side by side. There's serious danger of faction fights, which may easily cause wider mischief.

NO ASSISTANCE AT THIS SESSION

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, June 3.— A. B. McCoig, member for South Essex, took occasion this morning to ask Premier Borden what the government had decided to do in connection with the request of the mammoth Ontario delegation demanding Federal subsidy for Hydro-Electric radial lines throughout the province. The delegation was headed by Hon. Adam Beck and was one of the largest ever seen at Ottawa. "The matter is still under consideration," said the Premier. "But no legislation will be introduced this session in connection with it."

The Guard of Honour Drawn Up at the Station to Receive His Royal Highness

RUIN OF THE EMPRESS MAY BE DYNAMITED

Matter Will Be Settled To-day After the Divers Have Reported on the Condition of the Wreck

VALUABLE CARGO

Special Wire to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, June 3. — Whether the sunken liner Empress of Ireland, with from six hundred to eight hundred bodies supposed to be within her battered hull, will be raised from the bottom of the St. Lawrence, or dynamited to pieces, as a menace to navigation, is expected to be decided here to-day, at a conference of representatives of the Government, the Canadian Pacific and Lloyds, the great marine insurance underwriters. Divers are this morning making examination of the wreck and will telegraph their reports here. There have come from England and all parts of Canada many demands that the vessel be raised at all costs, so that the bodies may be secured. In addition there is a valuable cargo to be lightered, if she can be brought up.

INSTANCE OF DEVOTION

Toronto Telegram: The tragedy of the ill-fated Empress of Ireland has witnessed heroic deeds, and Spartan or rather Christian fortitude on shore no less worthy of recognition.

An outstanding instance of devotion to-day is that of Bandmaster Peryer of the Peterborough Band, who has gone to England on the steamer "Alunia." He received news of his mother having been lost on Friday when he arrived at Montreal with his body of instrumentalists.

Notwithstanding this he bravely led his band in the funeral service held in that City and sailed with them for Liverpool, en route for the International Congress in London.

Bandsman Sandford's wife is a daughter of Mr. Peryer and Mr. Sandford played a solo at the service, the title being "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," and the touching refrain was sung by the band "I am Nearer Home To-day, To-day, than Ever I Have Been Before."

HAD TWO RIBS BROKEN BUT LIFE WAS SAVED

Mr. H. P. Kennedy Tells of the Escape of an English Friend of His in the Sinking of "The Empress of Ireland"

A TERRIBLE EXPERINECE

Mr. Dawson Kennedy, Water Street, has received the following interesting letter from his son, Mr. H. P. Kennedy, of Toronto, and formerly of Peterborough:

Montreal, June -st, 1914.

Dear Father,—Mr. A. J. Wakeford, of Liverpool, who has been spending the last couple of months in Canada in the interests of English capitalists, and who, in company with Mr. William Douglas, K.C., Toronto, spent a few days with me in Edmonton looking over a large development proposition, was one of the first cabin passengers on the ill-fated Empress of Ireland. We received a telegram from him Saturday, stating that he, together with his son, Chas. Wakeford, who was one of the officers on the Empress, had been saved, but was injured.

Mr. Douglas and I left for Quebec Saturday evening and spent part of the two days with him. His story of the disaster was as follows:

He retired about midnight and was sound asleep when the collision came, which wakened him, though he did not think anything serious had happened and had turned over to go asleep again when his son rushed into the room and told him to come on deck at once, not even to wait to dress. He obeyed at once, simply throwing on an overcoat. The son put a life belt on him, also gave one to a Mr. Duncan of London, who was also saved. The son, without any clothing or life belt, took the father then over the side of the vessel which was lying side up and rapidly sinking. They both walked into the sea, and the sinking of the ship separated them. The father caught a floating spar, but soon after saw a lady, so shoved the spar to her, and a little later got hold of an empty wa-

LOCAL LABOUR IS GIVEN PREFERENCE ON CITY WORK

Ald. Duncan States That Instructions Have Been Given to Employ Ratepayers

FLOATERS NOT WANTED

The employment of taxpayers and heads of families on civic work was urged by Alderman Stratton at the Council meeting last night. He felt that preference should be given to heads of families and to local taxpayers as much as possible. Foreigners should not be considered while local residents are unemployed.

Alderman Duncan replied that the Engineering Department had been adopting this policy. In some cases there were men engaged who were no good. They were simply agitators and kept others from working. The Italian remains at the bottom of a trench and does a day's work. There are a number of Italian ratepayers who are employed and they prove themselves good workmen. They receive consideration with other ratepayers, but instructions had been given not to engage the floating foreigners while ratepayers needed work.

Editors Are Beaten By Suffragettes

Examiner Special:

BELFAST, Ireland, June 3.—Militant suffragettes here have commenced a campaign of assault on the Editors of the local newspapers who combat their cause. To-day Editor Anderson, of the "News-Letter" is in the hospital, seriously hurt as a result of an attack made on him in his office, last night, by two husky militants. Managing Editor Stewart of the same paper was badly beaten.

EXPRESSED SYMPATHY

At the regular meeting of Lansdowne Lodge, Sons of England, the members by a standing vote, expressed their sympathy with the friends and relatives of those who perished in the sinking of the Empress of Ireland.

CLAIMS $50,000

Owners of Steamer Storstad Have Filed Claim Against C.P.R.—Total Loss Now Given at 1027 People

TO-DAY'S DEVELOPMENTS

Special Wire to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, June 3.— The owners of the Storstad have filed a claim against the Canadian Pacific asking fifty thousand dollars damage as a result of the collision with the Empress. This is as a counter claim to the C. P.R.'s demand for two million dollars from the Storstad owners.

The Canadian Pacific has discovered that there were one hundred more persons aboard the Empress than previously reported. Revised lists this morning indicate that 1,479 people sailed, 1,027 were lost, 452 rescued. Ninety-five bodies recovered have been identified.

MONTREAL, P. Q., June 3 — Dr. Grant, ship surgeon of the Empress of Ireland, and Lionel Alexander Hyamson, a British commercial traveller from London, both of whom were rescued, contradicted in a most emphatic terms this morning the statements which are being made attributing careless conduct to the officers and crew of the Storstad, and, at the same time, spoke in no less striking terms of the utter falsity of the charges made against Captain Kendall.

A Tribute From Children.

QUEBEC, June 3. — Perhaps the most pathetic item in the terrible catalogue of sadness was the arrival this morning of the body of a rosy-cheeked seven year old girl from Rimouski, and the revealing of a wreath of forget-me-nots worked by the children in a little French Catholic village on the beach where the flaxen-haired little maid was found. "As a token of love and respect from those who found her," says the pencil inscription. The body has not been claimed.

Lord Mersey's Arrival.

OTTAWA, Ont., June 3.—Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine, informed the House this morning that Lord Mersey sails on the Mauretania next Saturday. In addition to these members it has been decided to appoint four assessors, including two nautical experts, one naval architect and marine engineer. It is expected that the enquiry will be commenced either at Montreal or at Quebec on Monday June 15.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier referred to the preliminary hearing which is being conducted by Commissioner Lindsay and said he doubted the advisability of weeding out evidence for the main commission. Hazen explained that the purpose was to take depositions and to choose witnesses in order that the main enquiry might be expedited.

St. Peter's T.A.S. Annual Picnic

St. Peter's T.A.S. will hold their annual picnic this year on the 1st of July. More attention is being paid to the entertainment of the people, and better boat accommodation is being provided for. The committees are at work now and intend to make the picnic better than ever.

NO BATHING PLACE CHOSEN

Citizens Near Lake Street Objected to Location and Vote Killed the Motion

REQUIESCAT IN PACE

In the cemetery of civic ventures that barely saw the light of day there was a fresh mound this morning. It covers the battered remains of a public bathing place that was born of a lean year. Its wet nurse, the City Council, looked upon it through unsympathetic eyes, joined with those who denounced it for a weakling, abused it for alleged shortcomings and finally strangled it for a worthless thing. Mayor Buller held a brief autopsy, declared the P. B. P. dead and requested friends to withhold flowers.

Winter was breaking when the bathing place was conceived. It and its twin, the playground, were to benefit by the eugenics of public facilities, and in the early spring it was hoped the twain would flourish, while there was time to impart the necessary vigour.

With particular reference to the P. B. P. it gave every evidence of its begotten strength. It was placed under the care of Ald. Johnston and Ald. Stratton—there were possibly others—and they set about to teach it to walk. Rumour from the nursery promised the fulfilment of the prenatal expectations, and last night it was without warning exposed in the temple.

Objected to the Location.

In other words, a letter was received by the Council from Peck, Kerr & McElderry to the effect that the proposed bathing place at the end of Lake Street would be objectionable to Mrs. Alfred McDonald and to the tenants of the McDonald estate adjoining Lake Street. It was also stated that the bottom was littered with chips and sawdust, that the water was usually covered with logs and an eddy—fully described—carried rubbish to the proposed location.

The Proposal.

Ald. Johnston was satisfied with the P. B. P. The location was desirable and there was no dirt apparent in the water. The special committee proposed to erect a building 14 ft. x 16 ft., with a runway to the water at a cost of about $200. Here was the constitutional weakness inherited from the lean year. The building would be divided into two sections, one for girls and the other for boys. Lockers would be provided.

Ald. Stratton as the other special attendant, was satisfied that this P. B. P. possessed all the qualities desired by those who brought it into existence.

The stripling P. B. P. was at this stage subjected to various forms of ill-treatment.

Ald. Saunders the Leader.

Ald. Saunders—I think this will be a nuisance to the people in the vicinity of Lake Street. The McDonald estate houses are very close to it.

Ald. Dobbin reported that a suitable place was obtained in the north end, north of Inverlea Park. The property belongs to the Quaker Oats Co. and could be used as a playground and a swimming place could be easily arranged on the shore. Mr. Denham had offered a five years lease.

Ald. Stratton— We considered the situation and the people and we were satisfied the north end location was a good one.

AAld. Duffus—In view of the fact that there is no objection to north end place, I would suggest that we rent it and fix up a swimming place there.

The Motion.

Ald. Stratton moved, seconded by Ald. Dobbin that the Lake Street site be put in proper condition for public bathing purposes.

Ald. Saunders moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Duncan, that the City establish the first swimming place on the old Martin property north of Inverlea Park. Ald. Duffus supported the amendment.

Aldermen Stratton, Dobbin, Johnston and Langford voted against it. The amendment lost and the motion carried.

A Brief Existence.

It looked for a time as if the north end P. B. P. would be permitted to live. But Ald Anderson and Ald. Green had not voted.

Ald. Saunders called for the ayes and nays on the motion, and Ald. Johnston pointed a knowing finger at Ald. Duncan, who simply laughed a wise laugh.

The resulting vote on the motion was:

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY.

This is the 46th birthday of His Most Excellent Majesty, George the Fifth, by the Grace of God King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyand the Seas, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, only surviving son of his late Majesty King Edward VII. and of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, and grandson of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria; born at Marlborough House, June 3rd, 1865; married, July 6th, 1893, Her Serene Highness, Princess Victoria Mary Augusta Louise Olga Pauline Claudine Agnes, born may 26th, 1867 (Queen Mary), only daughter of her Royal Highness the late Duchess and His Highness the late Duke of Teck; succeeded to the Throne May 6, 1910, crowned at Westminster Abbey, June 22, 1911. God Save the King.

QUITE IN SYMPATHY.

Our evening contemporary in commenting on the nomination of Mr. Soden, mentions among his other good qualifications that "he has declared himself quite in sympathy with the principles of the Conservative party and the record of the Whitney Government." This is indeed faint praise. The Review is careful not to say that Mr. Soden is not in sympathy with the policy of the Whitney Government. A banish-the-bar candidate, as he declares himself to be, posing as a supporter of a keep-the-bar government, sets out upon his campaign with the riding of two horses, going in opposite directions. The candidate with diplomatic declaration of his fealty to the abolition of the bar, will rather divide his support in the coming election. The man who is in favour of restrictive temperance legislation will hesitate to vote for a candidate, who, if elected, as a supporter of a keep-the-bar government, will not be in a position to "deliver the goods"; and the man who wants to keep the bar cannot be expected to get much from a man who wants to abolish the bar—if he means what he says. Mr. Soden makes the main plank in his platform, the main plank in Mr. Rowell's platform; and he doesn't say a word in favour of the platform of his political leader, the abolition of treating. If Sir James Whitney is returned, and if Mr. Soden sits behind him in Parliament, he will be in a deuce of a quandry when the division bell rings for voting on a measure involving the abolition or the keeping of the bar. Clever as he may be, he can't possibly vote at the same time for abolishing and keeping the bar. Though Mr. Soden may be in sympathy with the policy of the Conservative party, he is more in sympathy with the policy of appealing for support on false pretense—on diametrically opposite grounds—running with the hare and hunting with the hounds.

LESSON OF THE DUKE'S VISIT

Mayor Buller, the reception committee and the cooperating citizens have reason to be highly gratified with the successful management of the reception of His Royal Highness the Governor-General, and his family; and Mayor Buller, has reason to be gratified with the assurance of the Duke of Connaught that he was "highly pleased with the City of Peterborough." This shows one thing—that the Duke is polite, too polite to say things that doubtless had a place in the back of his mind. Such academic commendation is pleasing for the moment,—but it has its, danger. If we let the polite opinion of the Duke make us satisfied with our civic condition we shall put a bar upon progress and discourage a recently inaugurated enterprise to improve and beautify the city. The Duke would perhaps have done us a greater kindness if he had pointed out a few things that were not as they should be. In that event we should be stimulated to the work of doing better. For instance—it may be a small matter, but it is a straw showing the direction of the wind. The people on the line of route of the royal progress, thronged the sides of the street and were close enough to see the ducal party as it passed by, but they couldn't see it for the dust raised by the pilot auto-car, occupied by Alderman Duffus and Fire Chief Howard. The Duke may have been "highly pleased with Peterborough," but we are not pleased with some things. The Duke has come and gone, he saw only the bright side—he didn't suffer from the dust because he was to windward of it; but we have got to stay here and live here. We are loyal but we are not loyal enough to take the dust from a royal or vice-regal auto, without — well — sneezing; especially when we remember that we pay at the rate of 26 mills on the dollar to have our streets watered, so that we can see a duke without dust.

This is a small matter perhaps, but it is one of the many things that must be remedied before we can fold our hands and be satisfied and feel that we have nothing to do in the way of betterment, even with the academic commendation of a royal visitor.

It is a laudable ambition to make Peterborough worthy of the praise of visitors; but it is a better ambition to make Peterborough worthy of our own pride, a delight to ourselves, a beautiful city in our own eyes, and for our own comfort. We have no cause for satisfaction; because we can make Peterbofough so much better, so much more beautiful than it is, that we should all pull together and work without rest to accomplish this—to strive to realize upon the possibilities of improvement we possess. A citizen returned a day or two ago from a visit to Western Ontario towns and cities, including what is regarded as one of the finest cities of the United States—Detroit; and coming back he only then realized by comparison how much better was Peterborough in the matter of beauty of situation, and how much greater the possibilities of unsurpassable beautification, compared with other less favoured cities. The underlying lesson of the Duke's commendation is that we must not rest satisfied, nor rest in any sense, till we have made Peterborough what it is now in many ways, and what it can be made to an infinitely higher point, the most beautiful city in Ontario.

The Issue Of The Coming Campaign

Mr. Rowell, Liberal leader, at Woodstock on Saturday:

"The issue is before the people of this Province; it is before them for judgment. From Ottawa to Sarnia; from the Great Lakes to the northwestern boundary of Ontario, that issue, for the first time, in a definite, concrete proposal, is before the people. I have discharged my responsibility. The continuance of the open bar rests upon the conscience of the people of Ontario to-day.

"If the people of this Province want the bar to go, and will send to the Legislature men who will support me in doing it, in the first Legislature that meets after the election, an Act will be passed wiping out every bar in the Province of Ontario."

There will be no evasion of pledges under Rowell. His speech at Woodstock on Saturday rings true. It is upon our conscience that the continuation of the open bar rests. The people of Ontario are on trial as well as the liquor traffic. What shall the verdict be?

ounces to the pound be accepted, providing no print was under fifteen ounces. Farmers stated that some butter was made on Wednesday and Thursday and by Saturday some of the moisture had evaporated. But butter churned on Friday would not lose this constituent by market day. There was the same quantity of butter in each sample, but in the latter there was a trifle more moisture.

Some of the prints were found to weigh slightly over sixteen ounces, while others were slightly under the pound. The Committee recommended that in a basket of thirty or sixty pounds of butter, for example, the average weight be taken into consideration and not simply the weight of an indivinal print.

The City is paying too much for a 1-2 ounce of butter, Mr. Elliott remarked, when trouble is made for the farmer for a single print.

Only for Producers.

It was also recommended that only producers be given the privilege of selling on the market. Fruit, fish and meat dealers would be shut out by this provision and only those who grow or produce goods be permitted to sell them. This would close the market to dealers who simply buy their supplies from the farmers and bring them into the City to retail on the market.

Better Use of Building.

It was also suggested that the Arcade and Market Building be considered from the standpoint of its present value and service to the people. It was felt that a building might be erected on the east side of the Square for the sale of butter and the present building and arcade turned into offices and stores.

Mr. N. C. Cameron spoke along allied lines and members of the Council expressed their approval of the interest displayed by the Merchants' Association.

Ald. Johnston moved, seconded by Ald. Dobbin that the Property Committee and the Association arrange to deal especially with the recommendations presented.

Mayor Buller also called attention to a former proposal to move the Market on Charlotte Street, east of Lewis Street and asked that this be given some consideration by the special committee.

WHERE MEN GET COCOA WE DRINK

We drink our cocoa regularly and enjoy it, but though we know it comes from a plant that grows in hot countries, we may not know just how it grows, and the form in which it is gathered ready for the manufacturer, says the Children's Magazine. Cocoa is really the seed of the cocoa or cacao tree. The fruit is very much the shape of a cucumber, and is about seven or eight inches long. It is yellow in colour, and ripens to red when the sun catches it. It grows close to the trunk. The fruit is gathered and left for several days in heaps to ferment. Then the thick rind is opened, and the very numerous almond-like seeds, or beans, are removed and dried. It is from them that the cocoa we drink is made. Each bean is covered with a thin brown skin, which is taken away, and after the beans have been dried and broken up they are called cocoa nibs. The cocoa tree gives two crops of fruit every year.

GOOD GOVERNMENT

(Written for the Boston Monitor.)

Good government has become a watchword in many communities today, and the world over, mankind is reaching out to attain a more just and efficient administration of their affairs, political, commercial and social. This universal human desire is manifested in demands for more impartial laws and their more honest execution; for cleaner business methods; for greater equality between men and women; for the abolition of ignorance, dishonesty and despotism. In every quarter the trend is toward progress and light, order and intelligent activity.

The definition which Christian Science gives of God, as Principle, helps us to see that God really governs all. If God, whom we have always been taught to regard as all-powerful, ever-present and all-knowing, is Principle, then there must be a definite rule for the solution of every phase of the problem of government. When we have accepted this promise, our next step is to find how this universal Principle is available to every man and how it may be applied to every situation. This we can begin to do by acknowledging God to be the governor of His universe and by denying that evil has power to misgovern it. Material evidence may be much against this statement of Truth, but we must look away from wrong concepts if we would reach right results. From this standpoint we can advance another step and see that God has endowed man, to whom He gave dominion over all the earth, with power to govern, to be a law to himself and all of his affairs.

Because our starting point is Principle, we do not find many conflicting forms of government working against each other, but one universal government under which all things work together for good. This Principle each may measurably prove for himself to the extent that he lets the divine law of good operate in his life.

Jesus gave us the Golden Rule by which good government shall come to pass. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"; as well as the synonymous commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Co-ordinate with these Christian requirements is another, best expressed in the homely advice: "Mind your own business." The universal government of good can be worked out only on the basis of individual obedience to the law of God. Government, like charity, begins at home. Only as we first learn to obey God shall we find ourselves in harmony with the laws which govern all His ideas.

In ever widening circles of human experience men are putting into practice their understanding of a demonstrable Principle in the government of their affairs. They are find that it is as applicable to the adjustment of difficulties between organizations as between individuals, and that it offers a permanent remedy for national and international strife. This universal Principle is so simple that a child can understandand demonstrate it; so comprehensive that it is available for the solution of domestic problems as well as those of finance and state; so direct that the obstruction and opposition of material theories and methods go out before it as darkness before light.

For centuries, before and after the Christian era, men have looked for the realization of that perfect government proclaimed by Isaiah: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." Never has it seemed nearer of fulfilment than in this, our own day. The unrest of the world would only appear to be fulfilling that other prophecy (Ezekiel): "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, . . . until he come whose right it is." Mankind may well rejoice in the passing of the old material modes of government and the incoming of the new-old reign of Christ, Truth, which will eventually, we are told in the Christian Science textbook, "rule all nations and peoples—imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science."

This ideal government is not only a possibility, but is merging out of the mists of probability into the light of scientific understanding and demonstration. The coming of this good government cannot be to one individual, one city, one state, one nation. It has a whole salvation to bring to all mankind from every evil which has ever been projected upon humanity in the name of despotic government, whether it has assumed the form of personal domination or of ganized oppression. Mrs. Eddy has set forth the blessed results to be realized by the operation of the God-Principle in the lives of men: "One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars; fulfils the Scripture, 'Love thy neighbour as thyself'; annihilates pagan and Christian idolatry,—whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political and religious codes; equalizes the sexes; annuls the curse on man, and leaves nothing that can sin, suffer, be punished or destroyed."

The Silks Favored by Fashion

This is a Silk Season. Silks are lovelier than ever before. Fashion has been generous in according her favour to many weaves this season, demanding only that they be of the required softness to drape beautifully. Equally lavish has she been with colour—favoring vivid colours, staple shades and wonderful colour combinations to an almost equal degree.

All Are Here In This Great Silk Stock

Every weave that has quality to commend it, every colour and shade that the ingenuity of colour artists could devise.

The Council Record

Some of the Minor Items Which Were Attended To Last Night--Citizens Thanked For Their Co-operation in Welcome to Royal Visitors--Message of Condolence to the Salvation Army---Cedar Street Wants Its Name Changed--Firemen to Clean Streets.

SYMPATHY TO SALVATION ARMY AND THE C. P. R.

Ald. Stratton stated that he felt the Council should pass a resolution of sympathy to Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, President of the C.P.R., in connection with the loss of the Empress of Ireland. Ald. Duffus added that a resolution of condolence be extended on behalf of the City to the Staff of the Salvation Army, Toronto, in their great bereavement of Friday last.

Ald. Stratton moved, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that City Clerk Armstrong draft these resolutions and forward them respectively to the C. P. R. and the Salvation Army Headquarters.—Carried.

THANK CITIZENS FOR THEIR COOPERATION

The cooperation of the citizens with the Council in preparing for the visit of the Governor-General's party, deserved recognition, said Ald. Duffus. He moved, seconded by Ald. Johnston, that the gratitude of the Council be expressed to all those who loaned their automobiles, to those who decorated their properties, and to all who in any way contributed to the reception of the Duke of Connaught.—Carried.

A 350-FOOT TURNOUT FOR STREET RAILWAY CO.

W. H. Munro, Manager of the Peterborough Radial Railway Co., wrote asking that the double track they are placing from Park to Reid streets be 350 feet instead of the regulation 250 feet for turnouts. In asking for this permission Mr. Munro wrote that there would be nothing detrimental to the City in making the turnout 100 feet longer. City Engineer Parsons favoured granting the request and the Council granted it.

WILL PAINT BAND STAND IN THE PARK

The band stand in Victoria Park requires a coat of paint, according to Ald. Langford.

Moved by Ald. Duffus, seconded by Ald. Green, that the stand be toned up $25 worth and no more.—Carried.

CITY PAYS BILL OF $5 TO PETERBOROUGH L. & P. CO.

Mr. W. H. Munro was persistent in presenting the P. L. & P. Company's claim for $5 for thawing a water service leading to the Nicholls Hospital. One sentence alone expressed the reason: "You can readily understand that if we had thought that you would refuse to pay us for the service we would not have carried it out." And evidently Mr. Munro is determined to secure that $5. This was about the tenth reminder to the City. The payment of the bill was recommended in the Finance Committee's report.

MR. MORRIS MUST PLY HIS BUSINES ELSEWHERE.

J. Morris, of Greek extraction, asked the Council for a license to sell peanuts and popcorn on the streets and around the parks. Ald. Duncan objected, on the grounds that this was wrong, retailing in front of stores where some merchants had the same goods for sale. No action was taken.

AUCTIONEER GETS A REFUND OF $25.00.

J. F. Thornton asked for a refund of $25.00 on his license fee as Auctioneer. He took it out before the fee was reduced from $50 to $25.

Moved by Ald. Green, seconded by Ald. Stratton, that the $25 be refunded as requested.—Carried.

WILL ATTEND TO KING EDWARD PARK.

Ald. Langford stated that Mr. F. Ayre had offered to supervise the cutting of the trees in King Edward Park if the City will pay for a man. A number of them need first aid.

Moved by Ald. Duncan, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that Ald. Langford be authorized to secure a man to work for a few days under the direction of Mr. Wise.—Carried.

ONE PETITIONER FOR WALK ON DUBLIN STREET

Justus Blodgett petitioned for a concrete walk on the south side of Dublin Street, from Downie Street to the bridge, a distance of about 90 feet.—Board of Works.

EVIDENTLY MR. E. A. STINSON IS "ON THE JOB"

E. A. Stinson wrote that he had taken over the livery business conducted by Mr. Story and asked for a share of the City's patronage.—Board of Works.

BOATHOUSE FOR MR. NAP. TROMBLEY

Moved by Ald. Duncan, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that Mr. Napoleon Trombley's application for a boathouse lot north of the C.P.R. bridge, be granted, with the usual rental terms and restrictions.—Carried.

POLES REMOVED WITHOUT PREJUDICE

The removal of the pole at the northeast corner of Brock and George streets was agreed to by Mr. W. H. Munro on the understanding that the action was without prejudice to the Peterborough Light and Power Co.'s position or dealings re poles which the city wants removed.

The moving of the poles at the northeast corner of Dalhousie and George streets, and southeast corner of King and George streets were undertaken on the same conditions.

POSITION OF FIREMEN AS STREET CLEANERS

Alderman Green told the Council last night that it could not be expected of the firemen to act as street cleaners. Chief Howard and the men had agreed to clean the streets on several occasions, but the men did not receive any extra money, and the work required four or five men to work six hours. The Board of Works' report passed with a clause providing that the firemen flush the streets periodically.

CITY ENGINEER WILL INSPECT SCAFFOLDS

The Minister of Public Works wrote the Council enquiring as to whether the Council has appointed a scaffold inspector for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the Building Trades Protection Act. The matter was referred to the Property Committee.

HASTINGS NEWS

Items of Interest From The Thriving Eastern Village

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, June 3.—A large delegation from here drove over to Westwood on Thursday last to attend the different sessions of the district Sabbath school convention which convened in the Presbyterian church of that village. The afternoon session was opened by devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. D. A. Thomson, who also gave an excellent outline of how to teach a Sunday school lesson to a senior class. An excellent address was given by Mr. H. A. Waite of Toronto, who handled the problem of "How to keep the adolescent boy and girl interested in Sunday school work," in a most able manner. At the close of this session, lunch was served on the church lawn and a very social hour spent together. The evening session was opened by a thoughtful address by Rev. Mr. Noble, of Norwood, on "Reverence." This was followed by a forcible illustration of "How to prepare the lesson," by Rev. T. H. Anderson of Hastings, who gave some very helpful notes on this important subject. But the address of the evening was given by Mr. H. Waite, who held the large audience spell-bound while he went on to prove that "the Sunday school is the greatest educational force in the world to-day." The speaker, though very youthful in appearance, showed marked ability and a thorough knowledge of his subject, while the listeners were one in the opinion that the great secret of his success lay in the fact that his whole heart and soul was in the work to which he is devoting his time and talents. The choir rendered excellent service, which added materially to the enjoyment of the evening.

Altogether the convention was one of the most successful in the history of the district, and the executive are to be congratulated on the excellent programme provided.

A number of sports drove over to Norwood on Friday to attend the lacrosse game played on the grounds there.

The Rev. T. H. Anderson gave an interesting talk on Sunday evening on the subject of "The Relation of Athletics to Religion."

Mr. Mason of Cobourg, passed through the district last week, demonstrating to the farmers the benefits obtained from silos.

Miss Ruby Comstock and some friends motored down from Peterborough on Tuesday last and spent a pleasant evening at her home here.

Mr. Archie Thomson, son of Rev. D. A. Thomson, town, occupied the pulpit of the Presbyterian church in Norwood a week ago.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Crowley spent Saturday in Peterborough.

Mr. J. Stuart of Toronto, spent Saturday in Hastings.

Mr. Jones has added a new auto to his livery and is prepared to make [illegible] of it.

Mr. Earl Ivey of Norwood, spent Sunday in town.

Mr. E. Sargent of Westwood, gave us a call on Sunday.

Mr. Ford of Norwood was here for Sunday.

Mr. Roy Watson of Norwood, with friends here for Sunday.

Mr. J. Lobb is receiving congratulations from friends on the occasion of his marriage.

Miss Cook of Norwood, was in town for Sunday.

Mr. Carberry, stage driver, has purchased an auto for his work.

SPOONING NOT A CRIME

BROOKLYN, N.Y., June 2. — In the police court the case was called of Policeman Stedwell versus Andrew Cattrella, twenty, and Hannah Schmidt, eighteen, who were detected spooning on the Eastern Parkway.

"Officer, were you ever in love?" asked the court.

"Y-y-yes," admitted Stedwell.

"Were you conscious, in so being, of committing a crime?"

"N-no, yer Honour."

"The Court does not regard it as its province to ask either of those defendants if they are in love. Andrew can ask that question at the proper time, and Hannah can make fitting response. It is only this Court's function to rule on the law, and I know of no law which forbids spooning on a parkway bench, or anywhere else for that matter. Discharged!"

It only remains to be said that the new Lovers' Lane is about ten miles long, and there is lots of room for all comers.

John Short Is Appointed Chief of Police

Of Lindsay—Aldermen Make Insinuations—Has Been Some Lobbying

(Lindsay Post.)

Acting on the recommendation of Ald. Clarke, Chairman of Police Committee, at last night's council meeting, Dep-Reeve Smale and Ald. Baker moved that John Short be appointed Chief of Police and that a by-law be prepared providing for such appointment.

Dep-Reeve Warren— Just a minute, please. The council is proceeding at a rapid pace and before any requests from applicants had been received. This is the first time I heard of this matter since Chief Chilton resigned. If the council wishes to appoint Mr. Short, I have no kick coming. It is usually the custom for to receive applicants. Of course there has been considerable "lobbying" done in this matter.

Ald. Clarke —I wish to state that there has been no lobbying. I defy any man to say—

Dep-Reeve Warren—I did not say you did any lobbying—I said—

Ald. Clarke—Just wait a minute. I defy any man to say I did any lobbying. If I tried to influence any man I would like to know it.

Dep-Reeve Warren — Has this appointment not been discussed in private?

Ald. Clarke—I don't know anything about that. I am not around bar rooms listening to discussions.

Dep-Reeve Warren—So I am around bar-rooms am I? You mean that for an insinuation. Well if I am around bar-rooms, I am in just as respectable company as your's. You can take that.

Ald. Clarke — Mr. Short's appointment was made on my recommendation. I have known Mr. Short all my life time. We all know him. We know his strong and weak points and he knows what the council expects, and what a position of this nature calls for.

Had Two Ribs Broken

et cask, which he clung to, and after 0 minutes in the water was picked up by one of the life boats. The lurching of the vessel before he went into the water had thrown him against an iron bar and broke two of his ribs, so you can imagine the awful experience he must have had. When he landed it took quite a while to warm up. He ost everything, including a great many valuable papers, but we are all so thankful his life was spared. He is at present in the Jeffery Hale Hospital, Quebec, but the doctor says he should e able to leave for home inside of a fortnight. Mr. Douglas is arranging transportation via the Cunard line from New York. Mr. Douglas and family, as well as myself, intend sailing about the latter part of June via the Mauritania or Aquitania for Liverpool. Mr. Wakeford's son was a strong swimmer and though he had no life belt (being an officer he had supplied every one he had time to get, to others) spent over half an hour in the water and was picked up by the Storstad, being absolutely void of clothing. He was wrapped in a tablecloth, which was all that could be supplied.

They both state there was scarcely any fog and the boats could be seen a couple of miles away. It was also perfectly calm, and they cannot understand why the accident could not have been avoided. They claim it was absolutely impossible after the Storstad backed away, to save any more passengers. The ship sank so quickly they claim the great majority had never left the cabins.

The scenes described were simply heart breaking.

We have seen so many sorrowful sights the past few days it is simply impossible to relate them. In Toronto particularly, whole families have been lost. We expect to arrive in Toronto to-morrow morning.

TEACHERS LEAVE ON EXCURSION

Take Advantage of the King's Birthday to Have Their Annual Outing

About eight o'clock this morning, in the neighbourhood of seventy-five of the Public school teachers of the City left for a sail down the river on their annual excursion. They will touch at Jubilee Point, Gore's Landing and Harwood during the sail, and return late to-night. Dinner will be had at Harwood, and a very enjoyable time was anticipated by those who embarked this morning. Last year the excursion was held to Stony Lake. Owing to the fact that to-day is the King's birthday the schools of the City are closed and the teachers enabled to hold their annual outing.

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2000, No 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only was $16.80.

On the 1st of May 1914 the above Policy matured and he received in cash $2620.25.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2000.00 instead of $2620.25 as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

PRESENTATION TO MRS. HAYES

Officers Wives Say Farewell to Her on the Eve of Her Departure From the City

At the Armouries last evening in the Officers' Parlour, the officers' wives assembled to bid farewell to Mrs. (Judge) Hayes, one of their members, who is soon to leave the city.

Not wishing Mrs. Hayes to leave without some little token of remembrance, Mrs. (Col.) Clegg, on behalf of the officers' wives presented their friend with a most beautiful Orange Lancashire canary.

Mrs. Hayes was quite delighted with her pet, and in words very suitable thanked them for their very kind remembrance, which she appreciated very much, and stated that it gave her great pleasure to be among them once more. One of her greatest regrets was in leaving Peterborough and in severing her connection with the officers' wives, sisters, and friends, where there has always been a strong bond of friendship, and where away in her new home she would always watch with keen interest the movements of the 57th Regiment in remembrance of which she would call her bird the 57th Warbler.

Mrs. Hayes also thanked thase who were so very kind to be present. After the presentation dainty refreshments were served. A beautiful bouquet of American Beauty Roses adorned the centred table, daintily arranged by Mrs. Eastwood and Mrs. Walker.

DEATH OF GIRL IS A MYSTERY

JOHNSTOWN, June 3—Lying with her head pillowed on her arm as though in sleep, her body inclosed in a circle of boulders that gave the impression of a natural coffin, Miss Irene Sutton, who came to Gloversville a week ago, to visit relatives, was found dead at 11.50 o'clock on Saturday night. All the circumstances indicate that she was murdered.

The Fonda, Johnstown & Gloversville Railroad Company opened its pleasure resort at Sacandaga, about 30 miles north of here, on Decoration Day. With other pleasure seekers, Miss Sutton went up there in the afternoon. The last time that she was seen was at 5.30 in the afternoon, when she was in the company of another woman and two men.

While whirling about on the roller coaster, shortly after 11 o'clock on Saturday night a young man lost his hat and when he reached the ground a friend joined him in a search for it among the bushes skirting the base of the coaster tower. During that search they found the woman's body lying within 18 inches of the base of the tower.

Although the head lay partly on a large boulder, the skull was not crushed, as it would have been had she fallen 50 feet, the height of the tower at that point. There was every indication that she had been in a struggle before dying. Her low shoes were off and one was imbeded in the sand about 20 feet distant, while the other was sticking in the sand about ten feet away in another direction. Her hair was down her back. Her combs and hairpins were found scattered over considerable territory. Her stockings were covered with sand on the bottoms. There was blood oozing from her mouth and marks on her throat. There was no fracture of either the skull or jaw, but her left leg was broken at the knee and her right leg bruised with other abrasions on

Barn And Contents Totally Destroyed

As a Result of Blaze Yesterday Afternoon

Two fires yesterday afternoon gave the firemen a busy time. One was a serious one, and as has happened very often of late, was just outside the Town where the fire brigade could not reach it with the hose. A barn below the De Laval Company's plant caught fire in some manner about 4 o'clock, yesterday afternoon, and was completely burned. In it were vehicles and other things, only a part of which were saved, and the loss may total over $1000. Some insurance was carried on the barn and contents.

About forty minutes later the brigade was called to Driscoll Terrace, East City, where two men had been burning caterpillars with torches and had set fire to the grass and also the crib work of the G. T. R. and the Brigade was called out. The fire was put out before much damage was done.

In connection with the first fire, yesterday afternoon, it is interesting to not that the last half dozen serious fires by which houses and barns have been totally destroyed have been just a short distance outside the City.

PRINCESS MARY HELD TICKET

LONDON, June 3.—Princess Mary feels aggrieved because she was deprived of the fruits of her sporting luck. She drew Durbar II. in the annual Derby pool, held in the Royal household. The drawing was made in Buckingham Palace two days before the race, and the Queen, learning that the Princess had drawn a horse, would not allow her to keep the ticket. The Princess therefore gave the ticket to her dressing maid, who thus pocketed first prize of $1,250.

This is the first time that the household sweepstake has been won by a member of the Royal family, except when Queen Alexandra, as Princess of Wales, drew Shotover in the Derby of 1882.

MAY REACH THE PEACE PLAN TO-DAY

Special to The Examiner:

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 3.—It is expected that mediators will today get down to a discussion of the general peace plan, between the United States and Mexico. It is believed that the latest developments and Huerta's concessions may indicate practically the end of the internal dissensions in Mexico, and if the Tampico incident tangle can be straightened out, much of the disturbed country may enter into a era of peace and prosperity.

WANT NAME CHANGED

A petition was presented to the City Council last night by residents of Cedar street requesting that the street name be changed to Murray. it was stated that considerable confusion arises to those not familiar with the locality and that Cedar street is in reality but a continuation of Murray street. Among the names appended were Geo. Laing, W. J. Whaley, J. W. Worth, H. E. Connolly, J. J. Doris, A. McIntosh, Chas. P. Murty, T. J. Doris.

Moved by Aldermen Duffus and Saunders that the petition be referred to the Board of Works. Carried.

Alderman Duncan—They ought to change the name of Elm street.

The City Clerk stated that a by-law would have to be passed and to accomplish the change it would have to be advertised in the Ontario Gazette, approved by the Judge and generally parceled in tape of a crimson hue.

Mayor Buller suggested that several other streets whose names require changing be included with Cedar street.

REMINISCENCE OF THE FIFE PICNICS

Several years ago the late Dr. Fife, Mr. J. A. Fife, of the Collegiate Institute, and the late Mrs. Alex. Fife, of, Otonabee, were the moving spirits in the organization of the Fife Picnics, for many years the occasion of the annual gathering of the clan Fife. The picnics which were generally held in Otonabee where the Fifes do most abound, were discontinued, after 13 or 15 years continuance, on the death of two of the promoters and the removal of another to Edmonton, where he is now superintendent of chools. The following poem written for the picnic of 1897, was composed by the late Mrs. Wadby, a daughter of Mr. J. Heal, Dublin street. City, whose wife was a Fife. The poem is of genealogical value and will doubtless revive pleasant memories in many a mind of those who had taken part in the Fife reunions:

COMPOSED FOR THE FIFE PICNIC, 1897.

One hundred years ago to-day,
On fair Old Scotia's soil,
Was born a wee bit laddie,
To be a son of toil.

His mother, then a proud woman,
With all a mother's pride,
Called him Johnnie, after the man
Who'd won her for his bride.

Now as the ever rolling years
Were creeping on apace,
Six other little brothers
Were added to their race.

But when this family grew up,
And John was twenty-three
They thought they'd leave old Scotland fair,
For Canada so free.

They talked this plan with neighbour near,
And Ennon was their name.
They asked them for to join their plan,
And help them share their fame.

So in eighteen hundred and twenty,
When the days were bright and warm,
They boarded a good ship called the Hope,
And braved the ocean's storms.

For six long tedious weeks they sailed,
Ere they reached the land they sought,
Then by the Indian River,
Their new-found homes they bought.

Now 'twas here their family flourished,
And ever proved to be
An honest, honoured company,
And unbroken family.

'Till John, with his six young brothers,
Got married all but one—

Then to the Fifes that now were left
He was known as "Uncle John."

And when his duty here on earth
He'd done as he knew best,
His loving Master made him come
And enter into rest.

His loving friends around him wept
As they gazed upon his face,
Then bore him to the grave-yard hill,
To be his resting place.

Now all the Fifes that are alive
Have formed one Scottish clan,
And meet to-day in honour of
That loved tho' long lost man.

Oh! weep not for the friends who're gone
To yonder hill to rest—
They now with spirits freed from strife
Are roaming with the blest.

But let use each true pleasure seek,
Enjoy the meeting here,
For, tho' the promise is not given
That all may meet next year.

But still we hope that God will spare
Our little Scottish band,
And may it ever prove to be
An honour to the land.

Oh! could old Scotia only know
The loyal hearts so true,
That gather here from year to year,
She'd be rejoicing too.

—Harriet E. Heal, Roseneath.

MILK PER ACRE

Average Yield in Ontario is Not Much More Than 600 Pounds Per Acre

If it may be assumed that the farm of the average factory patron is fairly well adapted to dairying, that the patron himself is inclined towards dairying, rather than, let us say, fruit growing, and that his cows are fairly good, then it will be of interest to note how the farm is made to respond to this dairy inclination.

There are frequently noticed yields as low as 250 pounds of milk per acre cultivated including pasture, but some good patrons obtain 750 and 800 pounds per acre. Even this is little enough, for there are plenty of authentic records of 1,100 and 2,100 pounds of milk per acre. It should not be extremely difficult to obtain more than this, even 2,500 or 3,000 pounds.

This latter figure is a long, long way ahead of the yields already mentioned of only 250 pounds which may be found on many a so-called dairy farm in Canada, and is indicative of the possibilities in reach of the factory patron who is really anxious to attain first rank.

It is questionable if the average yield per acre in Ontario is much more than 600 pounds of milk. If loyal, whole-hearted support is given to the local factory and to our national industry of dairying, the farm and the dairy herd will be made far more productive. Great help will be derived by keeping individual records of each cow, because the old-established, complacent "average" cow has no intention whatever of assisting the average patron to get 3,000 pounds of milk from the average acre. The first necessary step is to know for certain that each cow is a good producer, then one may aim with more hope at $80 or $40 per acre.

Came To See The Duke---Disappeared

An inmate of the Protestant Home has wandered away from that institution, and the authorities are unable to locate him.

Joseph Cunningham is his name, and he is described as a man aged 60 years, of slight build, and at the time of his disappearance was wearing a soft hat, a light flannel summer coat, dark vest, dark small stripped pants, and tan boots. He is 5 feet 6 inches tall, has shaggy gray whiskers, and his hair is rather long.

He came down town on Monday to see the Duke of Connaught, and has not been heard of since. He is slightly mentally deficient, and, on that account, was not given the privilege to come to town, as were the other inmates of the home. He took French leave, however, and the result is his disappearance.

Any information concerning the old man's whereabouts will be received by either Mr. F. W. Miller, Relief Officer, or the Police Department.

Stray Shots From the Firing Line

There were no orders issued at the regular drill of the 57th Regiment held last evening.

The work last night consisted of a manoeuvre. Three companies were marched out to Nichols Oval, to form an outpost, to a supposed main body that was at the halt, some 5 or 6 miles to the rear of the outpost, in a northerly direction. The remainder of the regiment, formed an attacking party on the main body. They unexpectedly came in contact with the outpost, and a sharp encounter ensued. During this, according to the story told by Captain McPherson, Captain Carruthers and Lieutenant Tomlin, were captured by Private Knox, 8 Company, and their companies were lost.

The parade state showed an attendance of 143 of all ranks, without the band. C Company boasted the largest turnout, with 38 non-coms., and men, and three officers on parade. C Company is certainly going strong.

At the Armouries on Monday, during the visit of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, the officers decoration was pinned to the breast of Col. C. H. Rogers, of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, and Captain Hounsel, of the 57th Regiment, by His Royal Highness. This is a great honour not only for the recipients but for their regiments.

A few facts concerning Captain Hounsell's career with the 57th, would not be here misplaced. Captain Hounsell has seen service with the 57th Regiment for 27 years, and has served under the following commanding officers: Colonels S. Z. Rodgers, Bell, Edwards, Miller, Stevenson and Clegg.

He enlisted as a private in 1874, at the age of 13 years, and at that time had great difficulty in passing the examination of the medical officer. The present city regiment was organized in 1886, after the war in the Northwest in '85, until which time it was a rural regiment having companies stationed at all the surrounding towns, and villages.

In 1892 Captain Hounsell, then a private, went to the Military School in Toronto, for three months, where he was successful in obtaining a Sergeant's certificate. Previously he had been promoted from private to lance corporal, and corporal.

In 1895 he was made a subaltern, and later qualified for a captain. He then studied for a field officer, and has held such a rank for the past 12 or 13 years. It is a boast of Captain Hounsell that he has never missed an annual inspection, during the whole of the time he has been connected with the regiment. Some of the present officers were put through their paces by him, as well as most of the men who went to South Africa from this city.

The regular drill of the 24th Field Battery C.F.A., will be held this evening at the Armouries, in the Gun Sheds. The battery goes to camp, to Petawawa Army Reserve, on June 13th.

The 3rd Dragoons will go into camp a week from Sunday, leaving Peterborough at 2 p.m.

No Bathing Place Chosen

Ayes —Aldermen Stratton, Dobbin, Johnston and Langford.

Nays—Ald. Saunders, Duncan, Duffus, Green and Anderson.

Ald. Johnston—We might as well let it alone. They'll have to get a bath the best way they can.

The P. B. P. had been done for. But who knows, there is such a thing as the day of resurrection.

The Reason.

Ald. Anderson—I was not satisfied with the location suggested. The north was too far away.

Ald. Stratton—You want it in East City, I suppose. There is not a better place in the whole south end than that at [illegible] Street.

Ald. Anderson—But there were objections raised to that.

Ald. Stratton—A few people would kick no matter where we chose.

Ald. Duncan—I believe there is no better place than Lock Street, but the MacDonald house is only fifty feet away from the bank.

Ald. Green—I voted against it because we haven't the money. We started out as poor as church mice. I don't object to bathing places, but we can't spend from $300 to $500 for something we can't afford.

The Park Twin Lives.

Moved by Ald. Johnston, seconded by Ald. Langford, that Aldermen Dobbin, Anderson, Green and Stratton be a committee to deal with securing park lots, to get options and probably prepare a by-law to submit to the people for their endorsation of permanent playgrounds, Mayor Buller's East City Park and his walk along the creek from McDonald Street to Jackson Park.

CYCLISTS MAY USE SIDEWALKS

The Lindsay Bicycle By-law was amended by the Council of that town on Monday evening. The result is that cyclists are now permitted to use the sidewalks on all streets except those that are paved, the only condition being that they must dismount when they meet pedestrians. The measure met with the hearty approval of the Council.

To-day's Cases In Police Court

Diny Daly was charged with being drunk in this morning's Police Court. The Chief said that Diny never considered himself drunk till he was down, so Magistrate Dumble discharged him to let him go to work.

Florent Binkhurst, who was drunk and disorderly yesterday afternoon, was fined $3.00.

John Boulton was in court this morning over some domestic trouble. He was charged with infidelity to his wife, but G. N. Gordon, who appeared for Boulton, told Magistrate Dumble that they would try and settle the case out of court.

Labour Conditions In Peterborough

The following account is given in the Labour Gazette of the activities in and around Peterborough for the month of April:

There was a pronounced improvement in the condition of the labour market during April, especially in the building trades, but large numbers of both skilled and unskilled works remain out of employment. Real estate transactions are brisk, and contractors claim that the work of construction in this city will be satisfactory. The new customs house and post office will be started during the spring; two new churches, many dwellings and smaller buildings will be erected. The Wm. Hamilton Company is busy, having secured the contract for the manufacture of three hundred ornamental lighting standards for the city of Windsor, and also the contract to supply 125 combination poles for trolley and light, and 375 ornamental standards for the municipality of Outremont, Quebec. One of the departments of the Canadian General Electric Company, which has been shut down since last fall, has started up full handed again. The Peterborough Radial Railway Company is extending its line, and also laying heavier rails on the old line. The paving of the streets in the centre of the city has commenced, and a large number of men have found employment at this and other civic work, on sewers and laying of sidewalks. The rate of taxation this year will be twenty-six mills, one more than last year.

Farmers were quiet until the latter part of the month owing to the ground being so dry that they could not start ploughing. The fall wheat and clover gives promise of a good crop. Potatoes are scarce, selling for $1.30 per bag. The cheese factories are busy repairing their plants and preparing to open for the season.

The outlook for the lumbermen is not good, the water being so low that they have not been able to commence logging operations.

The Central Railway is laying rails west of McAlpine. The contract calls for the completion of the work by December 31. This road will open up the whole of the north country.

GETTING A START

By NATHANIEL C. FOWLER JR.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Appertaining Your Salary.

This article is addressed to self-supporting men and women, or to those who live, or are obliged to live, upon a limited income.

A small sum, systematically apportioned, will often accomplish more than will a larger one spent in a haphazard way.

There is no reason why the wage-earner should not practice in principle these methods which contribute to the financial success of great businesses.

Every competent merchant regulates, so far as possible, his expenditures, and intelligently anticipates his income. He allows a definite sum of money for rent, for salaries or wages, and for all other necessities.

To get the most out of your money, and to be able to save, you should apportion your income in advance of spending it, setting aside a specified sum for such necessities as board, clothes, laundry, lunches, car-fare, etc.; and you should, as far as you can, keep within the prescribed limits.

It would be well for you to have an emergency fund, which may be used to pay doctor's bills and for other expenses which you cannot definitely anticipate.

Of course, if you intend to succeed, you will lay aside something every week, which you will place in a savings bank, or otherwise invest.

At times it may be impossible for you to follow your schedule, but, if you determine to do so, you can keep very well within the prescribed bounds. To do this may require some sacrifice, but present sacrifice stands for future protection.

While economy is to be practiced, there are a few so-called economies which are really extravagances. For example, neglecting your teeth. They should be examined at least once a year by a dentist, and they should be attended to. To let them go will cost you more money in the end, as well as cause you needless suffering, contribute to poor health, and encourage indigestion.

If you have a slight illness, do not dose yourself and take chances, but consult a physician. The dollar expended at the right time is not extravagance, but is real economy.

You are entitled to diversion and to a reasonable amount of amusement. Many entertainments cannot be enjoyed without cost. If your income is sufficient, you should apportion a certain amount of it for this purpose, and should not exceed it. If some particular entertainment appeals to you, and the price of the ticket is high, reserve your entertainment proportion until it is large enough to meet this expense.

Perhaps you may sometimes be tempted to say, "Oh, what's the use? I'll have a good time now and let the future take care of itself." It won't.

You are entitled to some pleasure. Don't forget that. Don't forget, either, that you have no right to spend all you receive as you go, running the chance of some time being a burden to your friends, to your relatives, or to your town.

You cannot save money, and you cannot succeed unless you intelligently and systematically apportion your income or salary, and follow the schedule closely.

Systematic saving and systematic expenditure are two of the great elements of success.

CRESSWELL READY TO GET INTO THE GAME

THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY.

What we, when face to face we see
The Father of our souls, shall be,
John tells us does not yet appear—
Ah, did he tell what we are here?

A mind for thoughts to pass into
A heart for loves to travel through,
Five senses to detect things near,
Is this the whole that we are here?

Rules baffle instincts, instinct rules,
Wise men are bad and good are fools
Facts evil, wishes vain appear—
We can not go, why are we here?

Or is it right and will it do
Some arbitrary judgment take
And wilfully pronounce it clear
For this or that 'tis we are here?

Or is it right and will it do
To pace the sad confusion through,
And say: "It doth not yet appear
What we shall be, what we are here?"

And yet, when all is through and said
The heart still overrules the head:
Still what we hope we must believe,
And what is given us receive.

Must still believe, for still we hope
That in a world of larger scope,
What here is faithfully begun
Will be completed, not undone.

My child, we still must think, when we
That ampler life together see,
Some true result will yet appear
Of what we are, together, here.

Schettler Invincible And The Petes Blanked Beavers By Four To Nil

Blountmen Grabbed Second Game in Toronto Series Through Fine Twirling by Youngstown Boy---Murphy Had His Leg Broken.

STEWART'S GOOD HITTING

TORONTO, June 3.— Peterborough evened up the series on the Beavers yesterday, when they kalsomined the locals by the score of 4 to 0, thanks to the superb heaving of Schettler, who had the Beavers baffled throughout, and at no time was he in danger of losing. Only three of the Beavers connected safely, they being Ort and Isaac, with two hits apiece and Harkness with a Texas leagner, which Wilcox misjudged. Schettler possessed a nice curve, and had the locals backing away or swinging wide all during the afternoon. He fanned nine and only passed three.

The game was a dear one for the Beavers, as they lost Murphy, their clever shortstop, for the season, the little infielder breaking his leg in the fourth inning when he went over to cover the bag on Kelly's steal. The latter collided with him and Murphy went down in a heap, while the crack of the bone, just above the ankle, could be heard all over the field. Murphy has been playing real classy ball the last two weeks, and his loss is a severe one. "This is my unlucky day," said Murphy as he was being carried off the field, "for I also broke my bat this afternoon."

Schaeffer was on the mound for the Beavers, and he was touched up when hits meant runs. Stewart, who led th batting with three singles, rapped home Blount in the first inning with a single, while in the third after Welsh had scored Blount with a sacrifice fly, Stewart hit to right, scoring Byrne. In the eighth, successive singles by Wilcox and Gorman, following Ort's boot on King's grounder, added the fifth run for the Petes.

The features of the game were King's great pick-up back of second in the fifth, when he grabbed Loud's grounder, then touched second and pegged to first for a double play. Harkness pulled off two neat catches of fouls, one being one of the nicest seen around here in a long time, he grabbing the ball and diving into the screen at the same time.

The work of Umpire Polson behind the plate was very ragged, and the actions of the catchers and batters were really laughable at times. Polson did not act like an umpire, as he seemed to be afraid of the ball, and was ducking his head on nearly every pitch, which is something new. Score:

BASEBALL

The London Advertiser says: The Blountmen showed a good deal more life in Saturday's game than in any of the other contests they have played in London this season The line-up was changed around quite a bit, Byrne being back on third, Wilcox at second, and King on shortstop. Frank Coy was on the bench, while "Dad" Stewart, the former London right fielder, was out in right field. The changes seem to work wonders, for the visitors looked by far a better ball club than before. The team was hitting the ball also and had it been given the right kind of twirling might have won.

London Advertiser: The Peterborough papers are out with their hammers knocking the Curly Blount aggregation that one paper says "misrepresented Peterborough." There is no use talking, Blount will have to do a lot of strengthening, but he has the foundation of a good team and he now seems to be weeding out the useless material.

Ottawa Free Press—Peterborough opens a series here Thursday. In past seasons the Petes have been a stumbling block to the Champs, and while they are running last this year with St. Thomas, they are more a hard-luck aggregation than a poor-playing one. They have dropped more games by a run than any other club in the league. Peterborough's pitching staff alone should keep the team in the first division. The Petes are under the management of Curly Blount, who played left field for the champion Fort Wayne team of 1912, the outfield of which was made up of Lefty Rogers right, Shaughnessy mentre, and Blount left.

At the field of the Sacred Heart, Saturday morning, at 10 o'clock, a very interesting game took place between the Review newsboys and the Sacred Heart teams. The latter won by a score of 13 to 5. Ben Taylor proved a very satisfactory umpire. The score was as follows:

Sacred Heart	400403110—13
Review	020000300— 5

Batteries: For Sacred Heart, Murray and Meagher. For Review, Fuller and Schinuir.

Aged Elopers Get Married

SYRACUSE, N.Y., June 1.—After an acquaintance extending over sixty years, Homer E. D. Newton of Syracuse, and Miss Lou Stackhouse, his cousin, of Toronto, were married by the Rev. D. N. Lee at Buffalo, and are here on their wedding trip in an automobile.

The couple bear a strong family resemblance to one another. The bridegroom is a prominent druggist of this city, 74 years of age, and the bride is 72. The bride has for the past twenty years been proprietrix of a beauty parlour in Toronto.

Shortly before her marriage she sold out her interests.

The wedding was in the nature of an elopement. Both had told their friends that they intended to get married, but kept the date and place secret.

Mr. Newton's first wife died fifteen years ago, and he has no family.

Twice every year he has visited his sweetheart in Toronto and twice every year she visited here.

C. N. R. BILL IN SENATE

Special Wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 3—The Canadian Northern bill received its first reading in the Senate this morning and will come up for its second reading this afternoon. The Senate is not in a position to amend the bill as it is a money measure. As both sides of the House of Commons were agreed that assistance should be given it is not considered likely that other alternatives, namely to kill the bill will be resorted to by the Upper House.

WILL VOTE AGAINST THE BILL

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, June 3—Several of the Conservative members from Quebec will vote against the Farmers Bank Bill now under consideration in the House of Commons. There are many depositors of the defunct bank among the constituents of the Quebec Government members. This morning's debate was continued on the amendment of A. D. MacLean to give the six months' hoist to the bill.

Were Denounced

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 1.—Presentday literature and drama were denounced here by Dr. Lansing Burrows, of Augusta, Ga., in an address before the Southern Baptist Convention, of which he is president.

"Having a delirious interest in reading, we are easy prey to the designing," said Dr. Burrows. "Thus are all the hateful dogmas of religious and social and political heresy propagated. Socialism, as represented by one of its leaders, puts nine-tenths of the income into literature, choosing the Sabbath Day for its distribution into the homes of the people. The adherents of an historical substitute for soul savig in the guise of body-healing publish a daily journal of no mean proportions.

"The novelist and the dramatist," said the speaker, "present to us the vast metropolis of New York with its great White Way, blatant with its vulgar extravagances, reeking with the odious smells of its sensuality, aroar with the shouts of its chorus girls and its sodden spendthrifts, a homeless, Christless, narrow-browed and shrivelled-hearted worshipper of Mammon and of lust, and they tell us this is life.

"There is no more provincial place on the continent, says one who knows, than New York: no place to see life but life shrivelled in the heat of passion, with men bereft of noble manhood and lofty purpose and women pictured as ox-eyed and tinted with peroxide, who dread fat more than sin.

"Of their books, the best seller is the worst smeller. Of their dramas they revolve about the Seventh Commandment. Let them picture the scarlet woman and the married rake, and they lack for neither readers nor spectators."

Goodwill conducted the services, after which the body was conveyed to Fife's Cemetery, where interement took place. The pall-bearers were Messrs. James Nelson, L. Burley, James Stewart, William and Robert Plunkett, and William Henderson.

Strange Case

LONDON, June 1.—Investigation of the strange case of nine-year-old Gertie Yates at Nunhead would seem to set at rest all doubt concerning the permanence of the cure effected by Alexander Erskine a specialist in psychoterapeutics. Just a year has passed since the seemingly marvellous thing happened, and the girl, who had not seen light from birth till then, sees better to-day even than she did when her mind first obeyed the command of the hypnotist. Here is the report of a visit to her given by a newspaper representative:

"The child can see better now than she could when she first came out of the darkness. Her sight is not perfect, but it is strong enough for all ordinary purposes, and she was able to decipher objects and people at least twenty yards away. She now goes to school in the ordinary class and knows the alphabet. While she was blind she learned the Braille characters, and at first had some difficulty in making the change from raised dots to seen characters. But the transition is now accomplished, and she is getting on so well that she has just been promoted to a higher class."

"There was always trouble with Gertrude's eyes," the wother explained, "and I took her to many doctors, and finally to the hospital. But nobody could do her any good. And a year ago Mr. Erskine come to see her and put her to sleep. And then the wonder happened, and she has had her sight ever since."

Mr. Erskine explains is method thus: "The mechanism of eyesight was intact, and the nerves in perfect condition. But she had never been able to see, because anything that got on the retina, though it was transmitted to the brain, was not interpreted by the mind. The last and the important link was wanting. All that was needed was for the child to use her will and make that necessary co-ordination between her conscious and sub-conscious mind. That was done when I sent her to sleep and suggested to her that she would be able to see when she awoke. I have been able to effect many cures of functional disorders."

Stock Markets

A. E. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

Latest reports indicate reactionary tendencies again, but on the weakness we expect to see good buying. Conservative quarters of the street now display a tendency to look upon the present reactionary market as an opportunity to buy selected stocks for a rise that is expected to occur later in the month in anticipation of the usual July reinvestment demand. More offerings are expected to occur in New Haven and Lehigh Valley.

More American Refining and Smelting stocks are being sold on the Mexican news. There is good scale buying in Union Pacific, Atch., Southern Pacific, St. Paul and B.R.T. Steel, Leather, and Ice. Westinghouse is being well taken on any setbacks. American stocks in London quiet.

That Huerta will resign when Mexico is in a more settled condition, is the message from peace envoys.

Bankers say conditions on the Pacific coast are improving.

CONFERENCE UNLIKELY.

Rumors of Home Rule Conversations on Irish Soil Are Scouted.

LONDON, June 4. — The rumor that conversations on Home Rule between the leaders of the Opposition and members of the Government are to be resumed on Irish soil was picturesque, but improbable. The truth seems to be that leaders on both sides are at the moment sufficiently occupied with their own followers in consultations, and upon the results of these the future of inter-party negotiations must necessarily turn.

There were some dramatic moments at a great gathering of women which Sir Edward Carson addressed in East Belfast.

"Ulster is unconquerable. The Government," he declared with passion, "may put what they like into an act of Parliament, but Ulster, in spite of them, will remain free."

Spanish M.P.'s Fight Duel.

MADRID, June 4.—Antonio Maura, son of the former Premier, and the radical deputy, Rodrigo Soriano, fought a duel with sabres Tuesday. The encounter was exceedingly violent, but lasted only seventeen seconds. It ended with the wounding of both men. The duel was the outcome of a violent scene in the lobby of the Chamber of Deputies on May 27. Maura attacked with his cane and fists Deputy Soriano, who during the course of a debate had called Maura's father a coward.

Herridge Is Chosen

He is Presbyterian Moderator For the Coming Year

NO CHURCH UNION REPORT

WOODSTOCK, June 4.—Dr. W. F. Herridge, Ottawa, was chosen moderator last night by delegates gathered for the fortieth Presbyterian general assembly at Knox Church.

Dr. Herridge was nominated by Principal Gordon, of Queen's College, Kingston, and the nomination was seconded by Rev. John McKay of Vancouver. Principal Gordon and Rev. Mr. McKay, pointed out that Dr. Herridge has been pastor of St. Andrew's Church, Ottawa, for the past 32 years. He had also preached in Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Others nominated were: Rev. Dr. D. D. McLeod of Barrie, by Rev. Mr. Budge of Croemore, and Principal Scrimger of Montreal, by W. Clark of Saskatoon. The nomination of Principal Baird of Winnipeg College was rejected on a technicality and Dr. John Neill of Westminster Church, Toronto, also nominated, withdrew. Dr. Herridge had a substantial majority over Dr. McLeod and Principal Scrimger.

After sitting from 11 p.m. till 5 p.m. the church union committee adjourned until to-day, without arriving at any decision. A recommendation, however, it was learned, has been formulated but a hard fight is being put up by the anti-unionists to have it thrown out. This section of the committee which is generally in the minority will bring in a recommendation of its own. Every one is expecting a heated controversy when the recommendations of this committee are placed before the congress. This will likely take place Friday.

The financial report, as adopted by the assembly, shows an advance of $50,934 in the receipts from congregations. The total received from congregations was $736,603.

All the synods gave increased contributions except Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

The budget of 1915 calls for a total budget from all sources of $1,509,000 for all purposes.

SITUATION IS WORSE.

Albanian Towns Are In the Hands of the Rebels.

LONDON, June 4.—Dr. Dillon, in a despatch to The Daily Telegraph from Durazzo, says the Albanian imbroglio has grown more entangled than ever, and the situation is again critical. The insurrectionary movement is spreading. Several towns around Durazzo, the capital, have been captured by the rebels. The commission of control is at loggerheads with the Cabinet, and the Cabinet is not in complete harmony with the King. A number of the gendarmes have deserted their posts and gone over to the insurgents. The peaceful population is divided into Austrophile, Turcophile, Italophile and Nationalist sections.

The insurgents themselves are at sixes and sevens respecting their attitude toward Turkey, and the result of these dissensions is chaos.

Salvage Planned?

C.P.R. Reported to be Taking Steps to Raise Liner

FARMERS BRING IN LILACS

QUEBEC, June 4. — Over eight hundred bodies are entombed in the sunken Empress of Ireland. Interest here now centres in the disposition of the submerged liner. The official announcement of the names of the saved and lost, and the report late Tuesday night from Captain Pouliot of the Government steamer Lady Grey that careful cruising of the waters for miles below the scene of the disaster has failed to find further dead, has been followed by keen public anxiety to learn the plans of the authorities as to the disposition of the ill-fated vessel. Many relatives here, who have failed to identify their lost among the bodies already taken from the waters, said yesterday that they would remain in Quebec until the C. P. R. Company decided what action it would take.

Some excitement was occasioned by a persistent report from the waterfront that during the night the tug Alede P. of Three Rivers had steamed down the river towing a hay barge, en route to the Government gas buoy which marks the resting place of the Empress. On the barge were reported to be three expert divers, with full apparatus and an air line crew. According to the statements of marine men, these divers were identified with a large American salvage concern. Captain Walsh, marine superintendent, and other Canadian Pacific officials here, however, decline to credit the report, and have nothing to add to Captain Walsh's statement last night. On the waterfront marine men were equally persistent in their assurance that "something is doing," and intimate that the salvage firm is making preliminary investigations prior to tendering for the contract of raising the Empress.

Tuesday afternoon farmers from the neighborhood of the city drove to the temporary morgue with cartloads of lilacs, which were distributed through the shed in half a hundred vases hastily purchased.

It is feared that most of the bodies now remaining unidentified will never be recognized. As showing the difficulties already, a Norwegian from the "Soo" picked out the body of a girl as that of his sister, and claimed it, but when the name was given it was found the girl was among the saved and had been given a ticket to go home.

The child's body found Tuesday near Little Metis may be that for which F. P. Brooks, of Toronto, was looking.

Convicted of Murder.

VANCOUVER, B.C., June 4.—Guilty was the verdict of the jury at the assizes at the trial of Frank Vanhorst, charged with the murder on Nov. 4th last of a Japanese named Ogawa. Vanhorst and a companion named Lester, since dead, hired the Jap's gasoline fishing boat to take them across the gulf, and the prisoner shot Ogawa three times through the back of the head and then threw the body into the sea. The prisoner was sentenced to hang August 10.

Auto Goes Over Embankment.

WOODSTOCK, June 4. — While coming up the hill from the G. T. R. station the auto which Dr M. Brownlee was driving stalled, and when the doctor got out to crank it, it backed down the hill and fell over a 20-foot embankment without injuring the occupants.

Mr. Gibson and daughter of Beamsville were two of the occupants. The names of the other four could not be obtained. The car was badly damaged.

MURDERER STILL FREE.

Inquest Is Held Into Killing of Negro at Napanee.

NAPANEE, June 4.—Tuesday afternoon a coroner's jury called an inquest to inquire into the death of a negro known as "Dad" and employed with Haag's Circus.

Fred. Deivy, lot superintendent, travelling with the Haag show for 14 years, testified that he had known "Dad" since March last. He saw the negro several times on the day of the shooting, and was right beside him when he was shot. Deivy said the negro was formerly a good hand; but, crazed with drink or from some other cause, made an attack on Mr. Lepearl, the snake charmer with Haag's. Lepearl run to Deivy for protection and the negro turned to the witness and battered him on the head with his fists. Deivy cried out for help, and the negroes loading the train ran to his assistance. When they arrived they saw Daniels, the boss hostler, draw his revolver and shoot four times. The last two shots were fired while the revolver was a very few inches from the dead man.

Daniels is supposed to have escaped through the back door of the Queen's Hotel and taken a night train going east.

Sulzer Gubernatorial Candidate.

NEW YORK, June 4. — William Sulzer, deprived of his office as Governor of New York by impeachment, formally announced himself yesterday as independent candidate for the gubernatorial nomination.

Viviani May Be Premier.

PARIS, June 4.—President Poincare yesterday requested Rene Viviani, the Minister of Public Instruction, to form a new Ministry, to replace that headed by Premier Doumargue, which Tuesday resigned office.

It is almost certain that he will accept and it is considered likely that he will at the same time be able to submit a list of Ministers. Three already have definitely promised to take portfolios: Louis J. Malvy, interior; Joseph J. B. E. Noulens, finance; Adolphe Messimy, war. It is probable that either Leon Bourgeois or Jean Dupuy will take the head of the Foreign Office. M. Viviani retains his present portfolio of public instruction.

WHAT THIN FOLKS SHOULD DO TO GAIN WEIGHT
Physician's Advice for Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women
Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak nerves and feeble stomachs who, having tried advertised flesh-makers, food-fads, physical culture stunts and rub-on creams, resign themselves to life-long skinniness and think nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless. A recently discovered regenerative force makes fat grow after years of thinness, and is also unrivalled for repairing the waste of sickness or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable discovery is called Sargol. Its strength-giving, fat-producing elements of acknowledged merit have been combined in this peerless preparation, which is endorsed by eminent physicians and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless, inexpensive and efficient.
A month's systematic use of Sargol should produce flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying highly concentrated fats to the blood. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten, and the additional fats that this people need are provided. Leading druggists supply Sargol and say there is a large demand for it.
While this new preparation has given splendid results as a nerve-tonic and vitalizer, it should not be used by nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds of flesh.

Farmers' Bank Bill a Vote-Getter Says Hon Mr. Lemieux

IS DANGEROUS PRECEDENT

OTTAWA, June 4.—The House of Commons debated away into the early hours of this morning the provisions of the Government's bill appropriating $1,200,000 for the relief of the depositors of the Farmers' Bank. The debate upon the second reading, which began last evening, was resumed by Mr. Morphy, the Conservative member for North Perth, and was participated in by Major Sam Sharpe (North Ontario), Hon. Rodolphe Lemeaux, Donald Sutherland and others.

Mr. Morphy (N. Perth) resuming the debate yesterday morning, concluded his speech in favor of the bill. He said that the depositors of the Farmers' Bank had not only a moral but a legal claim against the Government.

E. B. Devlin (Wright) opposed the bill. He quoted the findings of Mr. Justice Meredith to prove that the cause of the failure was mismanagement.

Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, said the depositors were not asking for charity, but for justice. He quoted at length from testimony of David Henderson, M.P., and Sir Edmund Osler, from the letter of Leighton McCarthy and the endorsement upon the writ which had been issued by dissatisfied stockholders against Travers and his associates a month before the certificate was granted.

Mr. Demers (St. John and Iberville) accused the Finance Minister of being eager to help the depositors of a defunct Ontario bank but unwilling to consider the claims of depositors who lost their savings through the failure of banks in the Province of Quebec.

Postmaster-General Pelletier, replied that if Mr. Demers was anxious to serve the depositors of the defunct banks in Quebec he should support the bill before the House. It would form a precedent.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux declared that the Government was discriminating against the French-Canadian banks. He denounced the bill before the House as "immoral legislation." Its object was to keep safe for the Conservative party certain ridings in Ontario which had been carried in the last election by offering a bribe to the electors. It was a mere raid on the Treasury which would open the doors for many other raids and was timed so as to influence the provincial elections in Ontario.

Major Sam Sharpe (N. Ontario) referred to the rumors that the Government hoped to have the bill killed in the Senate, and declared that the issue before the House was a straight party issue and that no Conservative worthy of the name in either House would desert the Government. Ruin, desolation and even hunger faced many of the depositors in North Ontario and other places. "as a result of Mr. Fielding's gross neglect of duty," declared Major Sharpe.

Major Sharpe was followed by Mr. Lanctot (La Prairie) and Mr. David Henderson (Halton).

The redistribution committee met last evening, hoping to settle definitely the difficulties over the elimination of Russell, Ont., and Richmond, N.S. They failed to reach an agreement, and it is now considered improbable that the redistribution bill will come before Parliament this session.

The Senate will commence the Canadian Northern debate to-day.

Yesterday when the C.N.R. aid bill was called for second reading, Senator Bostock, Opposition leader, said the measure was a very important one, that it had been somewhat altered in the Commons, that there had been little time to study the changes, and it would be well to defer second reading until to-day.

Hon. Mr. Lougheed said that he was perfectly willing to do so. The order was therefore deferred.

Head Crushed By Tie.

HAMILTON, June 4.—Robert McAndrews, who resides on Mountain avenue, Mount Hamilton, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon while working on the new east end incline. McAndrews was working between the rails about half way up the incline, while several men were engaged near the top lowering two ties into position. One of the ties slipped and in an effort to stop it the men allowed the other one to drop. Both ties slid down the rails. McAndrews received warning and succeeded in ducking his head between the rails in time to avoid the first one; but the second one hit him.

Will Convoy Hindus.

VANCOUVER, B.C., June 4.—To prevent any possibility of the Hindus aboard the Kamagata Maru being quietly landed in some isolated bay on the British Columbia coast to make their way separately back to Vancouver, it is probable the Dominion Government will furnish a convoy to accompany the steamer well on her way to the Orient on the return journey.

Headless Body Recovered.

NEW GLASGOW, N.S., June 4.—A big steam shovel working on the banks of the East river unearthed the headless body of a Hindu who disappeared from New Glasgow about five months ago. The body was naked except for a piece of old bagging wrapped about it and a rope was tied around the legs.

MAKES VICIOUS ATTACK.

Suffragette Attacks Gallery Attendant With a Hatchet.

LONDON, June 4. — A savage attack with a hatchet was made yesterday by a young militant suffragette on an attendant at the Dore Gallery, who tried to prevent her from destroying the valuable pictures on exhibition there.

The woman, who thus abandoned the principle of the sanctity of human life, hitherto held up as one of the chief assets of the militant cause, had already ruined two paintings in the gallery, which is in Bond street, the heart of the fashionable quarter of London. She was proceeding to hack a third picture when an attendant named Bourlet seized her arm.

The vandal turned on the man furiously and raised a shower of blows on the body, severely injuring him. Other attendants rushed to the spot and quickly overpowered and disarmed her. She kicked, struggled and screamed for some minutes until she was handed over to the police. The woman evidently was of good education, and she was very stylishly dressed.

A letter was left in the Dore Gallery by the assailant, in which she says:

"To stop this you must give us justice. We are willing to die for it before we give in. We have tried all other ways. We have been too ladylike in the past. Now we are going to fight, and you can allow us to be killed. Others will arise to take our places. I have joined in the war."

One of the pictures destroyed was "Love Wounded," a priceless engraving by Bartolozzi.

Women Assail Editors.

BELFAST, Ireland, June 4.—Militant suffragettes yesterday committed serious assaults on the managing editors of two of the leading newspapers of Belfast, which had expressed criticism of the militant campaign. One, a giantess, called on Mr. Stewart, the managing editor of The Telegraph, and with her clenched fist knocked him out of his chair.

The irate women then proceeded to The News Letter office and made a similar attack on Mr. Anderson.

They are light solid lenses with perfectly even, unbroken surfaces. There is no dividing line which keeps you ducking and dodging to see over, nothing but a beautiful clear lens through which you read and look afar with equal facility.

By LOUIS TRACY

"Do you hear?" shouted Willard, now thoroughly alarmed. "Do you want me to shoot him?"

"Down, Guess!" she contrived to say, in a queer falsetto; for her tongue seemed palsied, and her throat had gone dry. But the mechanical effort at speech served to restore her faculties, and she continued more naturally:

"You startled both Guess and myself, Father. The dog will not hurt you. Use his name—Guess. Then he will wag his tail and make friends."

Guess, however, belied this good character. He allowed Willard to approach; but eyed him with covert suspicion. In her panic of distress and apprehension the girl had forgotten that her father was one of that small company of human beings who dislike dogs, and whose antipathy is returned in double measure by the animal which, above all others, is regarded as the friend of man. Still, Guess obeyed orders, with reservations, and contented himself by displaying an alert watchfulness widely at variance with his earlier state of dignified repose.

"Of course, you know why I am here?" began Willard, smiling complacently. Nancy's evident agitation put him at once in a superior position, and his mean soul rejoiced in the fact; for it was he who should be afraid, and not his daughter.

"No," she faltered, turning her frightened eyes toward the lake.

Oh, if Derry would only come back sooner than he had promised! She half formed a desperate resolve to fire both barrels of the gun, and thus summon him with all speed, because the reports would be heard easily across that mile and a half of placid water.

"I've come to take you away," said the harsh voice at her shoulder. "I got your letter, and managed to find out where you were hiding. Now you must come with me, straight away, do you understand?"

The sheer absurdity of his querulous words helped to stem the rising flood of agony which threatened to overwhelm her; for at that moment she was nearer to fainting than she had ever been before.

"You had better have stayed away than come here in anger and ask a thing that is impossible," she said.

"Impossible! Nothing is impossible—to a woman. Your husband knows nothing of your conduct. No one in the world knows, except myself."

If Nancy were not quite distraught and bereft of her quick intelligence, she would have detected a note of breathless questioning and doubt in that confident assertion. Willard could not be certain that neither she nor Power had written to Marten: he had staked all, or nearly all, on ascertaining the fact during the first outburst of talk, while the girl was still quaking with fright at his unexpected appearance. He was well aware of her courage and adroitness. When she regained self-control—a matter of a minute or less—she might be clear-sighted enough to grasp the paramount importance of the admission that she had not as yet placed an insuperable barrier between herself and the man she had cast off. Once alive to its vital significance, he thought, she would either deceive him deliberately, and take the earliest opportunity of rectifying an error in strategy, or, at any rate, keep him in ignorance of the exact position of affairs. Unhappily, he counted well. Nancy was far too dismayed by his presence to pay heed to tricks and turns of speech.

"Father," she said brokenly. "I have so much to endure that you, for one, should spare me your taunts."

"I'm not taunting you," he urged. "I want to save you from yourself. By a stroke of good luck I was able to make it appear that you and I missed each other in Newport, owing to a railroad accident. Your friends on the island believe you are with me in New York. If we were to arrive at Newport to-morrow, not a living soul, except me, would know what has happened. I shall be dumb, you may well believe, and I suppose your—this fellow Power—will hold his tongue? Surely he is a man enough for that!"

Beneath the brown of sun and air, Nancy's forehead and cheeks had assumed the pallor of camaieu gris, that wan tint with which the monkish illuminators of missals were wont to depict the sufferings of martyrs; but they now flushed with the red stain of unflinching resolve, for her father's loathsome suggestions aroused all that was high-minded and virile in her character.

She withdrew a pace, and threw the gun across her body as though to protect herself from an assassin's knife.

"How can you so demean yourself?" she cried hysterically. "Go away, and never let us meet again until you have taught yourself to think decently! Return to Hugh Marten new? Leave the man I love, and act the part of a faithful wife to one whom I hate? Even Marten, bad as he is, would shudder at the thought if he could hear you utter it!"

Willard smiled again in ghastly humour. At least, there was one obstacle the less. She had not written! But his ill-timed mirth changed quickly to a snarl; for Guess had interpreted this angry scene in his own way, and was ready to begin a fray already postponed unduly.

"Can't you beat off this damned dog?" came the cry. "Let us go into the house, and tell the cur to stop outside."

Once again was Nancy prompted to fire the signal that would bring Power in hot haste to her side; but she repressed the notion, deeming herself calmer now, more assured, more confident in the justice of her cause and her ability to set it forth convincingly. Indeed, her bewildered brain was actively at work already devising means whereby Derry and her father should be kept apart. She did not want them to quarrel beyond redemption. Time, she hoped and believed, would assuage present bitterness, and, if the gods were kind, the coming years might find the older man in a mood to yield to other claims on his forgiveness.

"Lie down, Guess!" she said, patting the dog's head. "Just curl up there in the sun. Yes, that's a dear! Lie down!"

Guess did not curl up; but stretched himself on the grass in front of the door, resting his head between his paws, and keeping a pair of particularly bright eyes fixed on Willard. He would have treated a tame snake or a performing bear in much the same way, if so bidden by someone whom he trusted.

Father and daughter entered the cabin, which was all of a jumble owing to the cleansing operations. Nancy unloaded the gun — why, she hardly knew, because that was the first thing Derry would attend to when he returned. Placing the weapon on the table, she essayed a forlorn smile at the disorder the place was in.

"Derry and Peter have gone to the hotel for stores," she said, "and I took the opportunity to tidy our small castle."

"I saw them crossing the lake," said Willard. "I have been waiting two days for the chance that offered this morning. You see, Nancy, you and I had to thresh out matters between our two selves. When all is said and done, the future concerns us far more than any other person."

Nancy looked across the lake. There was no sign of the canoe, and she was glad of it.

"Now, Dad," she said, tuning her utterance to a softer key in valiant endeavour to place their relations on a friendly footing, "I hope you will try and think less harshly of Derry and me. What is done cannot be undone——"

"It can be put straight, which is the next best thing," broke in Willard fiercely. "I'm not here to listen to your plans; but you must listen to mine! I have no time to lose, nor have you; so I'll put my meaning in the plainest words possible, and I'll thank you not to interrupt me. I'm not going to lecture you on morality, and that sort of thing — that's not my business. I have followed you with one object, and one only, and that is to take you back to your husband. Don't try to shut me up!" he almost screamed; for Nancy's indignation had crimsoned her face and neck again. "You've got to hear what I have to say, and it must be here and now. You'll know why when I have finished. I've thought this wretched affair through from A to Z, and my way has to be your way—unless you prefer the alternative. You either come with me now, this instant, and promise not to leave me until I hand you over to your husband, or I shall shoot Power at sight. That is my offer. Take it or leave it. I give you your fancy man's life in exchange for your obediences. Refuse, and I fill him full of lead. I'm running no bluff on you. I mean just what I am saying. I am not even taking any great risk, because there isn't a jury in America that would convict a father for killing the man who betrayed his daughter while her husband's back was turned. The dirty hound! I've got both him and you in a tight place, and now you're going to suffer, each of you. Condemn him to death if you like. I don't care a red cent which way your choice goes. But, if you want him to live, you must return to Marten, and be his good and loving wife once more. No, you gain nothing by shrinking away in horror at the notion. Nor will death serve your ends, since a silly woman would think little of giving her life to save her lover. You have my full and complete terms, no less, in exchange for Power's life. It won't save him if you agree to come away with me and throw yourself overboard before our steamer reaches Europe. That will mean simply that I take the next boat west, and kill Power. My plea still holds good. I am prepared to face any court with the proofs of my story. But I can't waste any more time. Which is it to be—go or stay—give Power his life or take it? If you want to please me, which is about the last thing you would think of, refuse to come with me, because I am aching to empty these into his rotten carcass."

Nancy had shrunk from his growing frenzy no less than from his monstrous decree; but her dilated eyes were fixed on his, utterly regardless of the brace of heavy-caliber revolvers he had produced, apparently to lend a theatrical effect to his words. In truth, the man had no such thought in his mind. He was beyond the reach of any impulse of that sort. His maniacal fury was real enough to convince the most skeptical that he fully intended every word of that murderous threat. Nor did the distracted girl harbour any doubt on that score. Suddenly, awfully, she had been scourged to the verge of a precipice, and it was borne in on her she had no option but to make the heartrending decision which the man whom she had once loved as a father was forcing on her.

Her very lips blanched, and she gazed at Willard with all the hatred and passionate scorn of a woman wronged beyond redress.

"You—you" she gasped incoherently, "you are not God! It is God alone who wields such power over men and women. He, and He only, may pronounce a decree of life or death against those who have sinned—not you, a man who sold his own daughter for money!"

"Power told you that, did he? The story came well from the mouth of the cheat who robbed me of my property."

"But that is a lie. Why demean yourself by uttering such a plea?"

"We can argue the rights and wrongs of the matter some other time. Are you coming with me, or not?"

"No, a thousand times no!" she almost shrieked.

Willard repocketed the pistols, and turned to leave the hut. "That's right!" he chuckled sardonically. "I'd as soon have it that way as the other."

Nancy was quite beside herself with agony, or she would never have snatched up the gun and held it pointblank at his back.

"Stop!" she screamed. "Stop, or I vow to Heaven I'll fire!"

He faced her again, and his frenzy was comparable only with that of the distracted girl who threatened him.

"If you want to shoot me you must reload your gun," he said, and his face grew livid, though not with fright. "Do you imagine that an old man like me fears death? Shoot, I tell you, and see if my last curse does not part you and Power. Test his love by telling him you are a murderess — that you have killed your own father. Ask him to help in hiding my body, and then cower in hourly terror, both of you, till a New York bank sends to my lawyer the letter I have left in its charge. Shoot me now, and I'll die happy in the knowledge that Power and you will be tried for my murder."

She dropped the gun, and burst into a tempest of weeping; but her tears seemed but to harden Willard into an even more callous and determined mood.

"Don't you forget that I am watching for the coming of that canoe," he said, sinking his voice to a note of sinister meaning. "If Power and I meet, nothing that you can do will save him. It is possible, of course, that he may avoid me this time. You can scream a warning, and he may, or may not, skulk off out of range. But, as sure as there is a sun shining in the sky, so surely will I follow and kill him. Each moment you hesitate brings him nearer the grave. You can save him, if you like; but you must buy his life on my terms, now. It will be too late in a few minutes."

THE ART OF IDLING

It Is a Part of the Indolent Life of the Leisurely Turk.

WHERE SITTING IS EXERCISE.

In the Orient the Placid Natives Regard What We Would Call Loafing as a Mark of Respectability—A Trip in a Caique on the Golden Horn.

One of the first words in the Turkish language that I learned to recognize was kyef or kuif. Making kyef was a very common occupation, judging from the number of times that I heard the word used. The dictionary definition of kyef is "health," "pleasure." Health and pleasure are not always synonymous, but they seemed to be in this case, for people who said they had been making kyef always looked both happy and healthy.

To the average American the idea represented by the word kyef is about as foreign as the word itself. You could not possibly make kyef at a football game or a horse race or automobiling up to the limit of police regulations. One thing soon becomes evident to the scientific investigator of kyef. Whatever it may be, kyef is made without haste, without excitement and above all things, without noise.

Leisure, idling if you like, has been reduced to a fine art in the orient. There is no place in the world where doing nothing is so respectable. Able-bodied men sit unblushingly at midday in a coffee house drinking numberless cups of strong, black coffee, smoking a nargile and staring at a chessboard for hours at a time. Loafing we call it in America; in Italy, dolce far niente; in Turkey, making kyef.

The oriental is slow and easy in his amusements. He lingers over his pleasures, making them last as long as possible. None too fond of exerting himself, most of his exercise is taken sitting still. The Turkish verb otur, which means "sit," is much used both in word and in action. They sit over a cup of coffee in an out of door cafe, they sit under a tree smoking a cigarette, they sit for four hours making you a visit, and they may sit the live-long day out in a grassy field or on the banks of a stream doing nothing at all.

The Turks are fond of outdoors. And one is not surprised. The highest point of Constantinople is Tchamlidja, a hill that stands a few miles back from the Scutari landing on the Asiatic side. The view from this hill is one whose beauty casts a spell that lasts as long as memory lasts. "See Naples and die" runs the old saying, but do not die before you have seen Constantinople from Tchamlidja.

There are many open fields in and about Constantinople to which the people resort on high days and holidays, the brilliant colors of the native dress standing out against the greenest green and the bluest blue of the natural background. And everywhere the dazzling sheen of water, the silvery, calm surface of the Marmora stretching away in the distance and the blue winding Bosporus at our feet. There is a hush about a Turkish holiday gathering which is always like a Sunday. Caiques glide noiselessly by, people sit in groups or saunter about on the shore, like the figures in a picture, everybody making kyef in his own way.

One of the popular resorts for great numbers of people is the Sweet Waters of Europe, a small stream of fresh water flowing into the upper part of the Golden Horn. The best and easiest way to reach this place, the stranger is told, is by rowboat up the Golden Horn. This "best and easiest" way is, however, a bit trying to the nerves. Galata bridge, from which the boats leave, is the busiest spot in Constantinople. You are jostled from before and behind, screamed at in all the languages you ever heard of and frightened nearly to death before you get down the rickety little stairway leading to the landing. Nothing can really happen to you, but you do not know that until afterward. If you should fall into the water you would be promptly fished out by friendly hands amid Mashallahs! in all the tones of the chromatic scale. Down below, you are warned within an inch of your life about all the things you must not do in the caique. A caique is a small rowboat, the daintiest, most graceful little craft in the world, but it was made to tip over.

If you get away from the landing without being spilled out into the water you breathe one sigh of relief, but not more than one, for the Golden Horn is very narrow and very busy, and any moment you may look up at the prow of a steamer bearing down upon you at full speed. Behind you, and to the right of you, and to the left of you, are clumsy freight boats managed by scolding boatmen. And just here one of your oarsmen does what he has forbidden you to do—stands up in his place. Wildly gesticulating, he scolds back in picturesque Turkish at a careless steersman who has nearly tipped you over. After you have had this experience a few times and have escaped with your life you cease to mind it.

Quiet comes at last, and long, smooth stretches of shining water. The motion of a caique is perfect. It glides over the water with no effort at all. The air very light of the eastern sun, the magic touch of the soft south wind, the voice of the muezzin calling to prayer from the minaret in the distance—charm you into the land of the lotus.—Grace Fleming Van Sweringen in New York Tribune.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

A Picture of Your Voice.

To take a picture of your voice it is only necessary to tie a sheet of thin, strong paper over the wide end of a tin trumpet. Hold it with the sheet of paper upward, take a thin pinch of fine sand and place it in the center of the paper, hold the trumpet vertically above your face and sing a note into the lower end. Do not blow, but sing the note. Lower the trumpet carefully and look at the sand. You will find that the vibrations of your voice have scattered the pinch of sand into a beautiful sound picture. Every note in the musical scale will produce a different picture, so you may produce a great variety of them. Some of these pictures look like pansies, roses and other flowers; some look like snakes and others like flying birds. In fact, there is no limit to the variation.

Where the Hudson Flows.

Not so very long ago, in a geologic sense, the Hudson river flowed through a deep canyon or gorge at New York city. Soundings show that this gorge extends through the harbor and far out to sea. It is evident that the land surface has been lowered in this region, allowing the ocean to creep in on the land. Sill the old river channel and in places wholly submerge it. The submergence of the land was greater at one time than it is now. In excavations for some of the New York skyscrapers remains of oysters and other salt water animals have been found. As a rule, the only available knowledge in regard to the former submergence of an area is derived from the marine shells and other animals found in deposits laid down by the sea.

No Space to Spare.

Mrs. Ellis had been house hunting for several days and at last found a small suit which was somewhere near her modest ideal.

"The paper in the hall is just awful," said Mrs. Ellis, as she was telling her husband about the place that evening, "but the landlord said he wouldn't change it."

"Never mind," said Mr. Ellis cheerfully, "we'll get an inexpensive new one and put it on right over the other."

"Oh, Ben," cried the wife, "we can hardly get our furniture through the entry now, it's so narrow!"—New York Post.

Theater Prices Long Ago.

In Shakespeare's day the ordinary prices for seats in theaters were: Boxes 1 shilling, pit sixpence, gallery twopence, which, making allowance for the difference in money values, means that boxes were cheaper, but that for other parts of the house the charges were about the same as they are today. Sunday afternoons, when new plays were usually presented, all prices were doubled.—London Chronicle.

STOKERS DON'T LAST LONG.

Suicide as a Protest Against Their Hard Lot on Ocean Liners.

"Another stoker's suicide! There's hardly a liner that makes a passage nowadays without the suicide of a stoker or two. It's a kind of protest."

The speaker was a steamship agent.

"It's a kind of protest," he continued, "against the stoker's hard lot. The stoker, you see, works in a temperature of 140 degrees. He works in that temperature eight hours a day. It takes a young man to stand it.

"You ought to see a stoker at the end of his four hour spell. He's a limp, wet, black gnome, clad in a few wet black clinging rags, with eyes as red as blood from the scorching of the fires.

"It takes a young man to stand stoking. A stoker lasts only about six years. A young, strong man, turned in six years into a worthless wreck—it's not right, is it?"

The steamship agent sighed.

"Heaven grant," he said, "that oil fuel will be adopted soon. Oil fuel is the only hope for the poor stoker. But to try to hurry the coming of oil fuel with suicide! As if the stokehole didn't kill them off fast enough."—New York Tribune.

Testing Old Mother Earth.

A scientific survey to determine the exact regular distance between the cities of Berlin, Germany, and Washington will be made by the German geodetic institute at Potsdam in conjunction with the coast and geodetic survey of the United States. Fifty years ago this distance was computed, presumably accurately. The purpose of repeating the computation is to ascertain whether the earth has expanded or contracted during the past half century. The Germans will establish the distance between Potsdam and Horta, in the Azores, and the Americans will ascertain the distance from Horta to Washington.—Engineering Record.

When Not to Smoke.

It is quite certain that much may be done to diminish the risk of tobacco amblyopia by paying attention to certain points of personal hygiene. For instance, a rule should be made never to smoke upon an empty stomach, but as far as possible only after meals. It is absolutely bad to smoke before dinner and equally bad to smoke late at night to keep awake at one's work. It should also be forbidden to chew the cigar between the teeth, as many smokers are wont to do.—Hospital.

Minuteness of Electrons.

Crookes, in his vacuum tubes around 1880, tore matter by means of very high potential electrical disruptive discharge into particles so inconceivably minute that he called them matter in the ultra gaseous, or fourth state.

In 1909 the modern master among minds proved these particles to be themselves electricity. Rutherford, Ramsay, Becquerel, Soddy, the Curies, Larmor and others confirmed the mighty discovery. Then came Robert Andrews Millikan, University of Chicago, in 1911, and astonished every scientific man in the world by actually isolating and weighing one of these excessively minute entities.

This was at once conceded to be the greatest work of man since Newton discovered how to use infinitesimals. Of these particles, if they could be forced to lie side by side in contact—impossible by man—a row one inch long would contain 12,700,000,000,000. They are known to be pure electricity. They are called electrons, and nothing exists but electrons.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

A Revelation to Cricketers.

The technique of baseball is profoundly interesting to the student of the dynamics of games. Some years ago the bowling, or rather "pitching," was revolutionized. It was then made legal to throw the ball. Hence the wonderful armor which the catcher wears. But mere pace soon gave way to graduated pace and swerving. Never in the history of sport has the human hand shown such control over an implement as the hand of a pitcher over the flight of the ball. Much superstition has gathered round this and many fabulous performances, corkscrew swerves, swerves reversed, jumping balls, and so forth, are on the lips of crowds. Being allowed no run, as the bowler is at cricket, the pitcher has brought to a fine art the mechanism of position and delivery. The same is true of the batter, who has to deal with full pitches only, very different from bouncing balls. The attitudes of these men are a revelation to cricketers.—London Spectator.

GOOD THINGS AND BAD THINGS

It's the Latter That Cheer Us on Our Weary Way.

A young man married and set up a home in Lakewood. After the honey moon his mother came to visit them and to give them a few points about household economy.

"It is ridiculous for you to keep a maid," she told the bride. "There's little enough for you to do in this tiny flat. If you want to be happy and contented and at the same time economical, discharge the girl at once and do your own work. Try it, and I'll visit you again and find out how it works."

Several weeks later mother-in-law returned.

"So you took my advice and got rid of your housemaid?" she said. "Well, I knew that you could get along without her. Now that you've tried to, how do you like it?"

"Well," answered the bride, "it's like everything else, I guess. It has its pleasures and its pains. Bad things and good things happen on the same day. For instance, I had an awful row with the grocery boy this morning. But the iceman kissed me. And there you are."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Direct Question.

At a reunion of the Adams family the chicken croquettes gave out, so the maids carefully neglected the youngest children. After vainly trying to attract the attention of his mother one of the little boys at the lower end of the table called out in a loud tone of voice. "Mother!"

"What is it, Albert?" she replied.

"Do you think," went on the child, "I should have liked the croquettes if I had had one?"—Lippincott's.

The Final Stroke.

Mrs. Smart—George, dear, while you are having money troubles I ought to tell you that I learned today why your rival Mr. Flibb's credit has suddenly become so good.

Smart—Well, why?

Mrs. Smart—I overheard some one remark that Flibb's finances must be all right because his wife was wearing such elegant new hats and gowns.—Boston Transcript.

Sensible Assumption.

"I have always found that when I was ordered to do a thing I was able to do it, no matter if it had seemed impossible before."

"I assume that you have never been ordered, when you got home at 2 o'clock in the morning, to make your wife think your excuse was perfectly reasonable."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Outcome.

He was accused of stealing a turkey, and as he had no money a lawyer was assigned to defend him.

"I'm sorry that lawyer butted in," he declared as he walked out of court fifteen minutes later.

"Why, he got you off."

"Yes, and he got the turkey."—Buffalo Times.

OIL UPON THE WATERS.

It May Be the Means of Preventing Dangerous Fogs at Sea.

For the year ending June 30, 1913, the United States life saving service reported 552 disasters at sea and on vessels totally lost on United States coasts. In addition there were 1,191 casualties to small craft. Probably the greatest peril at sea arises from the fogs that prevail in certain waters. Heretofore the chief reliance of the navigator under fog conditions has been on the whistle, the horn, the bell and other appliances to carry warning signals by sound.

The startling statement is now made that by the use of oil the danger from fogs may be minimized and even averted and that such shocking disasters as the recent disaster to the old Dominion liner Monroe in a fog off the coast of Virginia, with the resultant loss of forty-one lives, may be avoided.

The suggestion that oil can be used to prevent fogs comes from Director Onefris of the Fourviere observatory at Lyons, Mass. During a study of the dense fogs which for two months each year cover almost the entire island formed by the junction of the Saone and the Rhone rivers at Lyons he observed that the fogs followed the lines of water beneath the fog banks and conceived the idea of spreading oil to prevent evaporation of the water and the consequent formation of the mists.

One might think this an expensive method, but Director Onefris maintains that the cost of sufficient oil to protect the entire city of Lyons from the visitations of dense fogs would be only $8 a day.—Harold Waters in Leslie's.

BLACK HAND SECRETS REVEALED BY CHIEF OF SECRET SERVICE

CONFESSION OF "COMITO," TOOL OF THE BLACK HAND

By
WILLIAM J. FLYNN,
Chief of the United States Secret Service.

A SECRET Service operative was shadowing a man he suspected of being one of the Black Hand counterfeiters.

For days he had trailed this man while other operatives had watched other members of the society. The net was drawing closer about Lupo and Morello. We knew several of their lieutenants, but we were greedy for more evidence, more facts. My men were under orders to find out where the counterfeiting plant was. For reasons I have previously explained I shall not divulge the name of the operative in question.

He followed his man into New York's Grand Central Station. There the suspected counterfeiter bought a cigar and went into smoking room and remained for some time. After that he had his shoes polished. Then he walked out of the building to Sixth avenue, strolled through to Forty-fourth street, where he turned west and returned to the railroad terminal.

Every step of the way the Secret Service operative was behind him. When the counterfeiter reached the ticket office the operative was only a few feet behind him. He hurried to get in line behind the man he was following. In his hurry he jostled against a woman carrying a heavy suit case. Hastily he apologized, but the delay was just enough to keep him a few paces from the counterfeiter when he purchased a ticket.

The operative could not hear the name of the place to which the ticket was purchased, but he saw him man give a two-dollar bill to the agent and receive fifty cents in change.

He was afraid to ask the agent about the ticket. There was little possibility that the agent could be connected with the Black Hand society, but there might be half a dozen counterfeiters watching him, and if he showed any particular interest in the movements of the Black Hander they would immediately tip off their comrade and the operative would become the one who was shadowed.

For the same reason he thought it inadvisable to follow the man into the train. But one thing was established. If the man was one of the counterfeiters and was going to the place where the bogus money was being made, the plant was at a place which could be reached from New York for $1.50 railroad fare. At first I thought it was Poughkeepsie. Then I began to put two and two together and, remembering that Lupo when he fled from New York went to Ardonia, a little town back of Highland, N. Y., I became convinced that the counterfeiting plant must be somewhere along the west bank of the Hudson River not far from Highland.

The country a short distance back of the hills which line the river is very wild and very lonesome and would be an ideal section for the plant of the counterfeiters. Investigation of that whole district was immediately started, but an unforeseen coup made possible by one of my best men hastened the final round-up of the counterfeiters.

Because it is nothing like his real name, we will call this operative Logan.

Logan is known in the files of the Secret Service as a fearless operative. Should the Black Hand members ever so much as suspect that he was in the employ of the government he will be found in some secluded spot, his body covered with knife wounds, the mark of the Black Hand plumed to his clothing as a warning to those who would whisper the secrets of the Black Hand. The murderers might be some day apprehended, but the reason for the crime would never be known. Those of the public who gave to the incident any attention at all would set it down to a squabble between thieves and let it go at that. None would ever know that a man had died in the act of performing his duty to the state and to society—died a hero unsung.

After months of patient toil and after risking his life a score of times, Logan worked his way into the inner councils of the Black Hand society.

On one occasion a member of the society pointed out to Logan a man whom the counterfeiters called "Comito the Sheep."

"There goes the man," said the counterfeiter, "who operates the presses. He it is who actually makes the bogus money and it is time that you should know him."

Logan later met Comito and became his close friend. At the very earliest opportunity he pointed him out to me and I knew that at last the goal for which I had been striving was close at hand.

Now, I learned that Comito was living in a little flat in New York city with a woman named Caterina. He being the man that printed the notes I, of course, expected to find bundles of them in his rooms, together with letters and other evidence connecting him with Lupo, Morello and others. I went to his flat to make the arrest in person. My men searched the place from end to end. Every nook and cranny was pried into, Caterina was searched and all her belongings were gone over carefully. Not a single bogus note was found, nor were any blackmail letters discovered. I had heard that Comito was merely the dupe of the Black Handers, and that he was not at heart a criminal nor had he profited at all by the counterfeiting scheme. The lack of evidence in the apartment seemed to corroborate this.

"The Sheep" was well named. I had thoughts of placing him under arrest, but I sat down and had a long talk with him. Not only was I convinced that Comito had been a dummy, but I soon realized that if I could get him to talk I would have a witness who could fasten guilt upon almost every man of the band. I was dumfounded to learn that if I could get him to talk I would have a witness who could fasten guilt upon almost every man of the band. I was dumfounded to learn that if I could get him to talk I would have a witness who could fasten guilt upon almost every man of the band

ASKING THE SPIRITS

With an Unexpected and Satisfactory Answer.

By LULU JOHNSON.

"Ghosts!" repeated Paul Orford, with a smile. "To be sure there are ghosts. I have a personal acquaintance with half a dozen. I was one once. That was when the dramatic club put on 'Hamlet.'"

"Now you are frivolous," reproved Lucy. "It is a very serious matter to penetrate the veil that separates the present from the future and cross to that other shore. Mrs. Glendis says that we each should seek to test our mediumistic powers."

"There is one thing I like about ghosts," said Paul.

"What's that?" asked Lucy quickly as he paused.

"Their answers generally are yes and no," explained Paul meaningly. For nearly a year he had been trying to pin Lucy down to a definite acceptance or dismissal of his suit, but that tactful yet uncertain minded young woman would say him neither "yea" nor "nay," preferring to enjoy the greater freedom of action which is the privilege of the unengaged, while at the same time she held Orford her slave.

"Ghosts say lots more than that," insisted Lucy. "Mme. Goya was telling all about it. You start with the alphabet, and when you come to the right letter they give a rap, and in that way they spell out words. Mme. Goya says that it is the duty of every earnest thinker to develop mediumistic powers, because we never can tell whether we have the gift until we try to develop it."

"She's right," declared Paul, with a greater interest than he had previously shown in the discussion. "Do you know I have thought for some time that I could develop along those lines with the proper sympathetic support?"

"You must join our circle," invited Lucy beamingly. She had been growing angry at Paul's covert sneers at Mme. Goya and Mrs. Glendis.

The latter had brought the adept to the attention of the Tuesday dancing class and had turned that select little company into a "circle."

The young man found it more interesting to sit in the darkness of the development room and hold hands, for there were times when something sent thrills through the investigators and caused the more timid among the girls to clutch more tightly the arms of their escorts.

Paul was not a member of the dancing class in spite of his devotion to Lucy, and he rather resented these seances.

"I think," suggested Paul, "that it might be well to try me out before I seek to display my powers in public. It will be an hour before your mother gets back from the Bradleys, and your father is too busy with that new book he borrowed to interrupt. Suppose we hold a sitting now?"

"I never heard of a sitting with only two," objected Lucy. "Even with the fifteen or twenty of our circle we get scarcely any return yet, and I do not believe that the two of us could get any response at all."

"We can try it," pleaded Paul. "We cannot do more than fail, and there might come some slight indication that one or the other had mysterious power."

"Yes, we can try it," assented Lucy brightly, glad to see Paul's interest. "Of course you must promise that if there is no development you will not be discouraged."

"I'll promise that," assented Paul promptly, "I'll not be discouraged."

"Then we'll try," agreed Lucy as she cleared the magazines and books from a light table and brought it into the center of the room. She placed chairs on opposite sides, disregarding Paul's suggestion that they be placed side by side, and then, turning down the light, she took her place in one seat and called to him to take the other.

"They almost always sing," she began uncertainly.

"Then we'll sing," assented Paul. "We'll follow all the process."

"Now you must keep very still," she whispered. "Just concentrate on the desire to obtain a communication. It may be some time before we feel any response."

"That's all right," was the ready reply. "I'd be willing to wait hours to absolutely make certain."

"You don't have to hold my hands so tight," suggested Lucy. "Just rest your finger tips on mine to complete the circuit."

"This is better," objected Paul, with truth. "We establish a better contact or whatever you call it."

"Don't talk any more," cautioned Lucy. "The spirits won't come while you are talking."

Paul subsided into silence. It was very pleasant sitting there in the half light with Lucy's hands in his own. In the soft gloom he could just make out the oval of her face and catch faintly the eager gleam in her blue eyes. He was willing to experiment along these lines forever.

Outdoors the rain beat against the plate glass of the windows with a sharp rattle that added to the comfortable feeling of those within, and apart from that only the crackle of coal in the grate broke the silence.

For twenty minutes no sign came, and then there was heard a succession of sharp raps that caused Lucy to clutch Paul's hands in tighter clasp and somewhat shook his own placidity.

The trial had been an excuse for holding Lucy's hands. He had not expected any manifestation.

"Did you do that?" she whispered.

"On my word, no!" he replied. "You didn't tap with your foot, did you?"

Lucy shook her head. "I wouldn't cheat," she insisted reproachfully. "This is not a thing to make a jest of."

"Are the spirits present?" asked Paul, raising his voice slightly. And the response was a series of brisk raps.

"That is more than the proper number," objected Paul. "One is 'no,' and three is 'yes.'"

"I suppose that a lot means underscore marks," suggested Lucy. "Ask something else."

"Are you willing to answer me?" demanded Paul, and the three raps made an affirmative.

"May I ask some personal question?" Again the three raps.

"I want to know if Lucy and I are to be married?" explained Paul. And Lucy gasped at this impertinence toward the spirits.

"They won't answer that," she insisted in a whisper, but the three raps came loud and clear, and, with a little cry, Lucy sprang to her feet and turned on the gas.

"You were cheating!" she cried. "You were kicking the table leg!"

"See for yourself," he retorted, turning the light table so that she might see that there were no scratches on the polished legs. "I am more mystified than you are. There must be something in it after all."

"There must be," she assented dazedly.

"And you will accept their decree?" he asked. "You will marry me?"

"I suppose that I must since it is the will of those 'over there,'" assented the girl. "I meant to some time anyhow," she added half defiantly as Paul caught her in his arms, and the world beyond was forgotten in the joy of the life right here.

Late that evening Paul smoked his good night cigar in the comfort of the big armchair. At his feet lay Bunch, the English bulldog that was Paul's constant companion. Bunch was fast asleep on a rug, but he roused when his master stirred.

"Bunch," cried the jubilant Orford, "there was something in it after all! I thought that spirit thing was largely a matter of imagination, but I'm certain that Lucy did not do the rapping, and I know that I didn't. It was a clear case of spirits."

Bunch blinked an intelligent eye and wagged his stumpy tail in assent. Paul started as the familiar rapping came again. Bunch's tail was pounding against the hardwood parquet border.

"So you were the ghost? You wagged your tail when we asked questions because you thought we were talking to you?"

Bunch's stumpy caudal appendage made answer again, and Paul's face was wreathed in smiles.

"We must never tell Lucy," he cautioned, and Bunch, almost asleep, made an instinctive effort to reply. Feebly the tail wavered, and only once did it strike against the floor.

"That's 'no,' and that goes," assented Paul. "You're all right, Bunch." And Bunch solemnly rapped out "Yes."

So many baseball players are on the jump these days that some of them must have to inquire around carefully when they get up in the morning to find out which league they are in at the moment.

A fashionable journal says, "Women all over the land are calling for more pockets." They should have them, for they have drawn upon the men's pockets for their necessities long enough.

The bishop of Oxford finds that the "obey" appears in no other marriage service than the Anglican, where it was incorporated in the fourteenth century. Even then England must have had a premonition of militancy.

WEAKNESS AND PALPITATION OF THE HEART.

When the heart begins to beat irregularly, palpitates and throbs, skips beats, and sometimes seems to almost stop, it causes great anxiety and alarm.

Many people become weak, worn and miserable, and are unable to attend to either social, business or household duties.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are a specific for all weakness and heart disorders, and are recommended by us with the greatest of confidence that they will do what we claim for them.

Mrs. George Burridge, Coboconk, Ont., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I have been troubled with weakness and palpitation of the heart. I tried many remedies but got none to answer my case like your pills did. I can recommend them highly to all with heart or nerve trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

LIGHTS WENT OUT ON ROBERT.

Comparing the stage conveniences of the present day with the makeshifts existing a generation ago, Robert Mantell tells of the inconveniences as the ghost in "Hamlet."

"One night I was playing the part of the ghost," he says, "and as I was not very certain of myself the stage manager had the lamps turned down unusually low. As a matter of fact, they were so low that while I was on the stage they went out. Of course, they had to be lighted again, and the stage manager sent out a stage hand to do it. I had to remain where I was and the ghost's funeral lines were recited, while a man in civilian clothes slowly and painstakingly made his way across the darkened stage, lighting the lamps as he went."

DRINK PROVED FATAL.

Mystery Surrounds Death of Woman at Richmond, Que.

RICHMOND, Que., June 4.—Richmond is in a state of excitement over the mysterious death of Mrs. J. P Viger of this place, which occurred on Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Viger succumbed after taking a drink of gin from a bottle. Drs. Johnson and Tompkins, who made the autopsy state that the woman died as a resul of poisoning from carbolic acid.

Cornore Bachand of Sherbrooke opened an inquest here and adjourned it until Thursday evening. On Saturday a bottle of gin was brought to the Viger home, and on Sunday morning four or five people who were in the house partook of the gin, but suffered no bad effects. Later in the forenoon Mrs. Viger, her brother-in-law, Ludger Labadie, and her brother, Narcisse Petignat, again partook of the gin from the same bottle. Mrs. Viger became suddenly ill and was carried to a sofa, where she died in half an hour. Labadie threw his gin away as soon as he tasted it.

It was brought out in evidence that Narcisse Petignat, a brother, had purchased twenty-five cents worth of carbolic acid at Bedard's drug store on Saturday evening. When questioned on this point, he admitted purchasing the acid, but stated that he used it for medical purposes and threw away what was left.

There is a strong feeling that further investigation will bring out some sensational evidence and that it will be proved that Mrs. Viger was not the one for whom the poison was intended, and it is possible that other members of the family may be called upon for further explanation.

Constitutionalists Won't Let Up.

LAREDO, Texas, June 4. — Gen. Jesus Carranza, brother of the Constitutionalist leader, at Nuevo Laredo, yesterday refused to be interviewed on Huerta's announcement Tuesday night that he was will to resign. Other prominent Nuevo Laredo Constitutionalists, however, believed the certainty of their victory over Huerta would not warrant them in accepting the mediators' terms. They said they believed their leader would refuse an armistice.

Nearly $900,000 Needed.

LIVERPOOL June 4..—In order to provide adequate relief for the dependents of those lost in the sinking of the Empress of Ireland, the sum of $900,000 is needed, of which $400,000 should be allocated to the families of the crew. This is the estimate given to the Lord Mayor of Liverpool by Duncan Fraser, the actuary connected with the Titanic fund.

CONNAUGHTS FETED.

Citizens of Brockville and Cornwall Welcome Duke.

BROCKVILLE, June 4. — In a drizzling rain, Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia visited Brockville yesterday for upwards of two hours. The rain did not dampen the enthusiasm of the hundreds of people who lined the principal streets through which they passed and court house square where the official welcome took place.

Reception at Cornwall.

CORNWALL, Ont., June 4.—Cornwall was en fete yesterday in honor of the visit of H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, the Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia. The streets were handsomely decorated with flags and bunting. The royal party was met at the G. T. R. depot by Mayor Gillies, the members of the Town Council and a special committee of citizens, the military officers with a guard of honor of 100 men from the 59th Regiment, the pipe band of the regiment, and the National Band of Cornwall.

Not Government Operator.

OTTAWA, June 4.—The Government investigation of the complaint of John Black of Ottawa that the wireless operator on the Lady Evelyn had insisted on prepayment of messages from Empress survivors has resulted in a telegram from Captain Pouliot that there was no Government operator on the vessel, but that one of the rescued Empress' operators named Ferguson had been secured to send emergency messages. He was not told to crage for them.

Aeroplane Fell; Macaulay Hurt.

BEETON, Ont., June 4. — Macaulay, the Curtis Company aviator, who recently thrilled Toronto people, with exhibitions of his flying skill, sustained a serious accident while giving an exhibition here yesterday. The engine of his aeroplane gave out while he was 60 feet in the air, and the aeroplane fell to the ground. Macauley was picked up with a broken leg and one of his arms and his back injured. The aeroplane was wrecked.

Homely, Yet Admired and Envied; Her Secret

The convention crowd made a path for her, cast admiring side glances, then with longing eyes followed her to the elevator. It was at the Pontchartrain in Detroit. The incident was recalled when I chanced to sit across table from the woman. What was it about her that caused all the commotion? Her complexion. Really I've never beheld its equal. Venturing to pick up acquaintanceship, I learned the secret.

"I've tried to make the most of my one charm," she said. "I know men abhor make-ups and artificiality. I bar cosmetics; there are two things I use to promote natural loveliness and youthful appearance. When my complexion begin to age, I get an ounce of mercolized wax at the druggists, apply at night like cold cream, wash it off in the morning. The gradually flakes off the outer skin, then I have a brand new complexion magnetically beautiful, as you see.

"Wrinkles never bother me. At their inception I bathe my face in a solution made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. It works like magic." — Mona Morrow in Tattler.

CHINA'S YELLOW STREAKS.

Linked With the Country's Vast Beds of Cheeselike Loess.

Some of the most characteristic impressions of China are connected with the great loess deposit that covers the greater part of north China. In some places it reaches a depth of 1,500 feet or 2,000 feet. It is probably a wind borne accumulation of dried mud or fine desert sand coming from the arid interior of Asia. It is uniform in composition and structure, unstratified, splits vertically and contains land shells, but no water shells.

The streams have cut down through the loess and are all deeply stained with its characteristic brown yellow. It is the loess that gives us Yellow river, Yellow sea, Yellow emperor—doubtless it suggested the imperial color. The northern portion of the Peking-Hankow railway passes through a vast yellow country, and the traveler scarcely sees a stone, a hill or a tree. The soil and the watercourses are yellow, the flat roofed houses are yellow, the walls of the cities and towns are yellow. The air is yellow with dust. Everything that grows is yellow, even the yellow people and their clothing are powdered with the yellow dust.

The loess slices like cheese. Most of the mountain people house themselves by digging a cave in a bank formed of this material. When plastered it makes a clean, dry place, warm in winter and cool in summer, its only drawback is in the matter of ventilation. Some of these dwellings are two or three stories high, have framed windows and doorways and are well furnished.

It startles you to look over a broad, prairielike country, divided into fields highly cultivated and see no highways, houses, people, or domestic animals. The roads have cut their way into the loess and run at the bottom of canons, sometimes seventy or eighty feet deep. The people have dug out their dwellings and stables in the cliffs that line the roads and streams.—Youth's Companion.

Antiseptic Ice.

Oxygenized ice is now being manufactured to keep food in refrigerators, with the idea of providing antiseptic effect from the ice as well as cold. Peroxide of hydrogen is combined with the water during the manufacture of the ice, so that the ice is really made of oxygenated water, the peroxide being incorporated by a special process at just the right stage of the freezing. In order to distinguish it from other ice it is proposed to tint it slightly with some harmless coloring matter. It must be kept in the ice compartment of a refrigerator—not in direct contact with the food—and the oxygen has the effect of keeping the entire outfit sweet.—Saturday Evening Post.

Railway Station Gap Fillers.

New York's Interborough Rapid Transit company has perfected a mechanical gap filling device which will be used at subway stations on a curve. It consists of a grated segment of the platform which is thrust forward, filling the gap between the car and the edge of the platform, the movement being made before the train comes to a stop. The grating remains in this position until the train has started and moved a distance of seven or eight feet. The gap filler is operated by electro-pneumatic cylinder action.

Japan's Earthquakes.

One of the most interesting facts in connection with the recent eruption of Sakurajima, Japan, is that the earthquake shocks were strongly registered in Europe. This is the first time that a volcanic earthquake has been recorded across an entire continent since the horizontal pendulum was adapted for seismographic purposes. Volcanic earthquakes, as a rule, are decidedly local, indicating that the seat of the disturbance is at a very moderate depth in the earth.

VOLCANOES IN JAPAN.

They May Appear Innocent, but They Are Not to Be Trusted.

In his new guidebook to the Japanese empire T. Philip Terry refers to the fact that in Japan there are upward of fifty active volcanoes of the type of the now notorious Sakurajima, in Kagoshima bay, Kyushu island, and that what might be termed their special custom is to remain quiescent for a few decades—sometimes more than a century—then suddenly to blow up and maim or kill every one within reach of their wrath.

One of the most vicious examples of their treacherous habit is Asamayama, Japan's grouchiest volcano, which rises 8,200 feet above the sea, near Karuizawa, on the Shinano highland. It is often referred to as the Japanese Vesuvius (than which it is 4,200 feet higher), because of its similarity to Italy's terror. Prior to May, 1911, it remained practically dead for 125 years; then it erupted with startling suddenness and killed a number of unfortunate tourists who were standing on its uppermost rim gazing into its yawning crater. The explosions are now frequent and fearsome, and formidable earth tremors are sometimes felt as far east as Tokyo and Yokohama.

Terry warns American travelers with mountain climbing proclivities to beware of the innocent appearing Japanese volcanoes, as they are not to be trusted.

"Going Into A Decline," Tired And Worn-out

Constant Pains in the Chest and Back—Wonderful Results Obtained by Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

What a host of symptoms are summed up in these words, "Going into a decline." It means, in short, that the patient is daily growing weaker and weaker without hope of recovery. But read the letter quoted below and learn of the great food cure which naturally and gradually nourishes pale, thin, weak, tired-out men and women back to health and strength.

There is no treatment you can so well rely upon, for Dr. Chases Nerve Food contains in condensed and easily assimilated form all the elements required to rebuild wasted and depleted nerve cells. It cures in Nature's way by filling the system with new vigour and vitality.

Mrs. Rena McNulty, St. Theodore, Que., writes: "I had almost constant pains in the chest, and backache. I was tired and worn out nearly all the time. Four boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food did me more good than all the medicines I ever took. My system seemed to be all run down, and I was so weak I could scarcely do anything. The Nerve Food did wonders for me, and I want other women suffering as I did to benefit by my experience. I feel like a different person since using this great restorative."

Can you imagine any medical treatment better suited to the needs of a run-down system. As a spring restorative there is nothing to be compared to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. It purifies and enriches the blood, builds up the system, and drives out pains, aches, tired feelings, and discouragement. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, June 1. — The trade situation looks better than it has for some weeks. Wholesalers report that country representatives are much more optimistic and freer in their buying. This renewed optimism may be traced in large measure to the prospect of good crops. In the last week particularly, Eastern Canada has experienced splendid growing weather, with frequent showers and warm sunlight. Through the Maritime Provinces the spring so far has been unusually cold and backward. But there, too, conditions are now improving.

Money lenders report a good demand at 6½ to 7 per cent for real estate mortgages. The latter figure is on city property. Farmers can occasionally get money at five and one-half per cent from local lenders.

WHEAT

Quotations are steady at about last week's levels. As usual the crop killers have been at work, but reports of Hessian fly in the winter wheat belt seem to have done more damage to wheat speculators than to wheat crops. In the worst season not more than two per cent of the crop was ever killed by this pest and it cannot be expected to affect quotations very seriously. On the whole conditions are in the shape for a bumper wheat crop in the West. In Ontario prospects are not so good. No. 1 North ern wheat is now quoted $1.09½; No. 2, 99c; Ontario wheat, $1.01 to $1.03.

COARSE GRAINS

Oats are the most active feature of the coarse grain market, and there has been liberal trading with both United States and European points. Corn shows a tendency to go higher. Other quotations are normal, with steady trade: Oats, C.W. No. 2 43c; No. 3 42½c; Ontario, No. 2 white oats, 42c to 43c; corn, 72c; rye, 85c to 86c; peas, 95c to $1.03; barley, malting, 56c to 58c; feed, 55c to 56c; buckwheat, 85c to 85c. Montreal wholesale dealers report as follows: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 44c to 44½c; No. 3, 42½c to 43c; No. 2 feed, 41½c to 43c; Argentine corn, 73c; No. 3 yellow, 70½c to 80c; barley, malting, 65c to 66c; peas, $1.69 to $1.70; rye, 72c to 73c; buckwheat, 87c to 88c.

MILL FEEDS

The demand for bran is falling off but shorts are still in active demand. Wholesale dealers quote bran, $23 to $24; shorts, $25 to $26; middlings, $29 to $30; feed flour, $30 to $32. Montreal quotations are: Bran, $23; shorts, $25; middlings, $29; feed flour, $33 to $35.

HAY AND STRAW

Good hay still continues to be a scarce article and quotations run around $14 to $14.50 for No. 1; No. 2, $10 to $13; No. 3, $8 to $9; baled straw, $8 to $8.50. At Montreal, too, best grades are scarce. Dry weather encourages farmers to hold onto the rest of their 1913 crop. A good rain would implement deliveries. No. 1, $16.25 to $16.50; No. 2, $14 to $16; No. 3, $12 to $13. This is $2 a ton higher than last year.

POTATOES AND BEANS

Receipts of potatoes are increasing now that seeding is largely over, and farmers are marketing their surplus. Ontario's sell at $1.15 in car lots; New Brunswick's, $1.25. At Montreal quotations are easier, with Green Mountains at $1.05 and Quebec Whites, 95c to $1.

Beans here are quoted, primes, $2.25; hand picked, $2.40. Montreal quotes three-pound pickers, $1.85; one-pound pickers, $1.90.

EGGS AND POULTRY

The production of eggs all over the country is a record one and dealers feel that they have been paying a couple of cents too much. To date the receipts have been of good quality. Wholesale quotations here are 20c to 21c, representing about 18c in the country. Montreal buyers are paying 19c f.o.b.

Dressed poultry quotations are: Dressed fowl, 16c to 18c; alive, 15c to 16c; dressed yearling chickens, 17c to 23c; turkeys, dressed, 20c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

During the past week cheese quotations in the country have showed a tendency to wait around at old levels. So far English buyers have been holding off, supposedly because of their objections to handling fodder goods. A few fall grass cheese are now being offered and exporters expect to receive the usual orders for this class of goods. Receipts are still far below those of last year at Montreal. For the season up to the close of last week they number 59,421 boxes, as against 57,509 boxes for the corresponding period last year. English buyers are already beginning to show interest in the June make. For quotations see cheese markets.

Butter dealers are still waiting for some outside demand. This seems to be very slack so far as fodder goods are concerned, but when the June make is on the market more enquiries are expected. Finest townships butter has been selling at Montreal at 22½c f.o.b.; Western creamery butter has changed hands at 21½c at points of shipment. On the market here wholesale dealers quote creamery prints 23c to 25c; farmers' separator prints, 20c to 24c; dairy prints, 19c to 20c, bakers, 15c to 16½c.

LIVE STOCK

Quotations here are firm. The small receipts that have been arriving throughout the week have not been favorable to reductions, although warm weather usually means reduced consumption and lower quotations. The week started out firm and quotations in some cases advanced slightly before they closed. The main feature of the demand is the keen way in which stockers are taken up. Many farmers have not yet a sufficient supply of stockers and feeders for their pastures. Handy choice steers are the ones in best demand, and they go at $8.10 to $8.45; heavy steers are quoted $8.35 to $8.50. Other quotations are: Butchers' steers, com. to good, $7.25 to $8.25; heifers, $6.75 to $8.25; choice cows, $7 to $7.50; com. to good, $6.40 to $7; butcher bulls, $5 to $7; feeders, $7.25 to $7.85; stockers, $6.50 to $7.25; canners and cutters, $3.50 to $4.50.

The demand for milch cows has been somewhat easier, choice ones going at $65 to $100; com. to med., $40 to $65; springers, $40 to $100. Calves run from $4 to $10, according to size and quality.

Mutton products have dropped consequent upon larger receipts. Spring lambs may now be had at $5 to $9 each; wether lambs, $8 to $9; buck lambs, $7.25 to $7.75; light ewes, $6 to $6.50; heavy, culls and bucks, $4 to $5.50.

Hogs have held fairly firm in spite of larger receipts. Five hundred arrived from the West in one day. Packers quote $8 f.o.b. country points.

Adelina Patti

The Queen of Singers

There was a time, and it is not entirely passed, when to mention prima donnas you would instantly think of Adelina Patti. She was born in Madrid, Spain, and her parents were operatic singers of Italian ancestry. She first sang at an early age in New York, but her fame was secure after her first appearance in London, and from that time she held high rank as one of the first singers of the day. The rich bell-like quality of her voices and remarkable evenness of tone had a range as a high soprano never surpassed, and her cadenzas and trills were the delight of her admirers. Adelina Patti will owe much of her fame to the way and manner in which she sang "Comin' Thro' the Rye," although her greatest success was "Marguerite" in Gounod's "Faust." She never underestimated the value of the songs that touched the heart. "The Last Rose of Summer" is a song that will always be identified with Patti.

"Comin' Thro' the Rye" and "When to Thy Vision," from Gounod's "Faust," both are to be found in "Heart Songs," the book now being offered to the readers of this paper, at cost of distribution and six coupons. "The Last Rose of Summer" is to be found on page 146 of the volume, and is only one of the many favourites of Patti that render the book a possession that should be one of the treasures to be found in every home.

IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL OF THE VICTIMS

Of The "Empress" Disaster —Capt. Kendall Showed Great Emotion

QUEBEC VICTIMS

Quebec, P.Q., June 4.—All Quebec lined the grey old streets of this ancient city this morning for the funeral of twelve of the victims of the "Empress" disaster, who were laid to rest. Few of those who stood by and watched the funeral pass knew the victims who were being carried to their graves, but the funeral meant more than the burial of twelve of the crew. The tolling bells, sobbing music, slow marching marines and soldiers, the long line of hearses, the long line of survivors, the representative of the Governor-General, and all the high Goernment and company officials were paying respect and honour to twelve, but also to the thousand others who perished in the great disaster. It was the funeral of the twelve, and of others who will rest in quaint old church yards far across the ocean, who will be peacefully laid away in every city, and many towns from down where the tides of Fundy roar, up the narrow gulf to where the shadow of the Rockies fall.

And also it was honouring of the memory of those whose bodies rise and fall in water locked cabins, which float aimlessly up and down narrow white corridors, and which rest on the floor of the St. Lawrence undisturbed by ebb or flow of tide, it was the funeral of those who perished. It was the great tribute of a sorrowing city and Dominion to those who did not survive.

Blue Jackets carrying huge wreaths and crosses led a long line of hearses with their guards of honour. Then here followed one of the saddest figures of the entire procession—Captain Kendall. His face, though solemn and stern, haggard, and pale, with grief, indicated a repressed expression of his emotions. With him was Walsh, Marine Superintendent of the C.P.R., personally representing Sir Thomas Shaughnessy.

WAS OUT OF ORDER

Overruling the objections raised by counsel on behalf of the friends against the intervention of the Attorney-General in the Reid-Aull marriage annulment suit, Mr. Justice Middleton delivered judgment at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, on Friday, upholding the right of the Attorney-General to intervene at any time and in any manned he chose in the interests of the public.

When the Crown moved to dismiss the action on the grounds that the Ontario courts had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter counsel for the Reid family contended that the motion was out of order as the Attorney-General was prohibited from intervening before the trial, and only then to the extent of examining witnesses and adducing evidence. Mr. Justice Middleton ruled there was no limitation or restriction to the right of the Attorney-General to intervene and directed that the official motion to discuss the action be heard on Saturday, May 30th, unless an agreement was reached to take the case on some other day.

His Lordship said: "If the court had no juriadiction that fact should be ascertained at the earliest possible stage of the action. It had been stated on oath that a public hearing of the case might seriously affect the life and reason of the plaintiff on account of the condition of her health. It was easy to conceive that the plaintiff's pleading ought not to be paraded in open court if there was any real doubt of the jurisdiction of the tribunal to entertain the action. If the case went to trial, and the findings were adverse to the plaintiff, and it should afterwards be held that the court had no jurisdiction, her position would be lamentable in the extreme. These considerations pointed to the propriety of separating the trial of the question of fact from the hearing upon the question of law. It was one of the new cases where the legal aspect should be first determined as the matter was one that must affect the whole life of the unfortunate young woman.

BADLY BURNED BY ELECTRIC WIRE

Mrs. E. G. Hiland Had a Terrible Experience Yesterday and is in Serious Condition

HER HUSBAND BURNED

Mrs. E. G. Highland, 557 Homewood Avenue, was the victim of a terrible accident yesterday, which resulted in serious injuries to her. About noon yesterday she received a charge of electricity from one of the wires in her home, and as a result lies horribly burned and in a grave condition to-day.

That Mrs. Hiland was not burned to death yesterday is due to the providential coincidence that her husband happened to leave Barrie's factory, where he is employed, a little earlier than usual, and arrived home as the clock was striking twelve. Mr. Hiland had no reason for going home earlier than usual yesterday, but it so happened that he did, and when he entered his home he was startled to hear his wife moaning in agony in the cellar. Rushing down the steps a sight met his eyes that he is never likely to forget. Lying on the cellar floor, with both hands clasping an electric wire to her breast was Mrs. Hiland. Sparks and flames were leaping from her hands, and smoke, too, rising from where the wires were touching her gave evidence of the burning that was going on. Maddened by the sight, Mr. Hiland rushed forward to tear the wire from her grasp, but the moment that he touched the wire he himself received a charge of electricity that stiffened his body so that he could not move a muscle. Still holding the wire he fell across the form of his wife and struck his head with stunning force against the stone wall of the cellar. In falling he tore the wire from the socket and broke the connection, probably saving his own and Mrs. Hiland's life by so doing. As soon as he could muster sufficient strength he carried Mrs. Hiland upstairs and called Dr. Halliday to attend her. Afterwards it was learned that Mrs. Hiland had gone down into the cellar to put a 25c. piece in the gas meter. In passing under the electric wire that reached from the ceiling to the lamp she brushed it aside, and in so doing received the shock that resulted in her receiving her injuries.

It was found that Mr. Hiland had both hands burned to the bone, and her shoulder blades, ankles and hips were also badly burned. Mr. Hiland had his hands burned and his head and face severely cut. That he was not stunned by his fall against the wall is explained by the fact that he had not yet removed his Christy hat, the stiff brim of which broke the force of the fall. It is his opinion that had he been a minute later Mrs. Hiland would have been burned to death.

"It may seem to you, looking over the accident like this," he said to the Examiner to-day, "that I was foolish to have touched the wire at all, but when I saw Mrs. Hiland lying stiff on the cellar floor with sparks, smoke and flames rising from her hands, and realized that she was burning to death, I acted quickly without considering.

As it is, it is probably the case that Mr. Hiland's course of action resulted more quickly than any other, in freeing Mrs. Hiland from the voltage that she was receiving. It could only have been a matter of a few seconds from the time Mr. Hiland entered his home until the connection of the wires in the cellar was broken.

It is hoped that the injuries to Mrs. Hiland will not be fatal, but it is impossible to say at present if she will recover, as she is in a very dangerous condition.

The Examiner was informed to-day that neighbours in the vicinity of Mr. Hiland's residence have frequently of late received shocks from their electric lights and electric appliances. He himself, and Mrs. Hiland had noticed the apparently high voltage the day before the accident.

KITCHEN ENGINEERING LECTURE

The demonstration yesterday afternoon of the Peterborough Light and Power Co., Limited, given on the second floor of the new Turnbull building, on Kitchen Engineering, or in reality what can be done with gas in the kitchen., proved most interesting and instructive.

Tea is served with the compliments of the Peterborough Light and Power Co., Limited, at each lecture.

MR. ACKERMAN PURCHASED LAND

Fifty Feet of Property on George Street Immediately South of New Barrie Factory Changes Hands.

MAY BUILD STORES

Mr. B. F. Ackerman has bought the fifty feet of land on George Street be-Barrie factory. The property was purBarrie fatcory. The property was purchased by Mr. Thos. Barrie, the well known local furrier, from its present owner some time ago, for the purpose of erecting a new factory for the making of fur articles of apparel. The factory will be 53 feet by 100 ft., and the land that has been bought by Mr. Ackerman is immediately south of it.

Mr. Ackerman stated to-day that he was prepared to erect on the land in the near future, a building to contain stores and offices, if he could arrange to have it completed. Should he decide to build beside the Barrie factory the appearance of George Street at that point will be greatly improved.

Work Commenced.

Work has been commenced on the excavation for the foundation of the new Barrie factory, and the building will be proceeded with as quickly as possible.

The plans for the factory are not entirely completed, but the new building will be something the same style as the Turnbull building at the corner of George and Simcoe Streets. While the appearance and details of construction may differ somewhat from the latter building, the general architecture will be the same. As the Turnbull building, the other will be erected on steel girders, which will guarantee its strength. The complete plans are expected daily by Mr. Barrie, and when they are received the building operations will be rushed. In the meantime the work will be proceeded with.

C. P. R. HAVE ABANDONED THE EMPRESS OF IRELAND

They Have Formally Notified Lloyds' Which Means That the Steamer Will Not Be Raised Unless Underwriters Do So.

DIVERS AT WORK

Special Wire to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, Que., June 4.— The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. to-day served on the agents for Lloyds Underwriters a formal notice of the abandonment of the Empress of Ireland. This makes it certain that the company has given up hope of raising the ship with its eight hundred human bodies entombed therein, but it is believed that the Underwriters will make a determined attempt to raise the vessel. Word comes from Rimouski this morning that a large force of divers and apparatus are already at work.

THE FARMERS' BANK BILL'S SECOND READING

Majority of 38 Against the Six Months Hoist and in favour of the Second Reading of the Measure

A NON-PARTY VOTE

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, June 4.—It was 3.30 this morning before the debate on the Farmers' Bank bill concluded and a vote was taken on a six months' hoist on the motion of A. K. McLean of Halifax. The vote was 55 to 17, or a majority of 38 against the amendment and in favour of the second reading of the bill. The vote was not entirely along party lines, Duncan Ross of West Middlesex, J. Angus McMillan of Glengarry, and E. W. Nesbitt, of South Orford, voting with the government on the Opposition side, while Paul Lamarache of Nicolete, voted against the measure from the side of the government. There is considerable speculation as to the probable fate of the bill when it passed through the Commons. The Canadian Northern bill comes up in the Senate this afternoon. It will likely go through.

POLICE COURT CASES TOTALLED 112 IN MAY

The month of May was one of activity at the local Police Court. There were no less than 112 cases handled, as compared with 97 for the corresponding month of last year.

The cases that were brought to court in May were: Forty-seven drunks, six drunk and disorderly; six blacklisters; three cases of assault; three cases of disorderly conduct; one non-payment of the poll tax; one case of non-support; eight breaches of the by-law; one for supplying a blacklister with liquor; one, playing in a common gaming house; one case of trespass; three cases of truancy; one "throatie"; twelve cases of riding on the sidewalk; one case of prostitution, six cases of vagrancy, one breach of the Traffic by-law; two cases of shop-breaking, and two of theft; five breaches of the Fisheries Act, and one for a breach of By-law No. 205, (a by-law to prevent people from dumping refuse on a vacant lot.

There were three summonses brought into court this morning, against people who have not yet taken out dog licenses. After the summonses had been served, these people took out licenses., but His Worship Magistrate Dumble ordered that they pay the costs, which amounted to 85 cents.

Chief Thompson says that he is satisfied that there are people who have not yet taken out licenses for their dogs, and he is going to issue summonses in each instance that is brought to his attention. Up to date there have ben five hundred and seventy-six licenses taken out.

Since the fines for sidewalk cyclists has increased there have only been one or two cases, and if any one feels like making a contravention of that law they should bear in mind that it will cost them $4.60 if they are caught, and there is a cycling squad that is always on the outlook for such people.

The Peace Negotiations Are Dragging

Editor of The Examiner.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 4. — There was a note of pessimism today among the observers of negotiations as a result of the delay in the reply of General Carranza to the advances of Huerta through the mediators, for pacification of Mexico. There can be no peace permanent between the United States and Mexico in the opinion of many, until the leaders of the two factions in Mexico itself have agreed on terms to prevent further bloodshed.

STREET PAVING IS NEARING COMPLETION

The paving operations on George Street are going ahead fast. The east side of George is completed from McDonnell to the C.P.R. station, and the west side also is nearing completion. The Radial Railway Company have also nearly finished laying the tracks on Charlotte Street, and as soon as they have finished, street paving operations will be commenced there. When George and Charlotte Streets are completed, the contract with Messrs. Foley and Gleason will be concluded. A further area has been laid out by the Council to be paved, but when this work will be started is not yet known.

Badly Hurt In A Runaway

William Coulter, of Manvers Township, who lives in the vicinity of Mount Horeb, figured in a thrilling and serious accident on Tuesday afternoon, about 4.3 0'clock.

Early in the morning his son drove a spirited young horse to Town, Mr. Coulter, Jr., entering the Ross Memorial Hospital, where he is to undergo an operation. His father, an elderly man, arrived later by train, for the purpose of driving the horse back again. About the hour mentioned above Mr Coulter, Sr., along with his daughter, Mrs. Jas. Brady, of North Ops, were driving east on Kent Street, and were passing the corporation cement mixer in front of McMaster's grocery, when the young animal took fright and bolted into a waggon load of gravel. Swerving quickly the buggy toppled over in a twinkling, and the two occupants were precipitated to the pavement before realizing exactly what had happened. The horse ran into Boxall & Matthie's rig which was standing in front of the store and was brought to a halt.

The occupants of the buggy were badly shaken up and were carried into Mr. P. Morgan's drug store, and Dr. McCullough summoned. Mrs. Coulter was suffering painful injuries about the head and shoulders, while blood was flowing profusely from cuts about the face. His shoulder was giving him considerable trouble, and the aged gentleman was in agony for several minutes. Later on he was removed in the ambulance to the Ross Memorial Hospital, where his injuries were carefully attended to.

Mrs. Brady, his daughter, was suffering from a severe shake-up, but otherwise was uninjured.

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1914

LIBERAL NOMINATING CONVENTION.

A convention to nominate a candidate to contest the representation of West Peterborough, at the coming general Provincial elections, will be held in the Conservatory of Music Hall, corner of Rubidge and Hunter streets, on Friday evening, June 5th. All Liberal electors and all electors interested in, and in sympathy with, advanced temperance legislation and other advanced legislation in the interests of the general welfare of the people, such as compose the platform of Mr. Rowell, are invited to be present. It is desirable that the candidate selected should be chosen by representative electors and thus be one to command the united support of all those who believe in progress in the measures that aim at the betterment of the moral, social, industrial, and labour interests of Ontario. Remember the date and place, Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, in the Conservatory of Music Hall, corner Hunter and Rubidge street, entrance opposite Hall street.

WARRANTABLE SURPRISE.

A Peterborough gentleman who had business at the Parliament Buildings, Toronto, yesterday, says that everybody he came in contact with, spoke with surprise of the rejection of Mr. Peck as candidate for West Peterborough; they wanted to know what Mr. Peck had been doing, that he was "turned down" by the Conservatives of West Peterborough who elected him in 1911 by a majority of between 600 and 700. Even Mr. Rowell, the Liberal Leader, spoke of the matter with surprise, as he has a very high opinion of, and great respect for, Mr. Peck. And the failure to recognise Mr. Peck is a matter of, not so much surprise—when we know the underground influences that made Mr Peck's rejection a little piece of petty revenge of a certain clique that has successfully conspired to gain an ascendancy in the Conservative party—as of regret on the part of old-time, substantial Conservatives, and on personal grounds, on the part of many Liberals, who regard Mr. Peck as a citizen of moral substance and standing in the community. He has made a good representative—as good as he could be, considering the government he supports—and the reasons that decided his dismissal as the party standard bearer are not creditable to his party, nor to clean political methods.

We all who know the ropes even a little, can account for the "turning down" of Mr. Peck, but we cannot account for the epidemic of rejection of sitting members as candidates of the Legislature. Many old members of the Government party have had to fight for the nomination and, in many cases, fight in vain. Hon. Thomas Crawford, seat "A," West Toronto, had a close shave; W. K. McNaught, seat "A," North Toronto, was clean bowled, and also Dr. Reaume, North Essex, though a Minister of the Crown, failed to get the nomination, and there are others who have been similarly treated. Supporting a government that is top-heavy with embarassment of support, stimulates and makes easy the work of the cliquers, and contributes to the success of sinister influences.

THE ELECTORS' CHOICE.

Many well-meaning and doubtless, sincere, if excessive, temperance people denounce the acceptance by newspapers of liquor advertisements, especially those newspapers which espouse the temperance cause in their editorial columns, and give it a black eye by advocating whiskey in its advertising columns. To be logical, these persons should vote against a government which derives a large part of its revenue through liquor licenses, the license fees being paid with money contributed by sons and fathers, spent in drunkenness, with the result of the debauching of their manhood, and the degradation, suffering and misery of the inmates of the home. Touching upon liquor advertising the Christian Guardian says that "in spite of specious editorial reasoning the public will not have much faith in the editorial sincerity of a paper which advertises the thing it denounces. The point is well taken; and its application might well be extended to the large number of electors who preach temperance, pray temperance, talk temperance and vote whisky, especially if the vote subserves the interests of their party. Surely "the temperance public" and all other public" will not have much faith in the sincerity of a man who practically votes for what he denounces. The publication in newspapers which advocate restriction of the liquor traffic by legislation, of liquor trade advertisements, may not have a beneficent effect upon temeprance progress, but it is as nothing to the blighting and discouraging and discrediting effect of Christian electors advocating temperance and voting whisky. In the coming election contest, the abolition of the bar and of club licenses is the formally adopted and declared policy of the recognised leader of a great party. If he is successful in the election, if he is given a working following through the votes of temperance electors he will introduce and pass a measure to abolish the bar as surely as he lives. The Whitney Government, now in power, is again appealing for renewal of power. It refuses to consider for a moment abolition legislation. It sidetracked Mr. Rowell's proposal to abolish the bar by the promise of anti-treating legislation. After two sessions' opportunity it has refused to implement its substitutionary remedy for decreasing the evils of strong drink. It takes a hostile attitude towards all and any form of radical or effective reform legislation. If it is returned to power it will give no hope to temperance people of any considerable advance in temperance legislation. It will not probably even pass an anti-treating law—that was a subterfuge to kill the proposal to banish the bar; if that is killed as the result of the elections; from the Government's point of view, no anti-treating law is necessary — it has done its work in killing the most definite and direct proposal to break the back of the liquor traffic ever proposed by any political leader; one who stakes his political future upon the issue he presents.

If Rowell, the sworn enemy of the liquor traffic, is defeated in the coming elections; if Whitney, the friend of the liquor traffic and, as some assert, in close alliance with it, is returned, it will be by the vote of the friends of temperance. Temperance electors may legitimately divide their franchise in respect to subordinate issues involved in the election contest; but in respect to the temperance issue there is no middle way; the temperance elector must either vote for Rowell and provincial prohibition, or for Whitney and legalised intemperance, and all its ghastly trail of consequences. In regard to the temperance issue the vote must be for the boy of the fathers and mothers, or the boy of the liquor dealer. It is in the hands of the electors to decide whether they consider a great temperance reform more desirable than the retention in power of a government whose general record, as well as its record on the temperance question, invites condemnation.

THE CHURCH'S ENDORSATION

The Christian Guardian, the official organ of the Methodist Church, in the course of an article in its latest issue, aptly commends the Whitney Government for the little and comparatively insignificant temperance legislation it has been guilty of, says:

> But when we have given credit where credit is due, what then? The present Government, after repeated urging, and from many, too, who are its friends and supporters, absolutely refuses to promise any further advanced temperance legislation The Leader of the Opposition on the other hand, a man whose word can be honoured surely if any man's can, has promised the abolition of club and tavern licenses, and has shown his sincerity by trying to bring the issue out of party politics altogether. Without abuse of anyone can we not, fairly and reasonably, go to every strong and convinced advocate of temperance reform in the province, and ask for his vote to help to bring in this greatest measure of reform than has so far been proposed?

HOME-MADE CEMENT.

A cement that is said to be so strong that the article will never break in the same place again is made by dissolving half an ounce of gum arabic in two tablespoonfuls of boiling water, adding plaster of paris to make a thick paste. This is applied hot with a small brush, the edges being brought quickly and firmly together.

A good paste for mending books, because it is almost transparent, is made from ground rice mixed with a little cold water. Boiling water is then poured on until the mixture thickens. The print can still be read when mended with this paste.

THE IDEAL PERMANENT HOME

With the Household Editor

We quite frequently hear or read of country communities where some of the older settlers who have worked long and faithfully now wish to retire and enjoy the fruits of their labors. In nine cases out of 10 they move to the adjoining town or city, handing over the old homestead either to a son or married daughter.

While we like to see the young people staying on the farm, and we need them as a part of the community, we also need the older members of the families who have been standbys for many years. And does it not seem reasonable that the ideal place for the silver-haired people to spend their latter days should be in the country, which they have learned to love during the years that they have toiled in order to secure the competence that now ensures their comfort.

We have all heard similar expressions to that made by a young man recently to the effect that he liked nothing better than to have a good chat with some of the old residents around his home and get their ideas and experiences on the problems which every young man has to confront. Thus we need the older folks in a community to act as an inspiration to the young life.

Why not then, when the time comes for father and mother to retire from active work, plan to build a home for them on the farm—an ideal permanent home? It is quite possible to do this nowadays when we have facilities for installing such conveniences as light, water, heat, the telephone and rural mail delivery. Then, too, the nearest neighbors of father and mother will be their own sons and daughters.

In order to keep both young and old in the country, however, and have them contented, it is the duty of everyone in a community to put their shoulder to the wheel and strive to make their community more nearly ideal. To do this we must use brains as well as hands in order to get best results. We should also strive to have everything around the farm as comfortable and neat as possible and to cultivate refinement and progressiveness. If we have these conditions, need we look elsewhere for an ideal permanent home?

THE WAY OF SUCCESS

Joe Steinhardt, Apple King, Seized Opportunity While Washing Dishes in Bowery Eatery

(By Herbert Cosey.)

"Joe" Steinhardt's opportunity looked like hard luck when it came to him. For days he had been getting his meals by washing dishes in Bowery restaurants. At night he had been sleeping on park benches. One afternoon he was hired by a produce dealer to roll some dozen barrels of apples down cellar.

"I won't give you any money," said the dealer when the work was done, "You'll have to take your pay in apples."

Steinhardt was a raw German boy at that time, 16 years old, barely able to speak English intelligibly, without a friend friend in the city, and in rags and tatters. The very last thing he wanted was apples. He had been eating bananas he had picked up on the fruit docks, with an occasional over-ripe melon thrown out of the produce markets. He had planned to spend that anticipated quarter on a steak. But the dealer was in earnest.

"All right," said Steinhardt, "will you loan me a basket?"

This was a most unpromising way for a future "king of apples" to start toward the coronation directorate. But there was no help for it. He hoisted that filled basket of apples over his elbow and started toward Harlem, where the housewives are. From time to time he cried his wares. He was too hungry and weak to eat them—or his career might have vanished before it began. That night he slept again in the park. He had sold all his apples and he saw possibilities ahead. Next morning he was at the apple dealer's door as soon as the owner—to buy more apples.

Humility Doesn't Pay.

"I believe," said Steinhardt on one later occasion, "that I know as much of the buying and selling end of the apple business as any man alive. For three successive years I bought the entire crop of the Hood River county in Oregon. I have given apples to kings—for public purposes. I watch for a new apple district as anxiously as a placer miner does for news of a new camp."

Not every apple dealer will admit that Steinhardt is the most important man in the trade. But it is freely admitted—by no one more freely than Steinhardt—that he is one of the most important men in it. He believes in letting people know about himself.

"Humility," he says, "sells no apples."

It was not long before Steinhardt had progressed to the dignity of a push cart after that successful essay in basket salesmanship. Each morning he would push that cart six miles uptown to the housekeeping centres. By and by he became frightfully annoyed by an Irish peddler named Kelly. Kelly owned as red a cart as Steinhardt. He bought as good apples. He could make as much noise. When Steinhardt started in at one end of the street, and Kelly advanced toward him from the other bawling his wares, peaceful folk used to pull down the windows.

"You gotta git outa here," said Kelly to Steinhardt one day. "Keep off this street."

"Who?" asked Steinhardt. "Me? If you speak to me again—if you even look at me—"

The pair began to haunt each other. Neither was happy until he knew where the other was. They paid more attention to outdistancing the rival than to selling apples. Steinhardt saw that could not go on. One day he went to Kelly in an amicable mood.

"We can't scare each other," said he. "Let's combine."

Begins to Gamble.

A few months later the new firm became venturesome. In open competition they sold four barrels of apples to an outfitting steamship. On the strength of their first "big deal" they bought a horse and waggon. The horse was merely a collection of defects held together by a tenacious will. They painted the waggon themselves, at night, as red as a red as could be found on the colour board. Steinhardt drove the new outfit to the dock himself with the four barrels of apples.

"Every now and then I'd get off the seat and pretend to be fixing something about the harness," said he. "But the harness was all right. I just wanted to see my own name painted on the side of my own waggon."

The rest of the story is simply one of growth. Steinhardt has always specialized in apples. He found difficulty in selling American apples on the other side of the water. Possible buyers did not know what apples are. So that he began to educate Europe on American apples. He has sent packages of red-skinned beauties from Oregon to princes about to be crowned kings. He has corresponded earnestly with titled people and given apples away at Monte Carlo. Eventually he was buying apples by the trainload instead of by the basket. He was the first to buy on a large scale from the Hood River country—the most wonderful valley of apple trees in the world.

"There isn't any secret of success," Steinhardt says. "You only have to know your apples—and then let others know of them. Don't be diffident. It doesn't pay."

HIBERNIAN WIT.

An Irish farmer was asked if he used any of the commercial fertilisers on his land.

"No, sorr," he replied. "To my notion there's nothing like the old barnyard kind."

"Nonsense, man," said the other, "the time is coming when a man can carry the fertiliser for an acre of land in one of his waistcoat pockets."

"Maybe he will, sorr," returned Pat. "An' he'll be able to carry the crop in the other pocket, I'm thinkin'."

Talent Tea Was Success

The Ladies' Aid of the Park Street Baptist Church held a talent tea on Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Booth, 176 Sherbrooke Street. A large number of ladies were present.

During the first part of the afternoon, business was transacted, after which a most pleasant time was spent in social pursuit and the hostess served a dainty lunch.

A neat sum of money was realized. One of the chief items of business transacted was the selection of a date for the annual picnic. It was eventually decided to hold this on Saturday, July 4th.

SPRING REPORT ON BEE-KEEPING

For the purpose of reporting on the condition of bees in Ontario and the honey crop prospects for 1914, blanks were sent to a large number of bee-keepers the latter part of April by the Department of Agriculture. One thousand one hundred and fifty replies were received.

The total number of colonies reported for the fall of 1913 was 41,318; for May, 1914, 38,222, being an average of thirty-three colonies spring count, for each beekeeper reported. The winter loss of seven and one-half per cent. is the lightest it has been for several years. In 1413 is was eleven per cent., in 1912, fifteen per cent., and in 1911, fourteen per cent. What losses there were during the past winter were due principally to starvation by lack of sufficient feed in the hives.

So far as the condition of bees is concerned, the prospects for a good honey crop this year are very good, but clover is only in fair condition, having been very much injured in many localities by unfavourable weather conditions.

While a spring report is of value to determine the present prospects of the honey crop, there is no other farm crop so entirely dependent upon the weather conditions from day to day during harvest time. Any sudden change will often check the secretion of nectar in the flowers and reduce the expected honey crop by hundreds of thousands of pounds.

GREATER OPPORTUNITIES

Farming offers greater opportunities than any other profession in Canada to-day. Such was the decision resulting from a debate at Cavanville recently between representatives of the Central Cavan and Fairmount Farmers' Club. Both sides of the subject under debate were handled in masterly style. Not only was the logic of the speakers convincing, but the ease and feeling with which the young men handled themselves on the platform showed that the Farmers' Clubs are turning out efficient public speakers. So good were a couple of the addresses that the critic of the evening, F. E. Ellis, of Farm and Dairy, was moved to remark, "why not have more farmers in Parliament?" The debaters for the affirmative, representing the Fairmount Club were H. Earle, S. Staples and Mr. Armstrong. The Central Cavan Club was represented by R. Sutton, H. Russell and L. Sutton. As this was the second debate between the same clubs the judges, Messrs. Douglas, D. Sutton and J. Might had a difficult and delicate task to perform. Mr. Jas Seymour was in the chair.

An appreciated feature of the evening's entertainment were the readings from Drummond by Mr. R. J. Soden, a reading by Miss Lane, and the Irish songs of Mr. Moore, all of Peterborough. Addresses were also delivered by the Rev. Mr. Butler and F. E. Ellis. The evening was ended by luncheon served in the hospitable style characteristic of Peterborough County.

UNABLE TO FIND THE BODY OF HIS WIFE

Mr. W. Peryer Made the Journey to Quebec in Vain

The Examiner has received word from Mr. W. Peryer, father of Bandmaster Peryer of the local Temple Band, that he has been unable to identify any of the bodies recovered from the Empress of Ireland as that of his wife who went down in the ill-fated liner.

In his communication Mr. Peryer says that when he entered the shed at Quebec he saw three long benches of dead bodies, some of them were much bruised and cut. Mr. Peryer was unable to find his wife or her friend, Miss P. Dixon, who accompanied her.

Mrs. Sandford of Park Street, Peterborough, is staying with her father and youngest brother, in Toronto, mourning the loss of Mrs. Peryer. CITY SCHOOL TEACHERS ENJOY OUTING AT RICE LAKE

Annual Event Held Yesterday Was the Best Ever—Str. Rainbow Carried Happy Crowd.

SOME FEATURES

The stern disciplinarian in the city schoolroom could not be associated with, or even found, in the happy band of local school teachers, who boarded the steamer Rainbow yesterday morning for their annual outing to Harwood and Rice Lake points. The threatening aspect of the weather when the "Rainbow" dropped her moorings, did not in the least dampen the spirits of the city pedagogues, and with but few exceptions, all were on board for a day of pleasant diversion from their otherwise exacting labours. As the morning progressed the weather man took cognizance of the teachers' annual event and withheld his copious showers for an organization more deserving of his spiteful spleen.

The sail down the winding Otonabee with all its richness of scenic beauty at this season, was much enlivened by the original as well as amusing "stunts" (school teachers' license) of the fun-makers. Parodies implicating many of the city's most prominent educators were sung to the unbounded delight of all present.

Shortly after twelve o'clock Harwood was reached. Here a most sumptuous dinner was served by Mine Host Gilman, of the Harwood Hotel, to which ample justice was done, proving without a doubt that teachers' knowledge of culinary art was not by any means an unknown quantity.

After dinner a baseball game was played between East City and Central teachers, the former winning, it is said, but no record of the score is obtainable. On the return sail Idyl Wyld and Jubilee Point were visited, tea being served by the ladies in the Pavilion at the latter place. Song and story made the trip home pass all too rapidly, and when the new Government Wharf was reached, all were unanimous in voting the 1914 outing the best ever.

Lord Brooke To Command Again

Peterborough Garrison Preparing for its Visit to Petawawa Camp

Preparations are going ahead fast for the visit of the Peterborough Garrison, Cavalry, Artillery and Infantry to Petawawa Army Reserve, this month.

The Cavalry leave on June 15th, and will be encamped until the 27th, the Artillery leave on the 18th, and will be in camp for 16 days, while the Infantry go for a five days' course, on June 21st.

Lord Brooke, the O. C. of manoeuvres of last year's camp, will have charge of the cavalry manoeuvres, and he sails for Canada to-day, accompanied by Major Earle of the Grenadier Guards as Chief Staff Officer. The recent reports that Prince Alexander of Teck would visit Canada for this purpose, fell through on his appointment to the Governor-Generalship.

Lord Brooke is a distinguished Cavalry officer and, last year, was high in his praise of the work of the 3rd Dragoons.

That Regiment will doubtless keep its good name during their period of training, as it is believed that some unique feature is being developed by them, secretly.

The camp at Petawawa this year, will hold a record crowd of militia. It is believed that from fifteen to seventeen thousand troops will be assembled there at one time, for training.

The reserve at Petawawa is without doubt the best instructional ground in Canada. The conditions met with there are as near active service conditions as it is possible to get.

The 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons go into camp at Petawawa on June 15th.

A test mobilization of troops will take place on that date, when about eight thousand cavalry, infantry and auxiliary corps, selected from the 3rd and 4th divisions, will be moved to Petawawa for their training.

This will be followed on June 20th by the movement of about four thousand infantry, composed of portions of city corps from the 2nd, 3rd and 4th divisions.

During the week commencing June 21st, two days' combined training will take place at Petawawa in co-operation with the artillery brigades then undergoing their annual training.

The movement of troops into Petawawa on Monday, June 15th will constitute one of the largest concentrations of troops within a period of twenty-four hours, that has taken place in Canada for many years, and the strain upon the transportation facilities of the railway will be considerable. Nearly 350 cars, or about 20 trains, will be required for the movement; and, as the last twelve miles of the journey will be over a single track it is obvious in order to make the mobilization a success, the strictest discipline must be maintained, and horses and men will have to be entrained at each station ready to pull out exactly on scheduled time.

Advance parties will be sent forward on Saturday, June 13th, and every facility will be afforded the officers in charge of these parties, to draw camp equipage and ordinance stores immediately on arrival, so that tents may be put up and a hot meal cooked for the troops on their arrival in camp on Monday. To further facilitate these arrangements, two army service corps will go into camp on Saturday, June 13th.

A plan of mobilization has been adopted which is expected to ensure that all troops will be under canvas before sunset.

Men will readily see that the mobilization work, means a great deal of work and worry for the officers, and it is up to them, to alleviate, as much as possible, the responsibility that is held by the officers, by obedience to even the most trivial orders, and willing assistance. The Officer Commanding trains will be held responsible that the entraining arrangements are rigidly adhered to, as it is obvious, that in such an extensive movement of troops, involving a complicated schedule for a long haul of so many troop trains within a limited time, during which all other freight traffic will be suspended, failure to obey orders will result in a train being dropped out, and held over until the remainder of the mobilization is complete. Therefore, if the Peterborough contingent of the 3rd Dragoons, do not get away from the Grand Trunk Station, on Sunday, June 14th, at 2 p.m. sharp, their scheduled time, they will have to wait over, until the last of the 20 trains have reached the Army Reserve. All ranks will therefore ensure their own comfort by a prompt obedience.

The trains will be numbered as they are on active service when troops are mobilized in times of active warfare. Col. C. H. Rogers, Officer Commanding the 3rd Dragoons, will be in charge of Military Transport No. 1. The people of Peterborough may therefore look forward to a busy, and none the less interesting time, on Sunday, June 14th, when they will be able to gather some idea, of what strict discipline, and at the same time, smartness and efficiency is observed when such an important measure is being undertaken.

Twenty-three Years' Hard Toil To Fulfil Dying Father's Wish

MINNEAPOLIS, June 1.—A story of years of struggling and privation by the children of an unidentified man to carry out a father's dying request to free the family conscience and the solution of the disappearance of a packet of money has been solved here ater twenty-three years. Mrs. E. A. Colliton, East Lake Street, received through the police $900 in bills, the amount that had disappeared from her handbag on 17th January, 1891.

The clearing of the one mystery leaves another for Mrs. Colliton, for the names of those who struggled to return the money were kept from her, and though she wanted to return part or all of the money to the family, she was told not to try to learn more of the case.

Methods used in getting the case before the police and in getting the money back to the owner only served to hide more securely the identity of the family that has been conscience-stricken since the money was taken.

The family was represented by an agent, who kept his own identity secret. Mrs. Colliton and the agent arranged the exchange of the money through an attorney. The police department, like an exchange, merely brought the two parties together.

Just one message reached Mrs. Colliton from those who returned the money, and that was:

"We are happier to-day than we have been in twenty-three years."

Evidence of the struggle to raise the fund and comply with the father's dying wish was made clear by the money.

Nearly half the amount was in $1 bills, pinched one at a time from the family income. Most of the remainder was in $5 bills.

Investigations necessary to establish the identity of Mrs. Colliton and the work preparatory to returning the money so that the identities of the family most concerned could be hidden took several days.

A man appeared at police headquarters several days ago, paced the floor, went out in the corridor several times, and finally stepped to the desk and spoke to William [illegible], desk [illegible] "I have something that I want to say, but I don't know exactly how to go at it," he said.

Then apparently more at his ease he told why he had asked the police to help him.

"A packet of money was lost on Nicollet Avenue more than twenty years ago, and the person who lost it can have it by proving identiy and the loss," said the man.

He then explained that he represented the family that wished to return the money, but said the person who had lost the money could not be found. He asked the police to help him.

To prevent an attempt of persons to put in a false claim the man told Mr. Dunn only the barest details of the case. He wanted the police to find the record of the robbery and then find the person who lost the money. He told him that a sum of money less than $1,000 and more than $500 was lost on Nicollet Avenue between 15th January and 15th February, 1891.

A search of the records gave Mr. Dunn the information he wanted. The loss was before the marriage of the Collitons. Mrs. Colliton had received the money as a gift from her father and had placed it in the Bank of Minneapolis, Nicollet Avenue and Third Street. On 17th January, 1891, she went to the bank and drew out $900, intending to invest that amount in another concern.

She walked down Fourth Street, and had gone less than half a block when she looked at the handbag she was carrying and saw that it was open.

The money was gone. The street was crowded at the time and the bag had been jostled against several pedestrians. Mrs. Colliton believed she had been robbed, but a man and woman, who saw her searching the sidewalk and who were well known said that a man, woman, and little girl had been behind her when she dropped her money. The man, she said, picked it up, and the three turned and walked away.

The little girl is one of the children who struggled to clear the family name and who to-day joined in repaying the money. The loss was advertised, but no clue to the identity of the persons who found the money was ever obtained.

This much Mr. Dunn learned, but to find the owner of the money was a different matter. At the time of the loss Mrs. Colliton lived in Bloomington. Her name before her marriage was Lorann Scott. By many interviews with Bloomington pioneers Mr. Dunn learned that Mrs. Colliton was the one who had lost the money.

The mysterious agent told the police the other details, but refused to divulge the name of the family.

For years the man was despondent because of his inability to return the money, which he had spent.

OLD TIMER LIKED THE LACROSSE GAME

Peterborough, April 4th, 1914.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I had the pleasure last night of witnessing the lacrosse match in Riverside Park, and to say I was delighted with the game would be putting it mildly. The old game has the same charm as ever, always something doing and everybody up on their toes with excitement. The boys acquitted themselves as gentlemen on both teams, not a man being penalized. This is as it should be, and will win with the crowd every time. Keep it up boys, and you will surely get there. All that is required now is some encouragement from the sport-loving public.

Surely Canada's national game deserves some recognition at our hand. Let the old heads rally around the boys from now on. They are deserving of it after last night's exhibition.

Yours truly,

OLD-TIMER.

[illegible] IN SESSION

Several Ministers Transferred to Bay of Quinte Conference but No one yet Appointed to Charlotte Street

NAPANEE, June 3—The Bay of Quinte Conference opened its ministerial session at 10 o'clock to-day. The following ministers have been transferred into the Conference: Dr. E. N. Baker, M.A.; C. S. Reddick, and W. J. Wood; out of the Conference: J. B. Saunders, John Line, G. J. Bishop and W. H. Emery.

Three superannuated ministers were restored to the active work and stationed for the ensuing year. Ten ministers were superannuated. One resigned from the ministry, and one was notified of location a year hence. Six young men were received on probation.

ADVANTAGES OF THE POLICE CONVENTION

The Canadian Police Bulletin, speaking of the coming convention, which will be held at Winnipeg from June 23rd for three days, and at which Chief Thompson will give a paper on "Crime Investigation," says: "Present indications are that the attendance this year will greatly exceed that of last year, and it is to be hoped that the Police Governing bodies in Canada will endeavour to contribute to this desirable result. If the Police Officers would attain to a reasonable high standard of efficiency, they must acquire a knowledge of all the details practical to police work, and this can be done best by discovering them from experienced Police Officers.

This Police Convention offers such advantages, and no Police Governing Body can afford to miss such opportunities, if they desire a standard of efficiency, such as is likely to satisfy their order minded citizens. If given the necessary help, and encouragement, there is no reason why the Police of Canada should not be as efficient as any Police Force in the world.

CRITICISM FOR GOVERNMENT

MONTREAL, June 4.—La Presse is out this afternoon with a scathing editorial anent the Government's action forbidding the 65th Regiment from bearing arms as an escort of the priests in the procession of Corpus Christi. La Presse says: "So the 65th Regiment cannot do honour to the King of Kings, because it is displeasing to the servant of lodges."

KING'S BIRTHDAY

King George V. began his fiftieth year yesterday, and in the celebrations of the monarch's birthday throughout the British Empire the friends of boxing will take an enthusiastic part, for they look to the King as the patron and preserver of the "manly art." Since George came to the throne there have been several crusades against boxing in England, and that they all failed is due in no small part to the attitude of the British monarch. Early this year the British Association for the Suppression of Everything We Don't Like—an organization which has several flourishing branches in this country—got busy with the hammer and started in to administer a knockout blow to the boxing game. The crusade went along merrily, but as soon as it assumed influential proportions the king manifested his disapproval of the crusade by attending a boxing show, at which professionals as well as amateur boxers displayed their prowess with the gloves. That put the kibosh on the anti-boxing propaganda, and nothing has since been heard of it. King George shares the opinion of his father, the late King Edward, who declared that he wouldn't give the snap of his fingers for a "lad who couldn't put his hands up."

Since the days of Figg, who became the first pugilistic champion of England nearly two centuries ago, boxers have enjoyed the approval of all English kings. George I. issued a royal command to Figg to appear before him and was greatly pleased with the exhibition. The second George's reign was marked pugilistically by the rise of such great boxers as Taylor, Broughton and Slack, and the King, on several occasions, occupied the Royal box at Broughton's ampitheatre. The reign of George III was the palmy period of British boxing, when Mendosa, Jackson, Belcher, Pearce and Cribb, among others, were in the limelight. In 1814 the King gave a boxing exhibition in honour of the visit of the rulers of Russia and Prussia, and three monarchs and many princes and nobles witnessed the contests. Belcher and a number of other boxers were guards of honour at the coronation of George IV. During Queen Victoria's reign boxing received a black eye, but the game was saved by the Chambers and Queensbury rules, and the Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward, aided in so far as was in his power to save boxing from the Victorian opposition.

Ritchie is Evading Go With Welsh

NEW YORK, June 4.—Willie Ritchie will not box Fred Welsh in London for the lightweight championship of the world.

Once again the American champion has run away from the match, this time by proxy. Emil Thiry, representing the Californian in this matter, met Bob Vernon and Harry Pollok yesterday afternoon and put such obstacles in the way of a meeting that nothing was left to do but abandon it.

Thiry declined to put up the forfeit to guarantee Ritchie's appearance, insisted on naming Eugene Corri as referee and also on selecting the stakeholders. Vernon, who represents Promoter Chas. Cochran, of London, was willing to waive the referee matter for the present, as was Pollok also. But Cochran had asked his friend, George Considine, to hold the stakes, and Thiry would not consider him. Even that might have been smoothed over, but the blank refusal to post $5,000 for forfeit money or any other amount made the bout impossible. Thiry left for Chicago last night.

Will Try to Stage Fight out on the Coast.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 4. — Eddie Graney, the 'Frisco fight promoter, announced to-day after a conference with Louis Pasente, his matchmaker, that he would offer Willie Ritchie a guarantee of $17,000 for his end to box either Freddie Welsh or Charlie White in San Francisco the early part of next month.

"With the report that negotiations have been called off for Ritchie and Welsh in England," said Graney, "I am prepared to go to the bat for a lightweight match. I will give Ritchie $17,000 for his end, and I propose to get into touch with both the champion and his two possible opponents within the next 24 hours. If it is at all possible I will arrange the match."

BASEBALL CHATTER

Hamilton Spectator: That two new infielders and a pitcher must be secured by Saturday night and that Pitcher Dwyer must be released, are the instructions given to Manager Yates of the Hamilton ball club, according to information handed out at baseball headquarters this morning. The directors of the local club are far from satisfied with the inability of the team to do better than break even in the games won and lost, and greatly displeased with the continual reports of listless and indifferent work on the part of some of the players. According to reports from Erie, the first two games played by the Hams this week were marked with great indifference, Monday's game being tossed away because of carelessness, even after Cozy Dolan had twirled a great game. The directors feel that there is no disgrace in defeat which comes after the team has given its best, but when defeat is to be charged up to indifferent work on the part of the team, then, it is felt, there is room for action. The instructions sent to Manager Yates are such that he must show his ability to patch up the weak spots by the end of the week.

Brantford Expositor: The Petes seem to be the blow-up team of the League. They were picked by the wise ones to come through this year, but instead of coming through they have fallen through, being now at the foot of the League ladder.—Hamilton's rightful place.

Hamilton Spectator: Report has it that Erie is proving the worst town in the circuit at the present time. The fans did not cotton to Manager Heinie Smith, while indifferent work by the players also soured them. With a new manager on the job and an effort being made to whip the team into shape, improvement is expected, however. The attendance at the Erie games has been away below expectation, although at that much better than Berlin or Guelph could have done.

PETERBORO' CLUB PROTEST YESTERDAY'S BALL GAME

The Peterborough Ball Club have decided to protest yesterday's game in Toronto on the ground that the umpires erred in refusing to give Blount a home run on his drive in the tenth innings. The local club will ask President Fitzgerald to reverse the umpire's decision and to have the game finished just as if the incident had not happened. They will use as a precedent for this the action of the National League in, it is said, the game between the Giants and Philadelphia, in which an umpire's decision was overruled and the game played over again from the point at which the trouble arose.

PETERBORO' FORFEITS GAME TO BEAVERS SCORE WAS TIED WHEN TROUBLE CAME

Dispute Over Hit by Manager Blount in Tenth Innings Resulted in Peterborough Leaving the Field.

THE CLUB WILL PROTEST

The Globe: After sitting in the stand for two hours and thirty minutes and with the temperature, in the opinion of the fans and those in the press box, somewhere near the freezing point, Umpire Hallihan awarded the Beavers their final fixture with Peterborough at the Stadium, yesterday in the visitors' half of the tenth inning. The trouble arose after two were out in that session, and the score a tie at six all. Manager Blount took his turn at the plate and sent a screeching line drive over third base which was fair by inches only. Continuing on its course the ball rolled into the flag area in left field. Blount reached third base, where he was stopped by Schultz's throw after the latter had recovered the ball. The next moment Umpire Hallinan was surrounded by the entire Peterborough team.

They contended that as the ball had gone out of the umpire's sight that Blount was entitled to a home-run, which, according to the rules, he was. In the International League a hit in the flag area goes for two bases only, but the Canadian League have no such rule. As a result the umpire was forced to use his judgment. He ordered Manager Blount to go back to third base, but after much wrangling, and to the disgust of the fans, the Peterborough team left the field, and Hallinan awarded the game to the Beavers, 9 to 0. President Fitzgerald will give a decision in the matter.

No less than five pitchers were used by the teams. Peterborough had Belting, Tracey and Schettler doing mound duty, while Roberts and Auld did the heaving for the Beavers. The game was the best of the series and both teams played fast, snappy ball. Schults had his first hit in three games. It was a home-run to deep centre, the ball rolling against the fence. There was one on at the time. Duffy, who hails from St. Bonaventure College, replaced Murphy at shortstop. He fielded well, but failed to get a hit.

The World: It was a badly disgusted bunch of fans that crossed the Bay after yesterday's struggle between the Beavers and Peterborough. With two games already in their bat bags, Knotty Lee's boys went in to win, and see-sawed on the scoring with the Petes till the ninth, when the score stood 6 all. Then in the tenth, just as the fans were settling down to enjoy the last throes of the battle, Blount banged out his fourth hit of the day, a drive to left, which bounded between the bleachers and the grand stand, and made third on the throw in. The opposing Captain claimed a homer, but his umps said no, and for fifteen minutes the players wrangled at the plate, the Peterborough Captain finally leading his nine off the field. Hallinan declared the game forfeited to Toronto, 9 to 0.

According to International League ruling a hit in this spot is good for two sacks only, but Canadian League rules give the runner all he makes. Although Hallinan's decision was strictly in accordance with rules the Peterborough Captain couldn't see it any other way but that he should have a homer.

Peterborough commenced hostilities in the first by sending one across on Blount's single, and Welsh's wallop to deep left. Welsh made third easily on the hit, but Landry, a new umpire, called him out for not touching the middle sack. In the second Wilcox walked and scored when Schults dropped Gorman's hard fly.

The Petes counted again in the third on Blount's second hit, and Stewart's corking two-bagger to centre, and in the fourth, with Auld twirling for Toronto, counted another on Duffy's error, a hit by Fox, pinch hitting for Belting, and Blount's third third bingle to left. The last two were secured in the 7th on hits by Tracey, Byrne and Welsh.

For the Beavers, Burrill, hitting for Roberts, in the third, singled cleanly to centre, was sacrificed along, and scored on Ort's hard one to first. Germany Schultz then brought the stand to its feet with a corking home run drive to the centre fence, scoring Ort ahead of him. In the 7th, Schneider doubled and scored on Loud's bingle and the locals tied it up in the 8th on two errors, a walk and Ort's single.

Eddie Meyer, brother of the noisy Benny, and Killilea, last year of Hamilton will join the club to-day at Erie.

The Mail: One of the hardest-fought games at the Island this season ended yesterday afternoon in a fizzle when Peterborough forfeited the game to the Beavers in the tenth, when the score was tied—6 all. Until that moment the game had been full of pepper and as exciting as any fan could wish, and the decision of Peterborough in leaving the field, and defaulting the game to the Beavers was as surprising as it was disappointing. If such spirit is to be shown by all the Canadian League teams, the higher rating granted them this year by the National Commission will avail them little, for they will soon lose what support they are receiving here now.

The mix-up occurred with two out in the tenth. The score was tied, 6 all. Blount hit Auld's offering hard, the ball lighting on fair ground just inside the third base wout line. It took a bounce and landed in the flag pole entrance. According to the International League rules this hit would have been good for two bases and that was all that the arbitrators decided to give Blount. He objected, claiming a home run. The Peterborough team came in and gathered around the pmpires, and for a time a free-for-all fight looked on the horizon. Althought the Lock Town team argued for 15 minutes, the officials stood firm on the decision with the result that the Petes, in bush league manner, walked from the field, and the umpires declared the game forfeited to Toronto by a score of 9 to 0.

Peterborough secured an early lead, walloping Roberts' offerings in the first three innings for three runs. The Beavers came back in the third and tied the score, but Peterborough jumped into the lead in the fourth by scoring a run. In the sixth Toronto evened up by securing one on Tracey, who had relieved Belting. The Petes made two in the seventh, and after the Beavers had secured a like number in their half of the same inning, Tracey was taken out and relieved by Schettler. From that point on the game continued fast and exciting until the tenth, when the fatal argument occurred and Peterborough walked off the field. Duffy, who took the place of Murray at shortstop, played a good game for a substitute. He failed to make a hit, and his nervousness in the first part of the game caused him to make an error. But he won the heart of the fans in the fifth when he started a smart double play which cut off a run and retired the side.

The score when the dispute came was as follows:

LOCALS LOSE FIRST LACROSSE FIXTURE IN THE O.A.L.A. SERIES

Hastings Defeated Peterborough by 6 Goals to 4 in Intermediate Game--Five of the Homesters Were Playing Their First Game of Lacrosse.

In the opening O. A. L. A. game of the season and incidentally the first exhibition of Canada's national pastime seen here in a number of years, Hastings defeated Peterborough last night after a hard-fought battle by six goals to four. With ten minutes to go the teams were tied but the boys from the East finished strong. The score, by quarters, was: Peterborough 1, Hastings 0, Hastings 4, Peterborough 2; Hastings 4, Peterborough 2; and Hastings 6, Peterborough 4.

The showing made by the Peterborough team was satisfactory to the promoters of the game here. A victory in the opening game against a bunch in good shape and with several games under their belts, was not expected, and that the locals were enabled to give the visitors a battle all the way was gratifying. As composed last night, the Peterborough team consisted half of veterans who have not had the work to round into shape, and of youngsters, who were playing their first lacrosse game. Both will improve with practice and the team will be fifty per cent. better on its next appearance. At that several good players were unable to get into harness last night. Hastings had the advantage of having played several games, benefitting both their condition and team work.

In spite of the threatening aspect of the weather a crowd of four hundred gathered for the game. Many old lacrosse fans were noticed. The ball was faced by His Worship Mayor Buller.

The old guard of the Petes consisted of Ed Dillon, Lou McCoy, George Robertson and Jack Crough, veterans of many a hard-fought battle in days gone by and still able to give a good account of themselves. Although not in the pink of condition they stood the pace very well last night and played good lacrosse. Dillon and Weir were very effective on the defence and Crough contributed some fine work in midfield, several goals following long gallops by the second defence man. McCoy was stronmy in the limelight, getting three of the Petes' four goals on beautiful shots. Had he been led more with the ball in the first quarter there might have been a different verdict. Robertson showed his old cleverness in stick-handling and made things interesting for the visiting defence.

The remainder of the team were in their first lacrosse game. Grover Halpin of hockey fame was at centre, and the youngster played a surprisingly good game for his first appearance with the gutted stick. Doc. McFadden did some fine work in the nets, and the other newcomers to the game gave a good account of themselves.

Hastings uncovered a promising team with a lot of speed in evidence, but, like Peterborough, they showed a crudeness in attack. Both teams lost many opportunities through wild passing or poor shooting when close in. The visitors were quite a family party, with three Dodds and a trio of Scrivers on the line-up, and neither the Dodd clan or the Scriver faction have any reason to be ashamed of their representatives.

Following were the teams:

Hastings		Peterborough
Lou Scriver		McFadden
	Goal
Nesbitt		Dillon
	Point
Armstrong		Johnston
	Cover.
B. Dodd		Mein
	1st defence.
Armstrong		Crough
	2nd defence
L. Scriver		Halpin
	Centre
Tate		Marion
	2nd Home
Dooman		McCoy
F. Dodd		Kenneally
	Outside Home
H. Dodd		Robertson
	Inside Home

The Petes had the better of the play in the first quarter, leading at the end of the period by 1 to 0. They were on the aggressive all the way and should have had three or four more goals, had it not been for poor shooting. Manion scored the only goal of the period on a nice shot from well outside.

Hastings showed to better advantage in the second period and soon tied th score on a long shot by H. Dodd. The Petes took the lead again a few seconds afterwards, Crough got away for a nice run, passed to Manion, who transferred to McCoy, and the latter scored neatly. Then the villagers cut loose, and before the half ended had found the nets three times, giving them a 4 to 2 lead at the half.

There was no score in the third period, although Hastings pressed closely and McFadden had some hard shots to handle.

The Petes opened the last quarter with a burst of speed that soon tied up the game. Two nice combination attacks, followed by beautiful shots by McCoy, gave them a pair of goals. With honours even and only a few minutes to go, the game grew exciting. Hastings' condition counted, however, and the easterners came through with a brace of goals. Just before time was called. Armstrong of the visitors received an accidental gash over the eye, the only injury of the game.

Typos Beaten By The Bankers

Men of Finance Won Last Night's Mercantile League Fixture by 11 to 3

The Mercantile League played its first semi-weekly game of baseball last night, when the Bankers defeated the Typos 11—3 in a five innings game at the Exhibition grounds. It was only a fair exhibition of the game, but the ground hindered good fielding. The officials of the league should see that the evening games started on time, as both teams were late last night.

WILL BE SETTLED

The troubles of the United States and Mexico will be settled on July 4, the birthday of the United States and the fiesta day of Mexico.

Instead of submitting the contentions of Mexico and the United States to A-B-C intermediation, or sending out armies to slay each other, it is proposed to leave the question to two physical representatives of the races and let them settle it. After all, fists are the A, B, C's of arbitration.

Senor Don La Barra, better known perhaps as Joe Rivers, is to [illegible] Mexico and Willie Ritchie [illegible] your to make Joe see stars and stripes skyrockets and a few other things.

The proposition to submit the entire question of Mexico to Rivera and Ritchie probably comes nearer the popular idea of a square deal than either of the other plans. They are typically representative of their races. Rivers is the Pancho Villa of the prize ring, possessed of all the fighting qualities and the cunning of Huerta, without his habits, and Ritchie, to a marked degree, has the stubborn insistence upon his rights that characterizes the administration, with the punch and the power to back up his stand. And he uses it only when it becomes necessary for him to do it.

As a character study of races the battle between these two lightweights on July 4 is interesting. They are types. What Ritchie does to Rivers is what an equal number of American fighting men would do to an equal number of Mexican fighting men.

Rivers is a fighting man of the Mexican type, strong, "game" in the sense that he does not fear results, eager, willing to fight even against odds. There is much Spanish in him, and the Latin pride and fire is mingled with the stoicism of the Indian. His Indian blood is from the Aztec, not from the Yaqui, which is well for Ritchie.

Ritchie has proved his right to represent America physically and mentally. If it isn't settled before July 4 let them fight it out with fists.

OBITUARY

MRS. GEORGE PLUNKETT.

(Cobourg Sentinel Star.)

On Tuesday evening, Maria Grace McCabe, beloved wife of Mr. George J. Plunkett, passed peacefully away at the family residence, Division street, fortified and comforted by the last rites of the Holy Mother Church. The late Mrs. Plunkett was born at Port Hope fifty-seven years ago and was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Peter McCabe of that town. She was married to her now bereaved husband in September, 1880, since which time she has resided in Cobourg. Mrs. Plunkett was a woman of quiet taste, fond of her home and family. She was a woman of lofty character and ideals, one whom it was a pleasure to know, and to know her was to respect her. She has been in failing health since January, and bore her long and painful illness with great patience. She had a severe illness about two years ago, but recovered, and it was thought she had regained her usual good health until her last illness again caused her to take to her bed. She is survived by her husband and four daughters—Sister Jane Francis, of the St. Joseph's Order, Lindsay; Mrs. Harry J. Cahley, of Toronto, and Misses Genevieve and Anna, at home, and three sons—George, Arnold and Wilfred, at home. Three sisters—Miss McCabe of Montreal, Mrs. P. J. Carey, and Mrs. Christopher, of Toronto, also survive. The funeral took place Friday morning to St. Michael's Church and cemetery.

FORMING WORLD'S RECORD NECKLACE WORTH $1,500,000

LONDON, June 4—It may be remembered that nearly a year ago a pearl necklace, valued at $675,000, was stolen in transit between Paris and London. Parts of it were later recovered and the men who attempted to dispose of it arrested, tried and convicted. The necklace was owned by May Meyer, the Hatton Garden diamond and pearl merchant. Recently the news was published in a Paris paper that pearls were a glut on the market, and among those London dealers who were interviewed on the subject were the manager of the Goldsmith & Silversmiths' Company, of Regent street, and Mr. Meyer.

Both declared that the Paris report was erroneous, as pearls had never been in greater demand, on account of that, having taken the place of diamonds as the favourite gems of society women.

Mr. Meyer added that he had so much faith in the continued demand for pearls that he was now assembling a necklace to be composed of 260 perfectly graduated and matched pearls, which would be valued at $1,500,000. In talking with the reporters on the subject, he displayed a number of the beautiful gems in his collection.

"Wouldn't they make the women folks' eyes sparkle? This one cost 10,00 pounds, ($50,000), and that one 20,000 pounds," said Mr. Mayer, picking up two of the gems as large as a sparrow's egg. "I have been collecting the principal pearls of the string for some time past — indeed, ever since I thought I had lost beyond recall the £135,000 necklace that was stolen. In the ordinary way I could not acquire so many really fine pearls in twenty years' time, so few that are suitable for my purpose come into the market. But I have agents representing me in every market of the world, and I hope very shortly to complete the string.

"I do not anticipate any difficulty in disposing of it and I am in no haste to do so. Pearls are concentrated wealth, and an investment of high value. My ideal is to make the necklace a thing of the greatest beauty and brilliance that pearls can possibly make it, and at the same time the most costly in the world. To make it unique in size and quality is to make it even more valuable than its intrinsic worth, counting so many grains to the pearl."

Health and Beauty Hints

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN

VERA B.: Your skin will grow soft, clear and smooth after a few applications of a plain almond or jelly-cream, made at home as follows: Put 4 tablespoonfuls glycerine into ½ pint water and in this dissolve 1 ounce almond which you can buy at your druggist's. Apply a little coat of this to the skin before retiring, then wash off in the morning and use more of the jelly-cream for massaging. This gradually dispels the wrinkles and lines and banishes pimples, blackheads and the "muddy," oily look. The almond jelly-cream is greaseless and will not grow hair.

MRS. A. T.: You may not require glasses. Get from your druggist 1 ounce eyebon and dissolve in 1 pint water. Then put a few drops in the affected eye several times a day until inflammation and soreness have vanished. This eyebon eye-tonic is especially good for granulated eyelids and using it strengthens the eyes and gives them a youthful sparkle.

ADELINE: The reason for that dryness of hair after your shampoo is because that kind of soap irritates the scalp's tissues and makes them over sensitive. Castheron will correct this for it is a tonic as well as cleanser and is so stimulating to the blood-vessels and scalp-tissues that the danger is entirely eliminated. To prepare your shampoo dissolve a teaspoonful of castheron in a cup of hot water, then pour it slowly on the head as you rub briskly. This dissolves every trace of dust, dandruff and grease all, and after rinsing, the hair will dry quickly and evenly.

LUCY G.: Loss of weight is a serious matter and calls for prompt action. Get from your druggist 1 ounce bayrhum and put it, together with ½ ounce of sugar, into ½ pint alcohol, then add hot water to make a full pint. This is a delightful before bed tonic. This simple home remedy improves your appetite and gently cleanses the system of impurities, restores a healthy condition to the vital organs. When this is done your weight will be normal and the glow of health will be upon your cheeks.

MRS. A. B. J.: I make a good lotion that is very helpful to my skin by dissolving 4 ounces spermnat in ½ pint witch hazel or hot water, to which I added 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine, which will soon correct that oily, sallow "worsent" appearance of your complexion. This simple lotion is soothing and healing and imparts a velvety smoothness and natural loveliness to the complexion and possible dab powder and rouge. You will like the spermnat lotion because it is easily applied and cannot be detected when on.

LUCILLE: I always use a plain quinsoin hair tonic, made at home by pouring 1 ounce quinsoin into ½ pint alcohol, then adding ½ pint water. Rub a little well into the scalp twice a week and you will soon rid the scalp of dandruff and restore the hair roots to health. The regular use of the quinsoin tonic will restore the former glow and even colour to the hair and make it soft, lossy and fluffy.

MRS. M. H. T.: Your excess weight can be easily and quickly reduced by taking this parrotin treatment, made at home, as follows: Put 4 ounces parrotin (which you can get at your drug store) in ½ pint hot water and strain when cool, then add at once 1 tablespoonful of this parrotin mixture to a glass of water and drink before breakfast and before each meal until you reach your normal weight. This is where you want it. No harm results from using this or any parrotin treatment, and you look fine in soft outs and the skin soft and smooth.

Seasonable Recipes

RHUBARB PUDDING

Two cups cream, one egg, quarter teaspoon salt, quarter cupful sugar, one teaspoon soda, two teaspoons cream of tartar, and flour enough to make a thick batter. Sift soda and cream of tartar with flour. Line the bottom and sides of pudding dish with the batter, put in finely cut rhubarb well sprinkled with sugar. Cover with remainder of batter and bake. This is delicious served with whipped cream.

RHUBARB MARMALADE

Three lbs. rhubarb, cut fine, three lbs. sugar. Let stand over night; stir three or four times before retiring. In morning boil 20 minutes, add juice of two lemons and let boil five minutes longer. Add half pound chopped walnuts; let come to a boil again, cool a little, and put up as jelly. Some prefer not to use walnuts.

ORANGE PUDDING

Three oranges sliced fine, one cup sugar poured over oranges. Then take one pint milk, yolks of two eggs, two teaspoons of corn starch, and boil until thick and pour over oranges. Make a meringue of the whites and brown in the oven.

CONVENTION POSTPONED.

Ontario Newspapermen Defer Meeting Until After Elections.

OTTAWA, June 5.—At a meeting in Ottawa yesterday the executive committee of the Canadian Press Association decided to have the 50th annual meeting of the association held in Toronto on Thursday and Friday, July 9 and 10, instead of in Muskoka on June 26 and 27, as previously arranged. Owing to the elections for the Ontario Legislature having been fixed for June 22, many of the officers of the association and speakers at the meeting, and many Ontario newspaper men would find it impossible to attend if the meeting were held on the date originally set. Arrangements are in progress to follow the convention with an excursion to Muskoka Lakes immediately after the convention, as guests of the Royal Muskoka Hotel.

Presbyterian Church Union Committee Still Debating Issue

IS OPPOSED TO COERCION

WOODSTOCK, June 5.—The Presbyterian General Assembly got down to work yesterday after the welcome of local clergymen had been extended to the visitors.

The committee on church union continued its sitting yesterday, and there were rumors of dissension among the unionist majority, some of whom were disinclined to coerce the minority. A great number of resolutions and amendments were submitted. One moderate unionist remarked in conversation, that "a big mistake had been made four years ago when three or four extreme antiunion men were put on the committee, and they had had nothing but trouble ever since." The committee was in conclave all day, and will meet again to-day, when the question of union will be discussed by the assembly.

Just as the moderator was about to announce the closing hymn of the evening session, a commissioner stepped on the platform and announced that those interested in the continuation of the Presbyterian Church would meet in the Carnegie Library to-day, for the purpose of organizing against church union.

The question of reducing the number of representatives to the annual assembly meetings came up yesterday afternoon. A motion by Rev. Dr. [illegible] Kingsville to send the matter to the presbyteries, and suggesting that the number of representatives be reduced to one in eight, was carried.

The committee on church praise reported that the royalty on the hymnal had totaled $2,661.46, which had been apportioned between the aged and infirm ministers' and widows' and orphans' fund.

Rev. Dr. Grant presented the report on heads intended, for which he said that the appointment of immigration chaplains at the large distributing centres had proved very satisfactory.

Mission work is being carried on amongst the French in twenty different centres in the Synod of Montreal and Ottawa, and there are three bilingual missions. At Chapleau, in New Ontario, there is a French mission, the one in Weyburn Presbytery and one at Coleman, in the Kootenay district.

Sentenced To Twelve Years.

HAVANA, June 5.—Gen. Ernesto Asbert, ex-Governor of Havana province, and Eugenio Arias, a former member of the House of Representatives, were yesterday sentenced by the Supreme Court to twelve years' imprisonment for the killing [illegible], 1913, of Gen. Armando Riva, chief of the National Police.

KINGSTON, June 5.—When Wm. Matthewson, aged 78, of Portsmouth, saw his brother James, aged 80, lying dead, the shock was so great that he too dropped dead with heart failure. James Matthewson was for forty years a guard at the penitentiary. For many years the two men lived together. A few years ago William Matthewson was professor of music in Toronto.

Mr. Rowell Begins Campaign With Big Meeting In Toronto

Massey Hall is Filled With Liberals and Temperance Workers to Hear the First Speech of the Fight.

THE BAR MUST GO

TORONTO, June 5.—Massey Hall was filled to-night on the occasion of the inauguration of the election tour of Mr. N. W. Rowell, Liberal leader of Ontario. The audience was made up of Liberals, temperance workers and a large number of supporters of women's suffrage.

Mr. Rowell opened his remarks by declaring that never in recent years had there been such a spirit of unrest and dissatisfaction with conditions as in the Province of Ontario to-day.

"Why has the Government elected to go before the people before their term is up? Because they recognize that their prestige is steadily waning, and their party is rent with internal dissension, and while Sir James Whitney retains his health they would rather face the country to-day than later on. In view of the Premier's recent illness, no reasonable man who knows expects him to be the dominant figure he has been in the past. You have to choose between Sir

THE LIBERAL LEADER.

James Whitney, and we know not what, for who can tell what may come if the party goes back into power again without Sir James at its head.

With regard to the issues of the day, Mr. Rowell said that the Liberals had forced both good roads and Hydro-electric radials upon the Government.

"The real problems facing you are ones of social and moral reform.

"We are face to face with an anomalous situation. Ontario is as well adapted to mixed farming as any province in the country. Yet the rural population is declining and food products steadily diminishing. This is a problem which touches the foundation of national life.

"If I am put into power I promise you that the head of the Department of Agriculture shall be the ablest man that the province can produce, whether he be in the Legislature or not, and agriculture will no longer suffer. Not only are the agricultural districts decreasing in population but the cities are growing faster than we can provide houses for them, resulting in slums, tenements and a general overcrowding in our municipal communities. Our taxation of peasantry on its [illegible] value with the tax rate to such an extent [illegible] the taxes on a workingman's home costing, say, $3,400, will be cut almost in two, thereby giving the working man an opportunity to own and support his own home.

In speaking of his "abolish the bar" policy Mr. Rowell said: "One way to abolish the treating system is by wiping out the place where the treating is done. In abolishing the bar we are not, as some of the Conservatives have maintained, simply putting a liquor shop in its place. Shop licenses will not be issued in place of bar licenses abolished. Liquor shops can be wiped out by local option on a majority vote.

"Two and a half years ago I promised to bring the 'abolish the bar' issue before the country. I have done so. The issue is before you now. I have discharged my responsibility thus far. It now rests with your conscience. I have gathered about me a party that if you give me a Government will absolutely 'abolish the bar'.

"My platform will be carried out at the first session. We have not the money of the liquor interests behind us, but we have the women. I put myself in the judgment of the people of this province irrespective of party. I admit differences of opinion in my own party. I was true to you, will you be true to me? If you will work as hard as I, my word is given that the 29th of June will sound the death knell of every licensed bar in Ontario."

Other speakers were Wm. Proudfoot, M.P.P., Ald. F. S. Spence, Ex-Mayor Oliver, Rev. John McNeill, Rev. Dr Macdonald, ex-Ald. Hales and J. M. Ferguson and Arthur Hawkes.

G. T. P. Will Operate H. T. R. Premier Borden Believes

AID BILL IS BROUGHT IN

OTTAWA, June 5.—Legislation to assist the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway in the completion of the mountain section was initiated in the House yesterday.

Mr. Borden, in presenting his resolution authorizing the Government to guarantee an additional issue of bonds by the Grand Trunk Pacific to the amount of $10,000,000, said the company claimed that the Government had obligated itself to bear three-fourths of the cost of the mountain section, whatever that might be, and that the agreement of 1903 was the result of a mutual mistake. The company contended that if the Government did not guarantee more bonds it would have to implement its original contract by paying in cash the difference between three-fourths of the cost of the mountain section and the amount actually realized upon the guaranteed bonds already disposed of. The Government had proposed submitting the question to the courts, but that would involve a delay of 18 months, during which time the road would remain uncompleted. It had therefore been decided to guarantee another issue of bonds for an amount sufficient to complete the road, including interest thereon, for three years. The Government would not have a first mortgage security to indemnify it, because since the execution of the first mortgage the Grand Trunk Pacific had given a mortgage to the Grand Trunk System and also another mortgage to the Government to secure money advanced by way of loan. However, the present accommodation was by way of compromise, and the Government gained some slight concessions.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said there was no legal liability on the part of the Government to guarantee any more bonds to the Grand Trunk Pacific, but he quite agreed with the Prime Minister that the road must be completed, and that it should be completed without delay. He asked that the Government give details of the purposes to which the proceeds of the guarantee would be turned, and also of the cost of the section when completed.

Hon. William Pugsley said this was the time to have a complete understanding with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co. The company should know once and for all whether that company intended to take over and operate the line between Winnipeg and Moncton. The road between Superior Junction and Cochrane had been completed for over a year, but there was no attempt to operate it. In his opinion the company could avoid taking over the Winnipeg-Moncton line because the standard of the road had been degraded.

Mr. Borden said in reply that the Government had no power to compel the Grand Trunk to operate a single mile of the Government section of the National Transcontinental until the entire line between Winnipeg and Moncton was completed. He was quite sure, however, that the Grand Trunk Pacific intended to take over and operate the line when it was completed this coming autumn.

The resolution was then adopted and a bill founded upon it introduced and read for first time.

The House then went into committee of the whole upon Mr. Borden's bill authorizing the Minister of Railways to perform the duties of the present National Transcontinental Railway Commission.

Hon. George P. Graham suggested that the measure should be entitled "A bill to get rid of Major Leonard."

Mr. Borden said that he had no complaint against Major Leonard, who desired to be relieved from duty, as the road was now virtually completed.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said the road was far from being completed. It would not be ready for operation next fall or the fall after next for that matter.

The Farmers' Bank aid bill to indemnify the depositors of the defunct bank, was carried early yesterday morning in the House, the Government having a majority of 17. The vote stood: For 86, against 18.

The vote was not entirely along party lines. Duncan Ross of West Middlesex, J. Angus McMillan of Glengarry and E. W. Nesbitt of North Oxford voted with the Government on the Opposition side, while Paul Lamarche of Nicolet voted against the measure from the side of the Government.

The return of the legal bill of N. W. Rowell, K.C., brought down in the House in answer to a motion by Major Sam Sharpe, was held to be too high, and was reduced from $8,466 to $7,250. Mr. Rowell, it appears, was selected as associate counsel with R. C. Smith, K.C., of Montreal on the recommendation of Mr. Smith and Mr. Justice Mackenzie to represent the Oka Indians in pending litigation.

To Meet In Toronto.

TORONTO, June 5.—The Dominions Royal Commission will meet in Toronto for four days during the first week of September. FUNERALS AT QUEBEC.

Great Crowds Attend Obsequies of Sailor Victims of Wreck.

QUEBEC, June 5. — Marching to the music of military bands, passing along the entire route between double rows of sorrowing spectators, hundreds of mourners, representing every class of society, from the vice-regal party to the humblest of toilers, followed, at ten o'clock yesterday, the remains of twelve of the Empress crew to church and cemetery.

Flags flew at half-mast on all public buildings, and during the morning Wednesday the Irish Catholic Church, where five of the bodies lay, and the Anglican Cathedral, where they were seven, were thronged with a pitying flow of people.

His Royal Highness did not personally attend the funeral but he was officially represented by Captain Buller, his A. D. C. Sir Francois Langelier, Lieutenant-Governor, attended the ceremony with Captain Victor Pelletier, A. D. C. The Federal Government was represented by Hon. C. J. Doherty, while the Provincial Government was represented by the Premier, Sir Lomer Gouin, and four members of the Cabinet.

Strong men, hardened by the many fatalities they viewed in their seafaring life, could not keep back their tears, and the spectacle was too much for the physical strength of many, among whom, one of the surviving stewards of the Empress, who fainted and was taken outside unconscious.

Captain Kendall, who commanded the Empress when she went down, was present at the services, attending the ceremony at St. Patrick's Catholic Church.

All the shops along the streets where the funeral passed closed their doors and pulled down all shades in the windows out of respect for the memory of the dead.

Dugal Inquiry Begun.

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 5. — The royal commission appointed by the Provincial Legislature to inquire into the Dugal charges against Premier Flemming met yesterday morning for organization purposes.

The commission discussed yesterday what witnesses are to be called.

Dear Sir,—

Since I commenced to use glasses, about three years ago, I never had a pair that gave me such comfort as the ones you fitted. They are so soft and easy on my eyes. I can read for an hour at a time without straining my eyes, which I never could do with any of the others that cost me twice as much. I will certainly recommend my friends to you. When in Peterborough again I will have you put new lenses in my other glasses.

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By LOUIS TRACY

She threw herself on her knees, and raised her swimming eyes in humblest pleading.

"Father, think what you are doing!" she sobbed, clutching at his hands in a heartbroken way. "I am your own little daughter, the girl you used to be so proud of, the girl who once loved you dearly, and who is ready to forget the past and love you again. You would not condemn me to the degraded life of a woman who loathes and has been unfaithful to her husband, and yet permits him to regard her as his wife? I may be the meanest of God's creatures in your sight, but you are asking me to act as no decent-minded woman can act, and bye. Ah, no! Do not speak yet! Listen, I implore you! God give me words to touch your heart! Have you blotted from your mind all recollection of our long years together on the ranch? Does it count for nothing that I rejoiced with you when times were good, and sorrowed with you when misfortunes came? Have you forgotten my mother? Ah, dear Heaven, my mother! You loved her, did you not? You have said you loved me, not alone for my own sake, but because I reminded you of her. She, at least, was good and pure, and perhaps her spirit is with us now, grieving for my sin, it may be, but surely not content with the dreadful lot you would impose on one who is your child and hers. Oh, father dear, do not turn away from me! Is there nothing I can promise that will soften your heart? I will leave Derry. Yes, I swear it! To save him, and you, I'll go away and never see him again, writing him some cruel lie in order to assuage his misery; but you shall not, you must not, make my return to Hugh Marten the price of my obedience to your will!"

Willard wrenched himself free, and took a sheet of notepaper, an envelope, and a pencil from a pocket. He placed them on the rough table, and stood in the doorway, watching the sunlit lake. His expression was dour, implacable, malignant in its ferocious joy: for he held Power in the hollow of his hand, and would relinquish naught of his vengeful scheme.

"I'm glad to see you are convinced that I mean what I have said," he announced, speaking in a cold, balanced way that Nancy knew of old, and recognised now as sounding the knell of her hopes. "Unless I am mistaken, the canoe is putting off from the hotel. It will be here in twenty minutes. You have just five minutes to make up your mind, and to write a farewell message to Power. I don't care what you say to him, so long as the break is final. You are going with me to Newport, and straight from there to London, where Marten will join us in response to a cablegram from me, telling him that you are ill. You had better stop crying. Nothing that you can say or do, short of loading that gun again and blowing a hole in me, will change either my purpose or my terms. I'll keep my word with regard to Power if you keep yours where Marten is concerned. He must never know. He must never see any change in you. The moment he casts you off because of Power, and I am still alive, you sign Power's death-warrant."

Nancy rose. She was deathly white, and the tears still coursed silently down her cheeks; but despair had benumbed her emotions, and she spoke calmly.

"You are sentencing me to death," she said.

"Am I? Then Power dies, too," he cried.

"No. That is not in the bond. You stipulate that I shall return to Marten as his wife, and that I am not to take my own life. But if my heart breaks, and I die, you will have glutted your bitter malice already, and Derry, too, must not provide you with a victim."

"People don't die of broken hearts."

"Every woman who has loved will think differently. But you have some notion of what is meant by honour, I suppose? I demand your promise that if I accompany you now, and go back to Marten, and never attempt to meet Derry again — though that would be quite impossible, either for him or for me — you withdraw your threat, and leave him in peace during the remainder of your life."

"I'm not here to receive terms, but to state them."

"Then he and I will fall together beneath your bullets. Before you shoot him, you will have to shoot me."

"Very well, then. I agree. I don't want to kill my own daughter."

"You have done that already. You have slain her soul, and her poor body is of slight importance. Ah, May Heaven forgive me if I am not choosing aright! Derry my own dear love, you must never know that I am doing this for your sake, or it will not be the wretch whom once I called father who becomes judge and jury and executioner in my behalf!"

Willard, still turned toward the lake, heard her drop on her knees again beside the table. She wrote a few words, very few; for her dazed brain was incapable now of framing other than the simplest sentences. Then she sealed the envelope, and kissed it, and went out. Brushing the tears from her eyes, she gave one long look across the shimmering water, and saw a black dot which she knew was the canoe heading straight for the cabin.

"Ah, dear God!" she sighed, pressing her clenched hands to her breast. The storm passed as quickly as it had arisen. She stooped, patted the dog, and bade him remain there on guard. Then, without ever a glance at Willard, she said:

"I have made my choice. I am ready!"

CHAPTER XI
POWER'S HOMECOMING.

It chanced that Peter Granite occupied the fore part of the canoe; consequently, great as was the distance, he saw Willard and Nancy leaving the hut and disappearing among the trees. He tossed a question over his shoulder.

"You hain't been expectin' anyone, hev you?" he demanded.

"How do you mean?"

"I've a sort o' notion Mrs. Power has just quit, with a man."

"Are you sure?"

"Yep."

"Someone must have happened on the cabin. Perhaps she is showing him the road to the divide. Was the dog with her?"

"I hain't seen Guess; but a mile an' a half across this yer shinin' water is a long ways ter spot a dawg."

"Oh, well, there's nothing to worry about. We don't quite own the earth; though one might come to think along that line after living here a spell."

Nothing more was said; but both men plied their paddles with strong, sweeping strokes that drove the canoe onward at a rare pace. When she grounded, Power sprang ashore, and did not wait, as was his wont, to help with the packages. Already he felt anxious, because Nancy had not appeared in or about the hut, and the dog was now plainly visible, lying in front of the open door.

"Nancy!" he shouted.

There was no answer; but Guess rose, yawned, and stretched his limbs, his vigil being ended. Power shouted again, more loudly, and Granite, having drawn the canoe high and dry, joined him, leaving the unloading of the provisions until a less troubled moment.

"It ain't jest like Mrs. Power not ter be within hail," said the guide. "Hurry up to the shack, Mr. Power, an' put Guess on her trail if she ain't havin' a snooze in the back room."

"She wouldn't be asleep at this hour. And you saw her, you said?"

"I might ha been mistook. My eyes ain't so good as they was."

Power broke into a run, and Granite followed slowly those keen eyes of his, which ill-deserved the charge he had levied against them, searching the trees and the broken ground behind the hut for some sign of the two people whom he had undoubtedly observed.

With one last cry of "Nancy!" Power hurried past the dog, who was greeting him with tail-wagging and a rumbling growl which meant, "I'm glad you've come back, but why didn't you come sooner?" He peered through the doorway into the room beyond, and his glance fell on the note, resting on the table beside the gun.

"Oh, it's all right," he announced, in a tone of vast relief. "Someone has called her away, and here is the explanation."

Meanwhile, the dog was obviously inviting his master to a scouting expedition among the trees and brushwood to the left of the cabin's front, and Granite was so puzzled by the animal's behaviour that he paid no heed to Power during the next few seconds; moreover, the fact that Nancy had left a written message showed that, although something unusual might have occurred, it was not necessarily alarming. Then he heard a queer sort of sob, or groan, and, glancing at Power, saw that in his face which brought a dismayed question to his own lips.

"God A'mighty, Mr. Power, what's got ye?" he cried.

Power made no reply. He seemed as though stricken with a palsy. He absolutely reeled, and would have tumbled headlong had he not, by chance, staggered back against the jamb of the door. Granite caught him by the arm lest he should fall, and Nancy's letter dropped from his nerveless fingers, and fluttered to the ground.

"Don't give way like that," urged the guide. "She ain't dead, anyhow. Has she left you bad news?"

Power looked at the man as though he did not recognize him. A baneful light gleamed in his eyes. Had Willard been present then, it was not he who would have been the slayer, unless he contrived to be extraordinarily quick with his weapons.

"She has gone," he said, in the monotone of tragedy; for there are moments in life when the voice loses its flexible notes, and mere speech becomes a mechanical effort.

"Gone?" echoed Granite. "Wall, I allow she'll come back?"

"No, she has left me forever. She says so."

"What, in that theer bit o' writin'?"

"Yes."

"Mr. Power, air you joshin' me, or what?"

Power drew a deep breath. The dizziness which had benumbed his faculties was passing; and fortunately so; for his sympathetic companion, despairing of obtaining any lucid statement from this dazed man, was stooping to pick up the letter.

CORD BEDS OF OLD

Traps In Whose Bulbous Depths Sleep Was Once Wooed.

PUTTING ONE UP WAS AGONY.

The Job Required the Services of Two or Three Husky Men and Was an Athletic Feat Beside Which a Wrestling Match Was Child's Play.

"I came across a bed wrench at a second hand curiosity shop uptown the other day," said an old timer, "and it took me back to the boyhood days at one jump.

"Don't know what a bed wrench is? Of course you don't. Nobody born of this generation does. That's because they never had to put up a cord bedstead—had the privilege of sleeping in the bed it held.

"The cord bedstead was a joy. Next to putting up the stovepipe or putting down the carpet with the base of a flatiron for a hammer to pound the leather headed tacks in with, the assembling of the cord bedstead of our daddies was the job that called for the most peremptory giving of all the Christian virtues a vacation until the job was done.

"The cord bedstead was the favorite bedstead of commerce in those days. Briefly described, there were four posts of any height or girth to suit the person or his pocket. Anywhere from three to four feet from the floor a hole was bored in two sides of each post facing each other when the footboard and headboard posts were stood up to be connected. The holes were bored with a thread to take the screw out on the ends of the connecting pieces at the sides and ends of the bedstead.

"These connecting pieces were round, and on what was to be the top of them when the bedstead was set up was a row of pegs shaped like so many mushrooms. A hole about an inch in diameter ran through each of the four connecting pieces. When the bedstead was assembled by the fitting of the connecting pieces into the holes in the posts and screwed up tight and in place by means of a stout stick thrust through the holes in the round pieces the bed was ready to be corded up, and then the wrench came into play.

"The bed wrench was something like a stout wooden hand vise. The cord, a rope like a clothesline, but of better quality, was run around the mushroom like pegs, which were a few inches apart, and lengthwise and crosswise from connecting piece to connecting piece, like a big meshed net.

"But the cord couldn't be drawn taut enough with the hands, and so daddy or big brother Bill, or perhaps the hired man, grabbed the wrench, tangled it up somewhere in a part of the cord where the tautening up process was to begin and by persistent leverage around and about the bedstead at last wrenched the cord to a condition of satisfactory tautness, and the tumult and the shouting died.

"For don't go away with the idea that the work of setting up that cord bedstead was accomplished with the ease and in the brief time that it takes to tell about it. It generally required two or three capable persons to tackle the job with any hope of succeeding with it, for in the way of refractory disposition and demoniacal perversity the cord bedstead of the daddies had the breachy cow in the garden skinned a mile. I have known the good wife to take the children and go down in the cellar while the old man and his aids were dallying with the cord bedstead in an effort to set it up and giving it their opinion of it as it wabbled and slid and careened and skidded at tense and critical stages of the getting of it together.

"Then when it was all up good and solid and the smell of sulphur got out of the room mother used to come in and put the straw tick on the web of bed cord—the tick with the big slit in it where we filled it with fresh rye straw until it looked like a balloon all ready to go up. Then she tumbled on to the tick the feather bed, two or three feet high, with its swelling puff of live geese feathers and almost burying you out of sight when you stowed yourself away on it after surmounting the bed with a stepladder. Then with the sheets and the blanket and the quilt and the comforter and the big, bulbous pillows the bed was ready to sleep in.

"That's what a bed wrench is, and that's the cord bedstead it wrenched. And when I hear some reminiscent old body harking back to the days of the bed wrench and the cord bedstead and declare that when it comes to going to bed at night sure of a sleep in ease and comfort and of getting up next morning never so refreshed give him every time, b'gosh, the old cord bedstead with nothing between the ropes and him but the straw tick and the feather bed instead of the new fangled springs and hair mattresses, I greet him with joy, grasp his hand warmly and gently but firmly tell him he's a liar."—New York Sun.

Terribly Afflicted With Lame Back.

Could Not Sweep The Floor.

When the back aches and pains it is almost impossible for women to do their housework, for every move and every turn means an ache or a pain.

Women are beginning to understand that weak, lame, and aching backs from which they suffer so much are due to wrong action of the kidneys, and should be attended to at once so as to avoid years of suffering from kidney trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong with the back Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken.

They go right to the seat of the trouble.

Mrs. Wilfrid Jolicoeur, Nouvelle, Que., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About three years ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I could not sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I only used three boxes, and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble."

Price, 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

A DEAD FLY

May be as Dangerous as a Live One!

It is certainly more repulsive, and, if left, will breed far more diseases than ever it did when alive.

It is not sufficient to hit the fly. You must destroy the germs as well. These, if allowed to multiply, will spread disease and death. Give up using the fly swatter and the unsanitary sticky fly paper.

Buy WILSON'S FLY PADS—the only really effective method of exterminating the death-dealing insects. They kill all the flies in the house in a few hours. No dead flies left lying about.

A MATTER OF INITIALS.

Quick Wit Relieves the Tension of an Embarrassing Situation.

An engineer who was repairing a railway line in South Africa found a cosy farmhouse, which he proceeded to occupy.

Promptly came a telegram which read:

G. T. M. wants house.

The engineer wondered who "G. T. M." might be. On inquiry he found it referred to general traffic manager.

"All right," he murmured; "if he can use hieroglyphics so can I."

So he wired back:

G. T. M. can G. T. H.

Two days later there came a very indignant and self impatient gentleman. It was the general traffic manager. In coldly polite tones he asked the engineer what he meant by sending such an insolent message to his superior.

The engineer said innocently:

"Why, it wasn't insolent."

"Wasn't insolent, eh?" snorted the great man. "What do you mean, then, by saying I can G. T. H.?"

"Simply an abbreviation," explained the engineer sweetly. "I wired that the G. T. M., the general traffic manager, can G. T. H.—get the house."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Superior Officer.

A few days ago the Grays had a social affair—not a family by the name of Gray, but the Cleveland Grays, the crack regiment that uses the armory when concerts are not going on.

Captain Blank, a very swell little guy, was strutting through the crowd when his tailor confronted him. His tailor is a private in the company, but the aristocratic Captain Blank affected not to notice him. The tailor held out his hand.

Captain Blank stared.

"I don't know you, sir!" he said.

"Don't know me? Why, I made yer clothes!"

"I, beg your pardon," said Captain Blank, unbending hastily. "I'm glad to meet you, Major Close!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Rather Enjoyed It.

"Humph!" said the man as he limped to the sidewalk and brushed the mud off his hat. "How that takes me back to my boyhood days!"

"Were you hit by an automobile?" asked the policeman.

"No; bicycle. It's the first time I have been hit by a bicycle in twenty years."—Washington Star.

Looking For His Reward.

Infant (in an apparent burst of repentance)—Mother, I took three sweets out of the box.

Mother—It was very wrong of you, darling, but as you have confessed it I will forgive you.

Infant—Well, then, mother, give me one back. I only took two.—Le Figaro.

Varying Fathoms.

Sailors do not always mean the same thing when they talk of fathoms. On board a British man-of-war it means six feet, on board a merchantman five and a half feet, on board a fishing vessel five feet.—London Express.

SERVANTS OF OTHER DAYS.

A Uniform Scheme That Failed and Ugliness as an Asset.

In 1908 the formation was attempted in London of a league of housewives pledged to engage only servants who would undertake to wear a uniform. In the preliminary manifesto it was also proposed to prohibit servants from wearing "superfluities, such as flowers, feathers, brooches, buckles or clasps, earrings, lockets, neck ribbons and velvets, kid gloves, tunics, jackets, Garibaldis, trimmings on dresses, crinolines or steel of any kind." On her Sunday out a servant was to assume "a neat alpaca dress, linen collars and cuffs, black apron, black shawl, straw bonnet bound round with ribbons, thread or cotton gloves, small cotton umbrella to keep off the sun and rain." The costume was to be diversified in cold weather by a linsey dress and a shepherd's plaid shawl. This extraordinary scheme found very few supporters and had to be abandoned.

Some bygone housewives appear to have regarded ugliness as a quality to be desired in their servants. When Eliza Coke, daughter of Coke of Norfolk, was about to marry she wrote to her prospective mother-in-law: "Pray have the goodness to decide as you think best about the pretty housemaid. I wish she were less pretty and less fond of dress, but if her conduct and principles are good neither are really objectionable faults. I think our establishment will be a pattern of morality, particularly if Mr. Stanhope engages the squinting butler and the terrible housemaid he mentioned to me."—Chicago News.

VERY ANCIENT ART.

Rude Paintings That Date Back to Prehistoric Times.

Remains of prehistoric man which are occasionally discovered seem to prove that there was a knowledge of art even in the earliest times. A Spanish nobleman, Marcellino de Santeold, was industrially digging in a cave on his estate in search of prehistoric stone implements and bones, while his little daughter, who accompanied him, occupied herself in play.

She happened to look up at the vaulted ceiling overhead, and began to shout, "Toros! Toros!" in such excitement that her father paused to investigate. Immediately he forgot his search for stone implements. The little girl had discovered some very remarkable prehistoric paintings.

The paintings were of the bison, which the little girl mistook for bulls, or toros. The colors were red, black and gray. The technique of the drawings and the proportions of the figures were really good and the positions were very lifelike.

In the cavern of Font de Ganme, France, paintings of mammoths, bison and other animals have been found, and most of them show a considerable degree of skill. In the great caverns of Niaux, near Tarascon, France, half a mile from the entrance, the smooth polished walls are covered with outline drawings of animals, drawn in oxide manganese mingled with grease, which gives permanent lithographic effect on the smooth limestone.

"Rats" and Royalty.

In "Random Recollections," by R. Caton Woodville, is a story in which King George (when Duke of York) figures. The duke was examining a new Mauser rifle of the latest pattern—the type then possessed by Kruger—which had been presented to Mr. Woodville:

"I showed him the rifle and its mechanism and expressed an opinion that it was superior to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield rifles. I had a very talkative parrot which did not always use polite language. The duke examined the two rifles carefully and at last expressed an opinion that he thought our rifle better, or, at any rate, as good, when a voice came from behind his back with the rude remark, 'Rats!' It was my parrot. The duke wheeled round. 'Who said that?' he asked, and the bird again repeated, 'Rats, rats!'"

A Frontier of Peace.

With its row of crumbling forts and musty guns the frontier between Canada and the United States stands as an object lesson to all nations. While it is the longest, it is the safest and surest frontier in the world. Three thousand miles and more of it lie between Passamaquoddy bay and Puget sound, and in all that distance not a shotted gun points menacingly from either country toward the other. A few small and comparatively ineffective fishery cruisers guard the water front, none of which would be of much use in time of war.—St. John's Telegraph.

ENGLAND.

Nearly 400 pheasant eggs which had been placed under sitting hens on the Gresham Hall estate, Norfolk, have been stolen.

A robin, which had built its nest in the lectern at St. John's Church, Palmer's Green, N., perched on the gas bracket during the evening service one Sunday.

The Isle of Wight county education authority has decided to apply to the board of education for their consent to supply pupils over the age of five with tooth brushes, and it was stated that 8,000 would be required.

During the last year three sets of triplets have arrived in the Blackburn district, the latest being presented to Mrs. Stones, wife of a labourer residing in Chapel Street. Application is being made for the King's bounty.

Mrs. Maxime Neiss, an American woman, was fined $25 at Dover for smuggling a small pet dog from the Calais steamer. It was stated that Mrs. Neiss had denied possessing a dog, but while she had gone to her husband to get the keys of her luggage the customs officer found one side of the bag torn and saw the dog inside.

It is recorded that a golfer who was playing over the St. Neots (Huntingdonshire) links the other day, hit his ball into a hedge, and, after searching for it for some time without success, observed a bird's nest. From curiosity more than any expectation of finding his ball there, he looked into the nest, and found not only his own ball, but three others as well.

IN A MODERN ARCADIA

ROTHENBERG IS THE NEWEST OLD TOWN IN EUROPE.

Ancient City Is as Quaint and Picturesque as Venice and as New and Smart as Berlin—There Are No Millionaires There Nor Any Paupers—Want Is Unknown and Misery Not Tolerated.

There are no millionaires, there are no poor in Rothenberg, Germany, for this is the modern Arcadia, where every man raises produce equal to 30 per cent. of his wages, where every man owns his own house, where want and poverty are unknown and no misery is tolerated.

Old Rothenberg is at once Europe's oldest and newest town. Other towns with heavy pests, narrow streets, picturesque gabled houses, gray fortress walls and damp dungeons compensate for their picturesque beauty by being socially backward; and when you ask them why the houses smell and the children are ragged, they say: "You can't expect everything." But Rothenberg is an exception. It is as old and as picturesque as Venice and as tidy and progressive as brand new Berlin. No town equals it for antique loveliness, and no town has such good municipal institutions, such excellent drainage, such fat balances in the savings banks.

Rothenberg has more than 8,000 inhabitants and lies some 50 miles southwest of famous Nuremberg. It is situated on a high plateau 300 feet above the river. The blue Tauber runs placidly beneath. There are 16th century fortress walls; mediaeval, mellow streets with miraculously soft colors; a wonderful double Rathaus, part in 13th century Gothic, part in 16th century Renaissance. The Rathaus alone is a sight well worth the trip to Rothenberg.

The ancient city owes its rejuvenescence to the efforts of a particularly active and enterprising administration which brought about the most revolutionary changes. First it abolished the vicious practice of families living in rented houses. Rented houses, it decided, are economically as vicious as would be rented clothes or even rented food. Also rented houses threatened to spoil Rothenberg's domestic architecture, the most picturesque and beautiful in any European town outside Venice. Rothenberg municipality, therefore, started on a policy of creating house owners. By special regulations it made it easy for men to buy the houses they lived in. It lent money at low interest to the buyers. The town lost nothing.

The municipality thinks that one of the great causes of urban misery is the divorce of the working class population from the land. The man who is not part farmer, the man who cannot at a pinch produce his own food, that man is only half a man. Therefore, said Rothenberg, every man, town dweller though he be, must have his little farm. And it began to divide up the communal lands among its citizens and to buy other [illegible] citizens on easy terms. So now not only does the typical Rothenberger own his own house, but he owns somewhere on the fringe of the city a little allotment for farming. He can himself work in the modest baby carriage or toy factory while his wife and children have gone to the miniature farm a mile or so away. Thus the Rothenberg working man has his own production of fruit and vegetables and sometimes even his own animal food. His products, it is estimated, average in value 30 per cent. of his wages.

This policy sends up industrial wages. The Rothenberger is the most independent workman in Europe. What with his own house, his own savings, and his own allotment, he can pick and choose his work. He refuses to be sweated. Strikes are unknown. Also crime is rare. There is about 60 per cent. less than in neighboring towns. There is no need to steal.

Not content with providing everything to make its inhabitants comfortable and happy, Rothenberg municipality worries itself lest any of its sons should become dissatisfied and yearn to try his luck elsewhere. It keeps a jealous watch over its citizens, and when one plans to leave, it does all it can do to persuade him to change his mind. The portly good-natured burgomaster calls around for a friendly heart-to-heart talk. What are his grievances, what his reasons for believing that any other town in the world will offer him the advantages of beautiful Rothenberg? If this line of talk does not dissuade him the municipality does not hesitate to shower down upon him increased blessings.

If he is a manufacturer it offers him all sorts of conveniences and bounties. If he is a plain working man it offers him a fresh and more productive farm on the outskirts of the town or promises to secure him a better job in one of the factories. The municipal councillors follow the burgomaster in calling upon him and appeal to him first as a business man and finally, if that fails, to his love of Rothenberg and its honor. Removal is called desertion and the dissatisfied citizen is told that the whole world will regard his action as a slur upon the fair name of the city.

As a matter of fact few Rothenbergers ever leave the old town. Of those that do leave, the majority return repentant in due course, after learning that the outside world, compared with their motherly home town, is hard, cruel and unsympathetic. Of the hundred families that left in the past 10 years almost 70 returned.

Serious For France.

The French birth rate statistics are worse than ever. According to the calculations established by authority, three children in a family would suffice to maintain the status quo of the population. Unhappily the last report revealed for the first time that the majority of French families have only one child. Births diminished in number last year and in some districts did not succeed in filling the gaps caused by death.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.

Scientists Will Flock to Russia to Study the Phenomenon.

The total eclipse of the sun which is to take place on the 21st day of August of this year promises to be of special importance for science and mainly for the reason that the zone affected by this phenomenon will spread over the greater part of Europe and Asia and consequently will afford our scientists an opportunity of studying the eclipse in districts that are comparatively easy to reach and where scientific investigations can be pursued with every possible convenience.

Coming from the north Atlantic ocean, the zone of totality will reach the Norwegian coast at about 1 o'clock in the day. It will then pass to Sweden by way of the town of Hernodsand, and then on to Russia, directly affecting Kiev and Feodisia, from where it reaches Trebizond at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and then finally terminates in Persia.

Nearly all civilized countries are preparing expeditions for the study of this eclipse, and a number of private expeditions are also being fitted out. In view of the climatic conditions prevailing, most of them have chosen south Russia for their goal. In Russia extensive scientific preparations have been made for the study of this phenomenon.

For example, all the times, angles of position, etc., for all the Russian towns affected by the eclipse have already been calculated, and all these data will be placed at the disposal of the different scientific expeditions going to Russia.—Exchange.

Lapping Up the Land.

Aldeburgh, which annually holds its feast of sprats, has run considerable risk in recent years of providing a feast for the sprats themselves. Fierce gales in the eighties and nineties did very great damage and almost completed the ruin begun by the sea that swallowed up ancient Dunwich. At one time the land went a quarter of a mile farther out to sea, and an old map preserved in the venerable Moot hall shows that the church had at least ten times more land toward the sea than it has now. The market place and the cross are among the trifles which the sea has stolen, while in 1799 eleven houses disappeared. The arms of the borough were selected with some sense of humor, "A ship in the waves of the sea, all sayles bearinge."—London Chronicle.

Police In Old Glasgow.

In the eighteenth century the whole safety and order of Glasgow, Scotland, were intrusted to the unpaid and reluctant burghers. Every citizen who was between the years of eighteen and sixty and paid a yearly rent amounting to $15 had to take his turn at guarding the city. "On touch of drum," says the writer, "the gentleman was at his post at 10 at night, and strolled with weary head and yawning gait along the Trongate and High street and up the pitch dark lanes of winter nights till 4 in the morning. After that hour the city was without a police."

Man and the Office.

"The office ought to seek the man," said the patriot.

"Perhaps," replied Senator Sorghum, "but when an office has to seek the man the salary is generally so small that it makes the office look like a downright mendicant."—Washington Star.

Swiss Rainbow After Sunset.

A French astronomer recently had the unusual experience of beholding a rainbow in the Swiss Alps after sunset. It spanned a valley between two mountains to the eastward, complete and brilliant, twenty-five minutes after the astronomical sunset, and portions of it were visible for a half hour.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Feeding the Baby.

Dr. Abraham Jacobi, the noted New York physician, speaking about feeding babies, said:

"Breast fed children show a heavy preponderance in the 'live' statistics column.

"Most women can nurse, but it is not known generally how many do not.

"Do not feed the baby every time it cries. Its feet may be cold, or it may see something that frightens it.

"A baby needs feeding right after its birth. It must have lots of water at once. When it loses a pound or two it needs water. Milk is not a drink, but a food. Unless given plenty of water kidney stones are likely to develop.

"Boil water for babies and keep it in bottles. Have it as cool as you please.

"Give no raw milk. Boil it until the first bubbles appear; then take it off and keep it cool. If boiled too long it is ruined. Take off the skin of boiled milk. That contains the germs. Milk boiled too long leads to infantile scurvy.

"Too much undiluted milk causes fat. Barley and oatmeal may be used to dilute the milk. They make muscle and strength. At six months of age the baby needs iron, as that which it had at birth has been used up.

"Teething is not a disease. During that period cool the infant's mouth frequently with water."

SOME GYPSY SEED.

Queer Typical Wanderers of the Plant World.

In the seed family there are some wonderful varieties called "wanderers" or "gypsy seed." Like the restless people for whom they are named, they seldom grow near the parent, but wander away on the wings of the wind or borne by some cunningly contrived aids of their own, to far distant places.

A strange specimen of these roamers is the gigantic tumble weed, which grows on the great plains of the west. There it goes rolling over the level ground like some queer flattened ball, frightening the cattle, stirring up the dust and creating a sensation whenever seen. It is an annual plant, with short, delicate roots that are easily upset. Through the early summer it makes a pretty show with its spreading stems and green leaves, but as the seeds ripen the whole plant dries and the small roots wither. There comes a day when a sudden wind upsets the weak foundation and sends the tumble weed rolling upon the plain. Away it goes, while others join the procession, and soon the ball may be five or even six feet in diameter—enough to frighten anyone. The dried seeds in their pods make a queer crackling sound as these huge weed balls tumble onward. The special purpose of all this is to scatter the seeds.

There are many other gypsies in the plant world that travel by the wind route.

Other gypsy seeds travel by water. We hear of cocoa nuts, buoyed by their loose husks and protected by impenetrable shells, that float on the ocean for long distances, until they settle upon coral islands, and make of the desert sands a paradise of green groves. Drifting along on our streams and rivers we often see acorns, and hickory nuts, or the green globes of walnuts. These finally settle in shallow places or roll out on the bank and thus our nut groves and wonderful oaks are found near the unfailing water.

How to Strike Safety Matches.

It is a common thing with smokers for their safety match box to give out on the striking side before all the matches are used up. If they will keep in mind just one thing this can always be averted. The safety striking part is very quick on trigger and needs only a slight contact instead of a long scratch. Simply snap the end of the match quickly for about a quarter of an inch on the striking surface. In this way the outside may always be kept fresh and usable. The long scratch, of course, causes the match to ignite before contact ceases, and the surface is actually burnt up. Some safety matches will strike on a windowpane.

Got the Candy.

"Sis, gimme some o' that candy o' yours?"

"No, Bobbie, I won't. That's my best candy, and it was given to me, and you shan't have a bite of it."

"If you don't gimme some I'll tell on you."

"What do you mean? What have you got to tell on me, silly boy?"

"That Mr. Humber, that mother don't like, called on you last night, didn't he? An' you sat in the den, where there's only two chairs, didn't you? Well, I put a hunk of chewing gum on one of the chairs, and it's there yet this morning. Do I get a piece of candy? Thanks, sis!"

The Crab In the Oyster.

"The little crab found in the oyster," said a dealer, "is not, as supposed by two-thirds of the oyster eaters, the young of the blue crab, but is a distinct species. It is a messmate of and caterer to the wants of the oyster, being, therefore, a benefit instead of a detriment to the latter. In return for the oyster's kindness in protecting it against its enemies the little crab catches and crushes food which in its entire state could not be taken by the oyster. A singular thing in connection with them is that all found inside of the oyster are females. The male of the same variety has a hard shell."

Suspicious Actions.

"I wish,' said the head of the firm, "you'd keep an eye on the office boy."

"Very well, sir," replied the secretary. "Do you think he has been stealing postage stamps?"

"I have no idea what he has been doing, but he's up to mischief of some kind. For three mornings now he has had all my papers placed upon my desk just as they should be, with nothing to indicate that he has been reading the sporting pages. There's something very suspicious about it."

Brilliant Future.

"How long have you been dieting now, Mr. Stout?"

"A little more than six months."

"Do you notice any beneficial results?"

"I should say I did. They are wonderful. I have lost fully two pounds. Think of it! I'll only have to keep at it for about eighteen years to get down to 200."

Much Pain From Kidney Disease

Kidney derangements are often associated with disorders of the liver and bowels, and under these conditions ordinary kidney medicines usually fail to effect cure. It is because of their unique, combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so generally successful, even in the most complicated cases.

Mr. Emanuel Bernard, farmer, St. Paul's, Kent County, N.B., writes:—"About eighteen years ago my wife was bad with kidney disease, and suffered greatly from headaches, pains in bowels and stomach, and her heart was affected. For a year she was treated by her doctor, with no apparent benefit. She then used five boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with most satisfactory results. This gave us such a good opinion of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills that we always keep them in the house to be used for all derangements of the kidneys, liver and bowels." THE FOURTH DIMENSION.

It Is an Unprovable Theory, as It Is Based Upon the Unknown.

In answer to the following interesting question, "I understand that a crawling insect knows only two dimensions, length and breadth, all lines being horizontal to it and that it cannot conceive of a perpendicular; do I understand correctly that the fourth dimension is to us as the third is to the insect?" Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"We do not know the mind of the insect and cannot decide whether the third dimension is known to it. And the fourth dimension is not surely known to man.

"To be known geometrically a straight line must be drawn perpendicularly to three others mutually perpendicular—that is, a perpendicular must be constructed to all three sides of a cube. But this is impossible to the geometer.

"Mind as now phasing in man does not know what anything is. Then it does not know what space is, although space is supposed not to be a thing. Yet we say space includes all things. If we know nothing about space we do not know, therefore, whether it is curved or not. But the fourth dimension is a transcendental concept based on the curious theory that space has curvature, all of which is unknown and not proved."

MONEY VALUE OF SMOKE.

Over Half the Heat Energy of Coal Goes Up the Chimney.

To the engineer the smoke rolling and billowing out of the power house chimney is just like so many dollars taking wings from the company's strong box. The smoke escaping from a steam plant is composed of nearly 60 per cent of the heat energy of the coal which is being burned.

This energy is lost in the tiny particles of coal and carbon which escape up the chimney in the various gases which are freed before they are burned in the heated air and in various other ways. So, for every $10 spent for coal $6.50 is lost up the chimney.

Assuming that the energy of coal is 100 per cent, only 2 per cent of this is available in the form of light when you snap on the electric lamps. Nearly 90 per cent of the original coal energy is lost in transmitting this energy into heat, from heat to steam, from steam to electricity and in transmitting the electricity to your house.

The efficiency of the electric lamp is only 5 per cent—in other words, the lamp turns into light 5 per cent of the energy it receives and wastes 95 per cent of it in useless heat.—New York World.

Poetry and Poverty.

Writing of Poets' Corner, W. J. Loftie, in "Westminster Abbey," comments on the frequent and pathetic alliance between poetry and poverty. The first of the poets laid here, Chaucer—who dwelt in a house in the monastery garden known as "The Rose"—"fell into poverty in his old age." Spenser, according to Drummond, of Hawthornden, "died for lake of bread" in King's street, Westminster. Ben Jonson "died in great poverty" in a house on the north side of the abbey, near St. Margaret's. Dryden is another immortal to whom the same fate attaches; also Butler of "Hudibras" fame. Chaucer's house was demolished to make way for Henry VII.'s chapel. His gray marble tomb dates only from 1555. Though so late in erection, it is good to recall that the tomb was the gift of a brother poet in happier material circumstances, Nicholas Brigham.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

CLEMENTINE'S SILENT PARTNER

"Letter for you, Clem," shrilled Alvira as she poked the missive through the bars of the postoffice window. "Lawyer's letter."

As the alert little form disappegred from view the postmistress turned to her assistant.

"Another lawyer's collecting letter," she explained. "Clem Dilley's business is tottering to ruin."

"If village folks would only trade with Miss Dilley instead of going way over to Bayport she might make a living," vouchsafed Josie Ricks.

"Clem Dilley couldn't keep up a stock that would satisfy Long River folks," retorted Alvira.

There was to be a remarkable change in Clementine Dilley's affairs if she read the lawyer's letter aright. It read in part:

Dear Madam—I have a client who is anxious to invest some surplus funds in a small but lucrative business, and after investigation I am authorized to make you the following offer—viz: My client to put $6,000 into a partnership with you, you to manage the dry goods business and the partnership to be a silent one. My client believes there will be a good opening for a profitable business that has financial backing.

Three days after Clementine Dilley's return from New York there was a sensation in Long River. Waggon after waggon stopped before the door of her little shop and unloaded great boxes of dry goods.

From that day Clementine Dilley's business flourished mightily. Dozens of people who had always traded in Bayport, 15 miles distant, drove up to Clementine's door and made their purchases there.

Clementine was very happy on that day when she went down to New York and presented her books for Mr. Day's inspection. She was doing a splendid business, and the lawyer said he was sure that his client would have no cause to regret his investment.

Clementine often wondered about the mysterious partner whose money enabled her to prop up a crumbling business.

When he heard that Clementine Dilley was making money "hand over fist" Deacon Marberry dropped into Clementine's store and asked for collar buttons. It happened to be the noon hour, and Clementine was alone.

"Clem," he said hurriedly, "the Scripture says 'tain't good for man to be alone."

"I expect that's why dogs were created—and cats—and parrots," returned Clem tartly.

"Yes—yes—yes!" returned the deacon impatiently, and then warily he added, "I don't reckon you can guess who your silent partner is, Clementine, can you?"

Clementine was startled for a moment. There could be no mistaking the deacon's meaning.

But she stiffened her neck coldly. "I might guess, Deacon Marberry," she said.

"He ain't a thousand miles away from where I be standing this minute," went on the deacon craftily.

"I don't see him," said Clementine curtly. And she was glad when a customer came in and the deacon was compelled to take his departure.

It was after 6 o'clock that same evening, when Clementine was about to lock the door after the last clerk, when there came heavy footsteps on the porch and the great form of Captain Tommy Lisk loomed into view.

Clementine remembered, with some amusement, that Tommy Lisk used to call upon her once a week in the long, long ago. That was just before David Marsh had come to town. After that Clementine had not had eyes for any one save David.

"How's business?" pursued the captain genially.

"Very good," replied Clementine. "What can I do for you, captain?"

"I say, Clementine Dilley, I'll bet you can't guess who your silent partner is," he said jokingly.

"I might," said Clementine dryly.

"He ain't a thousand miles from where I'm standing," said the captain significantly, with a mysterious wink of his blue eye.

"The old sinners!" laughed Clementine as she put out the lights in the store. Her mind went back to her one brief romance of a few months, the hurried departure of David Marsh to assume his father's responsibilities in caring for a mother and several young children and then the gradual drifting of romance out of her life.

When she opened the door and found David Marsh waiting for her in her cosy sitting room Clementine Dilley discovered in a splendid rush of joy that romance was not dead after all. David Marsh was a little changed, a little grey and worn, but still the fine, upstanding lover of her youth.

It was 9 o'clock, and the little group around the stove in Pinney's grocery still lingered, loath to go out into the cold.

Deacon Hen Marberry was winding a red muffler around his stringy neck and barking sharp retorts at Captain Tommy Lisk.

"What if I did step in to buy some collar buttons of Clementine Dilley?" he cried angrily. "If you knew who Clem Dilley's silent partner was you'd say he had some right to buy there!"

Captain Lisk stared incredulously.

"If you knew who Clem Dilley's partner was you'd never speak up like that to me, Hen Marberry. I'll venture to say that Clem Dilley's going to marry her silent partner, and he's standing not a thousand miles from where I be this minute!"

"Right you are!" said a deep voice from the doorway, where a tall, dark man was observing the scene with visible amusement. "Miss Dilley's partner is standing right here, Captain Lisk, and when you say she's going to marry her partner you're right again. I ought to know, because I'm David Marsh, and I'm the man."

Thought She Would Go Mad WITH HEADACHE.

In all cases of headache the treatment should be directed to remove the cause, for with the cause removed the headache vanishes for all time. Headache powders just relieve (or the time being, but what is necessary for a permanent cure is something that will go right to the seat of the trouble. For this purpose it is impossible to find a better remedy for headaches of all descriptions than Burdock Blood Bitters, acting as it does on every organ of the body to strengthen, purify and regulate the whole system.

Mrs. Althea Bowman, Hamilton, Ont., writes:—"I have suffered terribly with my head for weeks at a time till I thought I would go mad. A friend advised me to give Burdock Blood Bitters a trial, so I got a bottle and found relief. I have used four bottles in all and I am glad to say that I have had no more headaches since. I would advise all sufferers to give it a fair trial."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Feeding the Neck.

For a thin, scrawny neck nothing is so good as a massage with cocoa butter or olive oil. This sounds disagreeable, but, as a matter of fact the treatment is very pleasant and the effect decidedly beneficial. The cocoa butter or oil should be rubbed in at night, the neck and shoulders first having been thoroughly cleaned with warm water and the pores of the skin having been opened by the application of cloths wrung out in very hot water.

Town Topics.

Chicago is growing healthier, wealthier and wiser. It must be going to bed earlier than formerly.—Chicago News.

"Before long," says a contemporary, "New York will do away with noise." Not while New York retains enough vitality to blow its own trumpet.—Charleston News and Courier.

Sweetheart.

What a beautiful word is that fine old-fashioned word, "sweetheart." It comes to us through a long and loving line of grandfathers and grandmothers, whom we see in fancy, the bride with a spreading nosegay in hand—not a bouquet, heaven forbid! —and bride and bridegroom walking churchward beaming with happiness. Sweetheart and nosegay—how fitting that they should go together, breathing the romance of an earlier and simpler time! To-day to what a degraded use has the word "sweetheart" been betrayed and diverted! How often it is dragged, drabbled and disgraced, through the muck of a police court, in connection with a burglar, a highwayman or a murderer.

From Girlhood to Womanhood

THE change may be critical and cause untold suffering in after-life. The modern young woman is often a "bundle of nerves"—"high strung"—fainting spells—emotional—frequently blue and dissatisfied with life. Such girls should be helped over this distressing stage in life—by a woman's tonic and nervine—that has proven successful for over 40 years.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a keen enemy to the physical weaknesses of woman. A medicine prepared by regular graduated physician of unusual experience in treating woman's diseases—carefully adapted to work in harmony with the most delicate feminine constitution.

It is now obtainable in liquid or sugar-coated tablet form at the drug store—or send 50 one cent stamps for a trial box, to Buffalo.

Every woman may write fully and confidentially to Dr. Pierce and his staff of physicians and Specialists at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and may be sure that her case will receive careful, conscientious, considerate consideration, and that experienced medical advice will be given to her free.

ANGRY WITH HUGHES.

Montreal Paper Scores Minister For Hurting Reporting Gibe.

MONTREAL, June 5.— La Presse last night comments editorially on the order of Hon. Sam Hughes which prevents the soldiers of the 65th Regiment (French) from carrying arms in the annual Corpus Christi procession, to be held a week from Sunday. Owing to the prohibition the regiment will not take part in the ceremony.

La Presse says: "So the 65th Regiment cannot do honor in the streets of Montreal to the King of Kings, because it is displeasing to the servant of the lodges. We do not make any comment on the order, which makes a liar of Gen. Amherst, who promised on Sept. 8, 1760, to the residents of Montreal, that 'the free exercise of the Roman Catholic and apostolic religion will subsist in its entirety (article 27) with the ordinary ceremonies,' (article 28.)

"It is possible that from to-day the enthusiasm of Catholics to serve in the army will show a falling off.

"It is possible also that Mr. Borden will regret the great confidence which he has placed in an Orange colleague."

TWO AIRMEN DROWN.

British Naval Aeroplane Falls Into Sea Near Portsmouth.

PORTSMOUTH, Eng., June 5.—Commander Rice and Lieut. Thomas S. Creswell were drowned yesterday when an aeroplane in which they were making a flight over Southampton water suddenly plunged into the sea. Creswell was acting as pilot and Rice was a passenger. The seaplane was engaged with several other aircraft in manoeuvres.

A torpedo-boat rushed to the spot and recovered Creswell's body, which was strapped to the seat, but the body of Commander Rice was not found.

The aeroplane was one of the largest in the naval service, and of the latest model.

GOT KING'S EAR.

But Suffragette Agent Was Gravely Ushered Out of Lever.

LONDON, June 5.—The Court proceedings at Buckingham Palace were about half way through last night, and at their most brilliant, when a young, good-looking woman, who, approaching their Majesties as they stood to receive the ladies presented, suddenly dropped upon her knees and called out: "For God's sake, your Majesty, do not use force." It was just before the dumbfounding as she appeared to be, should have made her obeisance, and as she drew near royalties. Possibly her nervousness caused her to mistime her act. Possibly also, she was not regularly invited for the presentation and hurried to make her demonstration before reaching the Court official, who would have received her name. Before she could add anything to the words quoted two or three officials were beside her. One of them took hold of her arm and spoke to her. She rose from her knees without another word, and walked quietly out between the two officials. The scene was over in a few seconds; indeed, it passed so quickly that it was unnoticed, save by a person close at hand. The King looked on with an entirely impassive face, giving, in fact, no indication that he even observed it, though it is certain that he must have both seen the woman on her knees and heard her words, "For God's sake, your Majesty." At the time of cabling the woman's name was unknown. She was dressed in a black gown, in accordance with the requirements of Court in mourning.

The tripartite agreement between the U. S., Great Britain and the Netherlands as a means of protecting their citizens in the Mexican oil fields from spoliation was officially announced yesterday at Washington.

Several foreigners declared in Toronto police court yesterday that Geo. Oconomoff had sold them buttons for $3.50 each, and had declared that these were a secret passport recognized by immigration officials. The accused was remanded on a charge of fraud.

DINING GOT A SHOCK.

Navvies at Dinner See Blood Dripping on Table.

FORT WILLIAM, June 5.—When drops of blood began slowly to ooze through the ceiling and drip upon the table where a meal was being eaten, a number of men in an Austrian boarding house, situated on Court street south, Port Arthur, rushed out into the street shortly after twelve o'clock.

Regaining their courage, they reentered the house and, on bursting open the door of a companion's room directly over the dining-room, John Ravio was found stretched out on the floor with his throat cut.

Lately he is said to have obtained word from Austria, that property of which he had been the owner, has been taken from him.

Puts In Word For Wife.

HALIFAX, N.S., June 5.— Pleading that his wife was a better director than he was a rector, Rev. Mr. Howe, Halifax, tried hard to persuade the Nova Scotia Anglican Synod to accept a report of the temperance committee which contained the statement that the enfranchisement of women would aid temperance and moral and reform movements.

A number of clergymen wanted the allusion deleted from the report, but Mr. Howe would not consent, and logic secured its retention in the report.

Had No Power Over The Limbs

Locomotor Ataxia, Heart Trouble and Nervous Spells Yielded to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It would be easy to tell you how Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures locomotor ataxia and derangements of heart and nerves, but it may be more satisfactory to you to read this letter.

Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D. 3, Sombra, Ont., writes:—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after continuing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervous spells and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbours of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

SOCIETY IS ALL AGOG.

Card Scandal in Royal Household Occasions Gossip.

LONDON, June 5.—Gossip is agog over the story of a card scandal that may have as sensational developments as the Gordon Cummings case at Tranbey Croft, when King Edward, then the Prince of Wales, appeared as a witness in court. The new affair has already had remarkable consequences, among them the abstention of a number of guests invited to attend the King's dinner at Buckingham Palace on Derby night, and the decision of the King to remain in town over Whitsuntide holiday in order to confer with various people concerned in the matter.

The person against whom charges of cheating at cards are made is a member of the royal household. He has latterly been winning considerable sums at poker at St. James' and Marlborough Club. His chief accusers are two well known men.

The courtier denies absolutely that there is the slightest truth in any of the charges made against him, and declares his readiness to fight the matter out in a court of law if his accusers will formulate their accusations in such a way that he can take action for libel against them. The King will not allow this to happen if he can possibly prevent it.

Senate Shall Not Come.

OTTAWA, June 5. — The Senate was seized of a grave question yesterday afternoon, when Senator Domville, rising in his place, asked "How is it that the mace has disappeared from the table of this honorable House. It has been here since time immemorial and has been of the greatest utility in keeping members awake."

"I shall make inquiries to ascertain when and why this time-honored institution has disappeared," gravely answered Senator Lougheed, Government leader.

"It is as important as the mace," added Senator Dandurand.

Wireless Failed Eight Minutes After Crash, Says Operator.

MONTREAL, June 5.—Only eight minutes was allowed Ronald Ferguson, the Empress' wireless operator, in which to call for assistance before the dynamos failed, according to his story yesterday.

Directly after the collision Ferguson says he ran to the wireless room from his cabin, to which he had retired for the night. He sent out a message to Father Point, telling the operator there to "stand by, as the Empress had struck something."

A moment later First Officer Steede ran into the room and told him to despatch the "S. O. S." call. The station at Father Point answered, all open and he gave the position of the Empress. The moment after he received the assurance that help was coming the wireless stopped.

Ferguson went down with the ship, but came up, and after swimming for three-quarters of an hour, was picked up.

Finds Kidnapped Boy.

CHATHAM, June 5.—Byron Fisher, a farmer, living three miles from Wallaceburg, looking over some old newspapers, read of $6,000 reward offered for the recovery of the young son of Warren McCarrick, a Philadelphia millionaire, kidnapped in March.

Ago on March 17, a neighbor, Myles Griffith, adopted a small boy brought by a woman who said she was from Detroit, and as the boy answers the description of the missing youngster, Fisher has put in a claim for the reward.

Gross ignorance produces a dogmatic spirit. He who knows nothing thinks that he can teach others what he has himself just been learning.

THE EXAMINER
Beautiful Big Song Book

"Heart Songs" is not a mere collection of words and music thrown together to make a song book. 20,000 people voted the songs in "Heart Songs" the songs of the Canadian and American people. Four years were required to reach a verdict and the result is "Heart Songs," the song book of the Canadian and American people.

Many of these songs cannot be found in any other collection. They came in yellow, time-worn, tear-stained sheets—that had been sacredly treasured from childhood—some were written out from memory—others were given by titles only—or remembered verses involving a long search to obtain the whole. Of the thousands received it is safe to say that the several hundred finally selected— as having the largest number of votes and the highest endorsement—represent to-day the taste of the Canadian and American people in their choice of music. We believe that the distribution of this unrivalled song collection will bring more happiness into the homes of our Readers; will do more to make them attractive to young and old; to inculcate a love for music; to soften, elevate and refine the home life; to cultivate the nobler and higher virtues of the fireside— than any other means we could adopt.

Liberal Convention To-night

LIBERALS AND FRIENDS OF ADVANCED TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION INVITED TO ATTEND

In Conservatory of Music Hall

MR. PECK'S MESSAGE

Retiring Member for West Peterboro' Refers to His Career as a Member of the Ontario Legislature

MONDAY'S CONVENTION

Peterborough, June 5, 1914.
To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—As by the action of the Liberal-Conservative Convention on Monday last, I am called upon to retire (temporarily at any rate) from the public service, a few words from me to those whom I have represented in the Legislature for the past three Sessions, may be expected.

I was the unanimous choice of the Liberal-Conservative Convention held in July, 1911, and subsequently in December of that year was elected to the Legislature with a substantial majority of over 600. Since that time I have devoted myself earnestly to the best of my ability to the advancement of the interests of the Riding. In doing so I desire to say that I endeavoured to deal with every question strictly on its merits, and if I thought anything could be done to assist the City or the County I was ready to do my part to carry out the project. During my term in the House I assisted in legislation which has enabled the City to bonus and encourage the establishment therein of such important industries as the DeLaval Dairy Supply Company, the Henry Hope & Sons Company, and the Vermont Marble Company, and also to enable the City more satisfactorily to deal with the question of sewage disposal. I also did everything possible to assist the City in its effort to deal with the Provincial Hydro-Electric Commission, and I note with satisfaction that at a very early date, owing to legislation I assisted in procuring, the desires of the Citizens of Peterborough in this regard will be carried out.

It will always be a pleasure to me to feel that I assisted in a humble way in the passage of that important piece of legislation known as the "Workmen's Compensation Act." A measure which assures to a workman, without any question, a reasonable compensation in case of injury while not bearing too oppressively upon the employer.

I have to thank the recent Liberal-Conservative Convention for the kindly expressions contained in the resolution adopted by it with reference to my services. I feel that it recognizes the spirit with which I approached my work.

In attending to public duties one may expect and must submit to criticism from those who do not see matters in the same light. From reports which have reached me I have reason to understand that the result of Monday's meeting was due to resentment by some to some action, or want of action, on my part. If any have been inclined to take offence the manly and only proper course should have been to come to me and give me an opportunity of discussing the question in an open and frank manner. Often misunderstandings may be thus cleared up. I am pleased to feel that the complaints, which street rumour informs me have been made, have nothing whatever to do with my administration of the Riding's affairs during my term of office.

I allowed my name to be submitted to the recent Convention, not to gratify any personal ambition, but because I believed I was the strongest Candidate available, and I desired to assist in holding the Riding for our worthy leader, Sir James Whitney. The Convention took a different view, and I must bow to its decision, and trust that events will show it made a wise choice.

I thank those who without any solicitation whatever on my part supported my Candidature at the Convention, and I also desire to acknowledge the numerous and very kindly expressions of regret which have been tendered me by Citizens of both political parties since the opinion of the Convention was expressed.

In conclusion I desire to acknowledge the very considerate personal treatment I have always received from the Press of this City.

E. A. PECK.

One day Mrs. Gladstone was discussing with some ladies a knotty problem while her husband was busy in his study upstairs.

As the discussion proceeded one of the ladies exclaimed, with a sigh: "Well, there is One above who knows it all."

"Yes," responded Mrs. Gladstone; "William will be down directly and he will tell us all about it."

BILL IN SENATE

Second Reading of C. N. R. Measure Moved by the Government Leader This Morning

AN AMENDMENT

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 5.—What promises to be an interesting and sustained debate in the Senate in the Canadian Northern aid proposals began this morning, when Hon. Mr. Lougheed, the Government leader, moved the second reading of the bill. The debate will continue this afternoon and probably on into next week. The Liberal amendment is to be moved at a later stage in the debate, embodying some of the chief objections to the bill as already brought out in Commons. This amendment will be in the form of recommendations which will, if carried, be sent back to the Commons for consideration.

Recruits Must Apply Soon

The recruiting for the 24th Battery is going ahead fast. The instructor has intimated that any recruits wishing to join the Battery had better make early application as the strength is almost to its height now.

Men have made application to take eight horses, whereas the full complement is seventy-two. The corps will leave Peterborough on Saturday evening, June 13th at 8 o'clock and entrain for Petawawa.

ANNUAL TOUR OF BOARD OF WORKS

The Board of Works Committee of the City Council embarked on their annual tour of inspection this afternoon. There were on hand Mayor Buller and Aldermen Duncan, Green, Stratton, Duffus, Anderson and Saunders, City Engineer Parsons, and Street Commissioner Evans. The party had dinner at the Oriental Hotel, after which they pressed into service Aldermen Green's and Duncan's cars, in which to make the tour of the city. The Board inspected the streets, bridges, sidewalks, etc., and it is possible that some addition will be made to the programme of the Board of Works as a result of the tour. Any extensive innovation or change, however, is not anticipated as each Alderman keeps an eagle eye on the condition of things in his own ward, and besides the vision of the overdraft already hanging over their heads will have an influence on the members of the committee in favour of the most economical course possible, which would be to carry out their present plans.

MEDIATORS PROTEST TO PRESIDENT

Special to The Examiner.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., June 5—President Wilson, while on his way to this City, this morning, received from the A B C mediators, at Niagara Falls, an important message, believed to be protesting against the United States permitting an ammunition ship to land at Tampico, with arms for the Constitutionalists. The mediators regard this as unfair to Mexico.

THE ROWELL TEMPERANCE POLICY

In the course of his address at Massey Hall last night Mr. Rowell said:

In the platform which I had the honour of submitting to the electors in the general election of 1911 the following statement of policy appears:

"The evils of intemperance constitute a grave social peril. During the ensuing Parliamentary term we will consider the best forms of legislation to deal effectively with these evils, and the electors will have an opportunity of passing upon our proposals at the following general election."

Pursuant to this pledge, I now submit to you the policy upon which we ask the electors to pass judgment:

"(1) The immediate abolition of the bar, including therein the abolition of all hotel and club licenses and therewith the treating system.

"(2) Such other restrictions upon the residue of the liquor traffic as experience may show to be necessary to limit its operations and effective to remedy its evils. Local option to be maintained as a means of wiping out the residue of the retail sale where the electors so decide.

"(3) The strict enforcement of the law by officials in sympathy with the law enforcement and the elimination of political influence from the administration of the law.

"(4) The regulation and inspection of all houses of public entertainment, so as to insure reasonable accommodation for the travelling public."

This policy means:

Hotel liquor licenses. Every one wiped out. This means that liquor cannot be sold anywhere on the premises.

Club liquor licenses. Every one wiped out.

Treating system. Abolished.

Shops are dealt with, but in a different way from bars:

(1) They will come under further restrictions.

(2) They can be wiped out by local option on a majority vote where the electors so decide.

(3) New shop licenses cannot be issued in the place of bar licenses abolished.

Note:—In nine-tenths of the municipalities of the Province there are at present no shop licenses.

IN NINE-TENTHS OF THE MUNICIPALITIES, THEREFORE, OUR POLICY MEANS THE COMPLETE ABOLITION OF THE RETAIL SALE OF LIQUOR.

The pledge I made in 1911 is now redeemed, and the responsibility rests upon the electors of this Province to say whether the open bar shall continue in our midst or be forever wiped out.

I now make this further promise and pledge to you and to the electors of the Province:

"If the electors express their approval of this policy by returning up to power, in the next session of the Legislature legislation will be enacted which will give full effect to the policy I have laid before you."

USELESS TO BUILD MORE BATTLESHIPS

Sir Percy Scott Declares Admiralty Should Devote Its Attention to Constructing Submarines or Airships

CAUSES SENSATION

Special Wire to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., June 5.—(Special cable.)—Sir Percy Scott's declaration in the London Times that it was useless to build more battleships and cruisers, but that the effort of the Admiralty should be confined to submarines and aeroplanes for future battles under the sea and over it, created a startling effect on the British nation. Sir Percy Scott, although retired, is regarded as one of the most competent authorities on naval affairs. He is a skillful naval architect and many of the latest advices in the British navy are of his invention. In a letter to the Times, Scott says: "With a flotilla of submarines commanded by dashing young officers, of whom we have plenty, I would undertake to blow up any fleet of warships, even though they be under the protection of coast guns in an enemy's country."

END OF POWER DIFFICULTIES NOW IN SIGHT

At Least Power Committee Are of the Opinion That the Way is Clear For Permanent Settlement

MEETING LAST NIGHT

After several years of legal wrangling it seems that the Hydro-Electric question in this City is to be settled for all time within the present month. That, at any rate, was the opinion of the Power Committee of the City Council, which met last night. The members of the Committee do not anticipate any more difficulty in securing the plant and property of the Peterborough Light and Power Company. At last night's meeting, on the motion of Aldermen Duncan and Dobbin, the City Solicitor was instructed to draw up a by-law for the expropriation of the Peterborough Light and Power Company's plant, and to submit it for further scrutiny to Mr. Cowan, the Toronto lawyer, who is looking after the City's interests at that end of the negotiations.

Accepting the lesson from previous experiences in the progress of the negotiations the papers containing the inventory of the Company's property, and the list of contracts that will be taken over by the City, which have been recently furnished the City will be very closely guarded. Although many copies of these have to be made that it would be convenient to have them printed, this will not be done, as that would necessitate their temporary removal from the City Clerk's office. The reason for this is that the Company have now fully complied with the law in supplying the lists, and that if any part of the said lists goes astray they are not bound to refurnish it. Thus the accidental loss of any part of these papers might hold the negotiations

MONSTER FUNERAL

Salvation Army Victims of the "Empress of Ireland" Disaster Will Be Laid at Rest To-morrow

SERVICE IN ARENA

Special Wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 5—With a mass of fluttering colours at their head, with fifteen bands playing music for the dead, with flowers heaped high, and with heads bent in mourning, ten thousand people will march three miles Saturday afternoon to Mount Pleasant Cemetery there to inter seventeen Toronto Salvationists, including Commissioner Rees, whose bodies have been recovered from the lost Empress of Ireland. These are the arrangements that have been made so far. Before the funeral there will be an immense service at the Arena, under the direction of Colonel Gaskin and Commissioner McKie, successor to the late Commissioner Rees. Commissioner McKie is now on his way from New York.

Superintendent Of Water Works Has Resigned

Mr. A. G. Fawcett Has Given Up the Position—Commissioners Meet

A meeting of the Utilities Commission was held last evening in the City Buildings. There were present Messrs. T. F. Matthews, chairman; W. H. Moore and Robert Hicks.

The new seal that has been obtained, embodying "Peterborough Utilities Commission," to replace that of the Water Commissioners, was approved.

The resignation of A. G. Fawcett, Superintendent of the Waterworks, which was presented to the Commission, was, on the motion of Mr. R. Hicks, seconded by Mr. W. H. Moore, received.

There were three applicants for the position of Superintendent, but no action was taken in the matter of making an appointment.

The matter of laying a pipe to supply the Victoria Heights property, was taken up, but the report of an Engineer will be heard before any action is taken. It was proposed to lay a 14-inch pipe into that district.

Mr. Moore favoured having a large 16-inch main from the waterworks, down as far as Smith Street, and from Smith Street, down either George or Water Street, to McDonnel, a 16-inch pipe; pursuing the course west, along McDonnel to Gilchrist, and then branch off in a south westerly direction. This would be a distinct gain in regards to fire protection for the centre of the City and would provide an adequate supply of water for the west end, which at this time, is rather limited, and would solve the problem of carrying water to the outside portions of the City.

In the event of the mains being brought down either George or Water Street, it would mean the removal of the smaller pipes now in use, and the reconnection of all services and branches.

Work Nearly Finished.

The work on Prince and Aylmer streets, where water is being supplied, is almost complete. This is a decided improvement and much felt want for that section of the City.

Correspondence.

Several letters of minor importance were read. One was from G. N. Gordon, City Solicitor, who has drafted an application form for the use of the Hydro Comission, which, he says, will be of great help in obtaining employees.

The Commission then adjourned.

ST. JOHN'S BIBLE CLASS.

The monthly business meeting of the above Bible class members will be held in St. John's Guild room at 8 p.m. All members are particularly requested to be in attendance.

THE COMPOSER VERDI

A Link of the Past to the Present in Opera

Wherever, whenever, and however popular music is known, the composer who must be accorded universal laurels is Guiseppe Verdi, born near Parma, Italy. His true name was Francesco Fortuno. He received his musical education from the chapel master of the cathedral for whom he composed marches at an early age. His first opera was presented at the La Scala, Milan, in 1839, and a few years later on the pronounced success of "Ernani" made him one of the popular operatic composers of the day. The arias from "Il Trovatore" were sung and whistled upon the streets whenever opportunity offered and were rendered wherever and however one might desire music, whether in opera, symphony, oratorio, concert, or street hand organ. In every collection of songs touching the heart a number of the arias from Verdi's operas will always appear. He died at Milan in 1901 at a mature age The musical career of of Verdi is one of the notable chapters in the history of music of all time.

Several of Verdi's most famous operatic airs appear in "Heart Songs." This unique volume contains a treasury of songs for a half century past. We commend it to our readers as the one collection of songs of the past century which they cannot do without, and call attention to our coupon printed elsewhere in to-day's paper.

FRIDAY, JUNE 5, 1914

ACCEPT LIBERAL CANDIDATE.

The Independent Labour People of Brantford have decided not to put a candidate in the field. They have his equivalent in Mr. Joseph Ham, the Liberal candidate, who has also represented labour interests in the city council, as alderman. Labour in Brantford is wise; it sees that it can have no better representative, and that it would be illogical to oppose a candidate who, by virtue of his being a Liberal, is a friend to labour and its welfare.

THE ROAD TO FAVOUR.

The Whitneyites in North Toronto have turned down Mr. McNaught, who has been a faithful and fruitful representative of that riding. He is a member of the Hydro Commission and has a good record for live representative work. But the Whitney government, excepting Mr. Beck, only tolerates the Hydro-Electric for the political advantage that can be drawn from it. Mr. Hanna, the real premier, and Mr. Beck, a fellow cabinet minister, and the leading spirit of the Hydro-Electric, are not on speaking terms. Mr. Irish, the candidate who cuckooed Mr. McNaught out of North Toronto, won his spurs, established his claim to the favour of the Whitney government machine, by his association with the liquor traffic. The Hydro-Electric Commission can't be counted upon as a contributor to election funds.

WHY?

Our evening contemporary announces that Mr. Burnham, M.P., is willing to assist the Conservative candidate, or, rather, Mr. Soden, in the coming election campaign. One who did not know of Mr. Burnham's swaggery of nature and character might be surprised at this effusive offer of auxiliary embarrassment, and wonder why. In the election of 1911, Mr. Burnham did not lift a finger—but rather laid a few straws in the way—to assist the candidature of Mr. Peck, and the consequence was that Mr. Peck was elected by 618 majority. The situation is less understandable because Mr. Peck was a legitimate standard bearer, a bona fide Conservative candidate, who could be counted to be faithful to the traditions of his party, the party trust he received, and the representative responsibility conferred upon him. Mr. Burnham has slangwhanged the Whitney Government for its opposition to tax reform, but as he did in the matter of the C. N. R. loan, after calling Mackenzie and Mann "buccaneers," voted obediently for giving them a trifle of 45 millions—he will help elect the Government, whose policy he opposes. He is a worthy man to help a candidate in West Peterborough, who poses as a supporter of the Whitney Government, but antagonizes what it holds most dear, the friendship of the liquid interests.

LAVISH LARGESS.

During the three years the Borden government has been in power, it has given from the public treasury, to Messrs., or to be exact, Sirs Mackenzie and Mann, 73 millions of the people's money. This works out that the government of Mr. Borden has been ladling the people's money into the capacious pockets of the "buccaneers" as flighty Mr Burnham calls them, at the rate of $2.75 per hour, or $65,000 every day, or 2 millions a month. During its first year in office, which Mr. Borden took on a policy of economy, the Borden government gave Mackenzie & Mann assistance totalling ten million dollars. Last year the government gave the two railway millionaires fifteen and a half millions, and the last session, only a few days ago, Mr. Borden's obedient majority in the House of Commons handed out to Mackenzie and Mann 45 millions more, against the strenuous protests of the Liberal minority, and in disregard of the public interests. The Examiner always has been favourable to liberal and even lavish expenditure of the public funds for enterprises necessary to the development of our natural resources; but this attitude cannot be maintained towards the action of the Borden government, which exploits the public credit for the profit of individuals. The Canadian Northern Railway can be made an important agency in serving the transportation interests of Canada. But assistance to it must or should confer a controlling interest by the government, so as to insure that public aid in the shape of money should be exclusively used for the public benefit and not for the further enrichment of two gentlemen who have already personally become multi-millionaires upon capable exploitation of the sum of 230 millions of money placed in their hands for railway purposes by the people of Canada through Dominion and Provincial governments and municipalities.

MR. PECK'S VALEDICTORY.

In another column appears Mr. Peck's statement on the occasion of his enforced retirement from political relations with West Peterborough. The document is worthy of the man, in its dignified reserve, temperateness of statement, and restraint of reference under great provocation. He modestly cites what he has done for the riding, and neither in that regard, nor in the matter of fidelity to his party leader and party, nor in his personal relations can be found a legitimate reason for cavalierly not say, brutally, depriving him of the right to seek a confirmation of the confidence of the electors, which he has in no way forfeited. It is a satisfaction to know that the better element of the Conservative party, the old guard, the solid members of it, resent the scheming of which Mr. Peck has been made the victim; and that he still retains, unabated, their confidence, personally and politically, as he retains, the personal respect and confidence of the Liberals of West Peterborough, due to a worthy member of one of our oldest and most respected families. An old poet says:

He that's ungrateful hath no crime
but one;
All other sins may pass for virtues in him.

LABOUR'S NATURAL ALLY.

With a majority in the late Legislature of about three to one, it would be thought that this implied evidence of public confidence and the record of the Whitney Government for which the Government, itself, and its admirers, take great credit, would make the Conservative party bold enough to be honest; bold enough to be above trickery and conspiracy, and padded delegations; to let the straight, the normal and honourable way of selecting candidates prevail. We know the history of the West Peterborough nomination, and all over the Province the every-day Conservative convention is a battle-field where the party factions "fight it out."

In West Hamilton, Hon. J. S. Hendrie, a member of the Whitney Cabinet, is so much afraid of the electors that a "saw-off" is proposed. Mr Allan Studholme, the sturdy Labour representative, will again be a candidate in East Hamilton. The Hendrie party, in the West, propose a "saw-off," the conditions being that if Mr. Hendrie is permitted to be returned, unopposed, no opposition will be offered Mr. Studholme.

This proposal is a valuable admission—that there is not much difference between a Labour candidate and a Liberal candidate. This is a natural assumption; for Liberalism has always identified itself with the interests of Labour, and their promotion. The Conservatives have no use for a Labour member like Mr. Studholme—when he was addressing the House in favour of an eighthour-day the Conservative members left the Chamber. Mr. Studholme will be elected in East Hamilton without a "saw off," proposed to make safe the seat of Mr. Hendrie, who was elected in 1911 by a majority of 1445. There must have been a big change in public sentiment and the attitude of the public towards the Whitney Government when its candidate with a "head start" like this, and a minister to boot, proposes the humiliation of a "saw-off".

Mr. Studholme will probably be elected by the help of the Liberal electors, as no Liberal candidate will be nominated in opposition to the Labour candidate; for the interests of the Labour party and of real Liberalism are virtually identical. Labour will not oppose progress; and Liberalism will not oppose the interests of Labour, both will promote. Mr. Studholme is spoken of as the only Labour representative in the Legislature. He is the only one that bears the "union label," but so far as interest in the cause and rights of Labour are concerned, every Liberal member in the House is a Labour member. All the legislative benefits conferred upon Labour and its interests have been of Liberal initiative or Liberal enactment. This fact cannot be disputed—the statutes of Ontario and the other provinces and of the Dominion contain the record. Labour and its interests are not in the Conservative lexicon, except at election times. Let the working men do a little thinking. He will see, if he wipes the blur of party prejudice off his eye-glasses, that the principle of justice to Labour are engrained in the platform of principles of the Liberal party, which stands, in a general way, as the champion of the masses against the classes.

THREE-FIFTH'S FRIEND OF THE TRAFFIC.

In his manifesto to the electors Sir J. P. Whitney refers to the fact that there have been 1,200 liquor licenses cut off in Ontario during the last nine years. If so, what credit is due the government for the fact? It is due entirely to the operation of the Local Option Act passed by the Liberal party, and brought into operation in the various municipalities by the friends of temperance. What is more, but for the three-fifths handicap, which continued 1,573 licenses, which a majority vote would have cut off, the number of licenses wiped out would have been 2,738 rather than 1,165.—Brantford Expositor.

THE CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT AND COMPENSATION ACT

In a speech delivered by him at the City Hall, Woodstock, on August 29, 1912, Mr. N. W. Rowell dealt extensively with the weaknesses of the old Workmen's Compensation Act, and mentioned what sort of measure in his judgment this province should have. And, singularly enough, the principles he laid down were those subsequently recommended by Sir William Meredith. Answering the question, Why in Ontario we had not an act of the kind he indicated, when nearly all other countries have such legislation, Mr. Rowell said:

Who is to blame for the present conditions in this province? I do not believe it is the workingmen. For years they have been urging the government to take action. Mr. Studholme, the Labour member for East Hamilton, has for the past six or seven years pressed upon the government the urgent need for advanced legislation. The matter was also brought to the attention of the government in the year 1907 by the introduction of a bill by the Hon. Thomas Crawford. The form in which it was introduced would not meet the situation, and was not satisfactory to either employers or employees. The Prime Minister, however, instead of giving the bill a second reading which would accept the principle, and amending it in committee, requested that it be withdrawn and stated that the government was preparing to consider the question between then and the next session. The bill was accordingly withdrawn. The year 1907 passed, and the government, decisive in some matters, could not make up its mind to help the workingman, and so nothing was done. The year 1908 passed with the same result. The year 1909 passed and still the government did nothing. As a result of repeated urging, the government in the speech from the Throne in 1910 again promised to investigate the matter with a view to legislation, but in the session of that year the Liberals, wearied by the repeated promises of the government, and its inaction, through Mr. Proudfoot, member for Centre Huron, introduced a bill based on the principles of the British Act, modified to meet our conditions, a bill which would have given the industrial workers of this province reasonable compensation for injuries sustained by them in the course of employment. On the second reading of the bill Sir James Whitney asked Mr. Proudfoot to withdraw the bill and promised that the government would appoint a commission to investigate the matter, and would introduce legislation dealing with the question. Mr. Proudfoot, relying on the assurance of the Prime Minister, withdrew his bill.

The story, as above given, closes in the year 1910. Mr. Proudfoot withdrew his bill, but it was not until 1914, or four years afterwards, that the commissioner reported and a bill was introduced. The chances are that there would have been no bill to this day but for the ceaseless urgings of the Liberals and Labour men.

THE SWEET SWEET PEA

Here is a flower which combines the fragrance of the rose with the condescension of the marigold, the grace of the lily with the familiarity of the morning glory, the delicacy of the orchid with the buxom friendliness of the zinnia. It is fairly the flower of the million, says Franz Biehler in "The Woman's Home Companion."

Best of all, the sweet pea can be grown almost anywhere where soil and sunlight meet. In all the Provinces of Canada, up to the line where homes give place to camps, the same friend smiles for all.

Success with sweet peas begins with the seed; and more truly so in this case than with most other plants.

Preparation of the soil in the fall is important. Deep digging is the main requirement, though good drainage should go with this, even if it has to be specially provided by underlaying deep down with broken stone or tile. The vines like to be cool about the roots, but standing water isn't cool. It is the ready evaporation of moisture from porous, well-drained, well aerated soil which keeps the roots cool and comfortable and enables the plants to throw up those twelve-inch flower stems with three great butterfly blossoms on each.

Autumn sowing will be obligatory when fall planting is taken. Having thorough drainage this fall sowing is entirely feasible, though it ought to be tried carefully in a small way by amateur gardeners before they launch out extensively on this plant. For most persons spring sowing is still the best way; but sweet peas should go into the ground very early. Indeed, it is practically impossible to sow them too early, and the rule of sowing at the earliest possible moment after Candlemas Day is a perfectly safe one.

Next to be considered is the importance of getting the seed well down into the soil. The usual way of meeting this requirement is to dig a trench at seeding time about a foot deep and sixteen inches wide down into the already well-pulverized soil. It is customary, then, to sprinkle one row of seed along either margin of the trench and cover it in about two inches with fine loam. Good sweet pea seed germinates very vigorously and will push its way sturdily up through this covering as soon as the days begin to get the least bit warm. Meanwhile water must not be allowed to collect and stand in this partially filled trench. As soon as the seedlings grow to a height of four or five inches, more soil is gently worked in around them, and with two or three such partial fillings the whole is brought up to the general level of the garden. In this way the plants become established with their roots deep down where the sun cannot burn them.

As soon as the trench is filled it is time to put up the trellis for the vines, and there must be no delay about it. The vines won't wait. The strictly proper trellis consists of birch brush, six feet tall with an extra foot sharpened at the bottom for sticking into the ground. These birch whisks have to be freshly cut every year, either in the dark o' the moon or the light o' the moon; and the poor people who live in the lands where birches don't grow will simply have to put up with something else. Such light brush, however, does actually make one of the best supports for sweet pea vines ever found, unless, indeed, the vines are growing in a very exposed place where the wind might blow the brush over.

In the birchless regions, trellises have to be made of wire netting. Good chicken wire with a two-inch mesh best suits the case, the frames being more important than the wire anyway. The frames should be fastened to good posts of cedar, oak or cement, set two feet into the ground; laths or slight stakes driven down with the poll of the axe should won't answer. The wire must be stretched firm and taut to these and supported midway by some light framework, which also is firmly nailed to the posts.

Here we have the sweet peas started and the trellises put up and everything coming along nicely. Frequent hoeing will help. It keeps the soil stirred and growth active. Irrigation may be needed, but not till after the opening of the flower season. If really adequate quantities of water can be supplied regularly then irrigation is likely to add greatly to the amount and quality of the harvest; but little sprinklings from a watering pot at odd times just when somebody happens to think of it do more harm than good.

By the middle of July the early varieties will be in blossom and from that time forth the sweet pea garden will be a prolific delight. Barring the dire effects of drought there is hardly anything that can mar our joy through August and September as we harvest daily those handfuls and armloads of fragrant blossoms. The more we pick them the faster they bloom. Indeed, it is one of the first principles of success that all the flowers must be picked the day they open; the day they are neglected and allowed to wither on the vines, being succeeded by tiny seed-pods, that day the vines, having fulfilled their native duty, begin to shrivel and no more buds are formed.

We mean to have a few first early kinds to put us ahead of the neighbours. Earliest of All is the main reliance in this line, though its pink and white may be supplemented by Burpee's Earliest White and by Mrs. William Sim (salmon pink). The main crop will be of several varieties chosen for both colour and form for, while a full range of colours is always desired, it must not be forgotten that the haute distinction of the sweet peas is reached in clearness of form. The big voluptuous forms of the Spencer type are particularly irresistible.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IS GROWING

Large Increase in the Revenue, Which Went Over the Five Million Mark

WOODTOCK, June 4.— Continued progress both on the financial side and in the matter of membership marks the reports of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, presented to the General Assembly, which is in session here.

The financial statement shows that in 1913 [illegible] was the amount raised for all the purposes of their church, as shown in the annual report to the General Assembly. This was an increase of $219,936 over the preceding year.

For the schemes of the church the amount was $1,203,366, $70,883 better than 1913, while for congregational purposes, $4,433,703 were contributed, an increase of $149,053.

Tables of Statistics.

	1912.	1913.
Self-sustaining charges	903	943
Augmented charges	213	205
Ordained missionaries	151	103
Colleges	185	193
Unattached, etc.	270	297
	1,771	1,788
Congregations—	1912.	1913
Self-sustaining	1,761	1,682
Augmented	537	643
Home and Missions	2,489	1,989
Elders	10,357	10,712
Families	168,613	173,587
Communicants	301,465	314,832
Baptisms	15,989	16,590
Sabbath schools	3,564	3,603
Officers and teachers	27,615	29,200
Scholars	246,701	263,444
Total enrolment	274,316	292,644

The average contribution per family for all purposes of the church is reported as being $33.20, while per communicant it is $18.31.

In the Presbytery of Toronto the amounts respectively were $43.37 and $19.14.

In the Presbytery of Whitby, $28.40 and $14.07.

The Presbytery of Orangeville gave $23.70 and $10.83.

The Presbytery of Saskatoon heads the list with a contribution of $52.74 per family, and $52.93 per communicant.

The budget for 1914 shows a total of $1,500,000, as compared with $1,200,000 as follows:

Home missions	$750,000
Foreign missions	400,000
Social service and evangelism	107,000
Montreal College	17,000
Queen's College	8,000
Knox College	20,000
Manitoba College	14,500
Saskatoon College	15,000
Robertson College	15,500
Westminster College	20,000
Point-aux-Trembles School	25,000
Sabbath schools and young people's societies	25,000
Missionary and Deaconesses Training Home	7,000
Aged and infirm ministers' fund	25,000
Ministers' widows' and orphans' fund	25,000
Assembly fund	12,000
Treasurer's office, Board of Finance and Laymen's Missionary Council	14,000

Increase of $80,000.

Dealing with the budget, the Board of Finance says in its report:

"In a year of unusual financial stringency the treasurer's statement shows an advance of $80,924 in receipts for the budget from congregations alone, exclusive of donations and other special amounts.

"Much, however, remains to be done. Many congregations have no systematic efforts to reach their allocations. About 40 per cent. of the pastoral charges have not carried out a thorough personal canvass. The average contribution for the budget in 1913 was $2.76 per communicant, or a little more than 5 cents per week. More than half the membership of the church gave nothing, and many others gave on a very meagre scale. Of the estimates for 1913 only 61 per cent. was realised from congregational receipts. The demands of the work at home and abroad make a substantial increase both in estimates and contributions imperative. This should prove a powerful incentive for the cultivation of resources which have scarcely been touched. An insistent call comes to congregations as yet unorganized for the budget to line up their forces, to individuals that have not given to recognise their obligation, and to those who have given to set a higher standard of giving that every person may be led to do his full share."

Was This Militant A Canadian?

Editor of The Examiner.

LONDON, Eng., June 5.— (Special cable.)—There were searching investigations through the Royal household this morning to discover whose negligence or conspiracy permitted a militant to get into levee last night and make a suffragette scene before the king and queen. There were rumours to-day that it was one of the Canadian debutantes who upset the decorum of the ceremony by speaking to the king personally on votes for women matter, but this could not be confirmed. At any rate it is believed this morning that the offender was among those duly invited to court. She was not a pretender.

Breeders Raising More Varieties

So That City Will Be Represented by Every Kind of Fowl—Poultry Association Met Last Night

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association was held last night in the Association's rooms on Simcoe street. The meeting was well attended, and the work was enthusiastically entered into by every member present. It developed at the meeting that the younger breeders of the city, acting upon the advice of the older ones, were branching out into the raising of breeds that have not lately been raised in Peterborough. This city is already well known as a poultry centre through the efforts of the members of the Association, and when this plan is further worked out Peterborough will undoubtedly advance a step in the poultry world. At present the very best of certain breeds are raised here and are taking prizes at shows all over the province. But now the younger breeders are branching out into other breeds, with the object of competing with outside breeders in almost every kind of fowl. So far their efforts have been very gratifying, and the visiting poultry fanciers will recive somewhat of a surprise at the next Exhibition to learn that they have opposition from the city in every line.

Last night Mr. F. Mealey showed a trio of spring chickens. These were in the very best condition, and it is prophesied that they will make a good showing with any of the White Leghorns that will be shown at the Exhibition this year. It was very encouraging to the other members to see the splendid success of one of the Association in the raising of this variety, for the birds were three of the finest that have been seen here of late. Mr. R. D. Robson, Vice-President of the Association, occupied the chair.

Next meeting Rocks, Minorcas and Rhode Island Reds will be on exhibition.

Fined $5.00 For Illegal Fishing

Two Cases of This Kind Heard by Magistrate Dumble This Morning

John Kelly, who was found drunk last night, had a summons in his pocket for being drunk in Toronto at the first of the week, so he will be returned to the Queen city to be dealt with.

Arthur Marwaise a new resident in the city from Quebec, was charged with illegal fishing at the locks. Fisheries Inspector Watt made a plea for leniency in the case of this man who is out of work, so Magistrate Dumble fined him $5, to be paid in ten days.

W. Taylor, a young fellow who lives in the south end of the City, pleaded not guilty to breaking the fishing laws. After taking the evidence of Messrs. Watt and Windsor, fishery inspectors, Taylor was found guilty and fined $5.00.

Prospects For Great Year In Fruit

The Boston Monitor says: "We have it on good authority of the statistics and standards committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce that while the fruit crops in certain of the States have been injured by unfavourable weather conditions, the general outlook is most satisfactory. To begin with, the peach crop, from which varying reports are always expected, is going to be normal, and this means a great deal. In other fruits, the committee reports the yield in all likelihood will show an excess. Already there is proof of the success of the citrus crops of Florida and California. California alone has shipped 45,0000 carloads of fruit this season beyond its borders."

TWO HUNDRED HEARD ADDRESS

On "Kitchen Engineering" Which Was Delivered by Mr. Beal Under Auspices of Peterboro' Light & Power Co. Yesterday

The accommodation provided in the new Turnbull building for the "Kitchen Engineering" lectures was taxed to the limit yesterday afternoon at five o'clock when Mr. Beal addressed two or three hundred ladies on that subject. Before his address Mr. Beal announced that the subject of Wednesday's address would be dealt with again on Saturday evening owing to the fact that the speaker on that day could not be heard for the noise of the construction work going on.

The lectures are being given under the auspices of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, and before the address yesterday dainty afternon tea was served, and was much appreciated by the ladies present.

In opening his address Mr Beal said that Kitchen Engineering was something that would turn a careless cook, into a careful, saving, competent manager. In these days the housewife did not have to get up an hour and a half before her husband to light the fire and get breakfast ready. The gas stove answered immediately to the touch of the match, and was a great saving and advantage. Then too kitchen engineering teaches that one should have all the ingredients and utensils to be used in cooking of any dish, all ready before the actual work of making the dish was proceeded with.

The speaker displayed a menu for a dinner in the extreme cold weather. Every item on the menu was simple, but palatable and heat giving. If the thermometer outside were below zero it would be a splendid midday meal. The recipes for the dishes in the menu he announced would be published later, in pamphlet form and could be had at the Peterborough Light and Power Company's Offices.

Kitchen Engineering also taught the art of using what had been left over from another meal. In this present day when the cost of living was so high no one could afford to throw away everything that was left over from a meal. But it had to be presented to the family in a form that was both palatable and unrecognizable. This was what Kitchen Engineering taught, and the speaker outlined a few cases where left-over victuals could be made very tasty and acceptable for another meal. Kitchen Engineering too, emphasized the fact that no one should leave canned goods in the can a second after they had been opened.

In concluding the speaker said that while some women liked to spend a lot of time in the kitchen, there were others who didn't. To these latter he would say that Kitchen Engineering was a science that taught how to spend a great deal more time outside, and a great deal less time inside the kitchen.

End Of Power Difficulties, etc.

up for another long period, and from the opinions expressed last night, it would seem that such a possibility is viewed with decided disfavour by the members of the Committee.

In thoroughness, however, the Peterborough Light and Power Company would seem to have little to learn from the Council or any other body or individual. The inventory of their property which must go to Toronto, and go before the Hydro-Commission, includes among the $100,000 worth of property listed, the following; 3 chisels; 2 canthooks, 1 pair of spurs; 2 coffee percolators; 26 small cardboard boxes; 1 sprinkling can; one tree pruner; 1 axe; 1 cross bar; all of which, it is expected, will be duly expropriated by the City, along with the glass in the partition of the Power Company's office and the partitions as well.

Last night also, on the motion of Aldermen Duncan and Dobbin, the City Clerk was authorised to send copies of the inventory of the Company's property to the Hydro-Electric Commission, who will examine it and determine the amount of money that will have to be paid into court by the City before they can take over the Company's plant. This sum is already provided for by debentures that have been issued and sold.

THROUGH SERVICE ON GEORGE STREET

The turnout of the Street Railway Company between Antrim and Smith Streets, on George, has been completed, and the construction gang are now working on the new turnout on Romaine Street, between George and Crescent Streets. The new turnouts are considerably larger than the old ones, and will permit several cars to pass at a time. As the paving operations on George Street are also finished the through service on the George Street line has been resumed, which will be good news to a large number of the patrons who find that line a convenience. In a short time the turnout now under construction on Romaine Street will be finished.

Automobile And Cyclist Collide

E. Godfrey Narrowly Escaped Falling Under Wheels of Motor Car That Knocked Him Down

Mr. E. Godfrey, the Hunter Street harness maker, narrowly escaped serious injury yesterday evening about seven o'clock when he was run down by an automobile in front of the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Godfrey was wheeling north on the left hand side of George Street when an auto driven by Mr. R. Neill aproached from the opposite direction. The auto which was going at a fair speed, struck the cyclist in passing, but very fortunately knocked him to one side. The cyclist was thrown from his wheel to the pavement with great force, and picking up his machine limped toward the sidewalk. The auto was stopped and the owner tendered his apologies, at the same time drawing the attention of Godfrey to the fact that he was wheeling up the wrong side of the street.

This morning it was learned that Mr Godfrey sustained only a shaking up and a barked chin. The accident came very close to being of a more serious nature, as Godfrey fell almost under the wheels of the motor.

GENTLE TREATMENT TO WOMEN IN THIS COUNTRY

WINNIPEG, June 5.—The Anglican Synod discussed drunkenness in Manitoba when the Rev. G. H. Broughall gave an address on the topic. Hon. G. R. Coldwell interrupted the speaker and asked: "Why single out drunkenness? Are there not other evils to investigate? This looks like a very sinister thing to me. You are touching a very delicate question. Because of the position I occupy I should not say much, but this is a question upon which I should advise the synod to go gently."

Rev. Mr. Broughall condemned the present system of punishing drunkenness. He also declared that as much drunkenness was due to disease and insanity, provision should be made for compulsory treatment in hospital or asylum.

Rev. J. J. Roy made the declaration that the Anglican church as a whole was not sympathetic to Temperance reform. "There is a tendency in our church to stand by the liquor interests." Mr. Roy said that in the country the people were inclined to favour the "Banish the Bar" proposal, but at the synod any temperance reform proposal was defeated every time it was introduced. Other speakers followed along the same line.

In the discussion on the question of Immigration, Canon Gill, the novelist, made the statement, "any man who will let an old foreign woman, who has likely done a hard day's washing, stand up in the car just because she has a shawl around her neck instead of a fine bonnet on, is no man at all." The Canon went on to plead for a more sympathetic attitude to the foreigners, and said that the great thing for the churches was to educate their own people to understand that the foreign women who did their washing were not necessarily inferior because they spoke a different language."

SUMMER SKIN TROUBLES

Sunburn, blistering and irritation are the commonest form of summer skin troubles, and Zam-Buk ends these very quickly. It works in two ways. As soon as applied, its antiseptic powers get to work and kill all the poison in a wound, a sting or a sore. This generally ends the smarting and the pain. Then Zam-Buk begins the healing process, and fresh healthy tissue is built up. For sore, blistered feet, sore hands, heat rashes, baby's heat spots, sore paces due to perspiration, etc., you can't equal Zam-Buk. It also cures cuts, ulcers, abscesses, piles, and all inflamed and diseased conditions of skin and subjacent tissue. Druggists and stores everywhere sell Zam-Buk, 50c box. Use Zam-Buk Soap also, 25c. per tablet. All stores, or Zam-Buk Co. Toronto.

IDENTITY OF SUFFRAGETTES IS DISCOVERED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., June 5.—Misses Mary and Eleanor Blomfield, daughters of the late Sir Arthur Blomfield, and grand-daughters of the late Lord Bishop of London, were identified to-day as the militant suffragettes who created a scene at King George's Court reception last night. They are of high social position, and recently returned from a trip to Canada. They have large estate interests in the West, according to repute. They held invitations to last night's function, and cannot be accused of any impropriety except that of speaking to His Majesty without permission.

If I put it in my batter,
It will make my batter bitter.

GETTING A START

By Nathaniel C. Fowler Jr.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Something For Nothing

He who tries to get something for nothing is as foolish as is he who attempts to discover the secret of perpetual motion.

There can be no effect without a cause. Effect is dependent upon cause. Assuming you can get something for nothing, that which you get for nothing is worth what you have paid for it—nothing.

Everything worth while, yes, everything worth while or not worth while, is produced by some sort of effort, by somebody, somewhere.

If you have something which you did not pay for, either in money or in effort, you have stolen goods; and even stolen goods are not something for nothing, because you contributed an effort to get them, and the risk involved may be considered theoretically as a purchase price.

Probably more than half of the inhabitants of the world have striven and are striving, to obtain something for nothing, to realize a result unpreceded by effort.

If you are receiving, say, $10 a week, and are promoted to a $15 position, you do not hold it unless you do $15 worth of work. Undeserved promotion is disastrous to the one who is promoted. You are more of a man, and stand a better chance of succeeding eventually, if you receive $10 a week and earn more than $10 a week, than if you receive $15 a week and earn only $10 a week.

Reciprocity is a fundamental principle of life and business. Without it nothing exists permanently, assuming that it may exist transiently.

You must "deliver the goods," so to speak, before you can be paid for what you deliver; and, if you deliver less than the contract calls for, you will go out of business.

The swindler never lasts. He does not succeed, except in a very transient way during the little time he is out of jail. He does not build for himself a reputation which is negotiable in any market. As a thief he is a failure.

you are worth, until you shevmicels

Do not attempt to get more than you are worth. Do not try to get what you are worth, until you have proved that you are worth more than you are getting. An even swap is not profitable to either party. There must be profit.

The successful salesman realizes that, to succeed, he must ask and receive what his goods are worth to him and what his goods are worth to the buyer of them. If both parties to the transaction do not make something out of it, it is not a profitable sale and does not stand for permanent business.

You, as an employee, whether you sell goods or keep books, are a commodity, and you cannot sell youself, your experience, or your ability for more than they are worth, except to fools, and fools are never permanent customers.

Don't try to get something for nothing. You can't do it, unless you steal; and even then you don't get something for nothing, for you pay for what you get in loss of reputation or by punishment.

Don't try to sell what you don't possess. Don't demand a price for yourself more than you are worth.

Success depends upon selling what you are and what you have for an adequate price. If you get less, you are a poor salesman. If you get more, you are a fool.

COULD NOT FIND BODIES OF LOVED ONES

Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., received word to-day from his relative, Mr. R. Birch, of Toronto, that his search among the bodies recovered from the Empress of Ireland for the remains of his wife and children had been unsuccessful. Mr. Birch passed through Peterborough on the 3.15 C. P. R. train this afternoon.

GERANIUMS

Warren Baxter

For many years I have kept house plants, mostly geraniums, and they are seldom without blossoms, either in winter or summer. The following is my method:

First, I like tin cans, one quart tomato cans are about the right size for a good sized geranium, for if you wish blossoms the roots must be crowded. I always sift the dirt from my plants through a coal shaker. I mix a little ashes, some fine sand, some good dirt from the pig yard or else good garden dirt and some fine fertiliser from the horse pile.

When it comes time to bring my geraniums in for the winter (I do not put them in the ground) I take an old fork and dig all the old dirt away from the roots, but not enough to loosen them from the cans; then I refill the cans with this fresh, new dirt, trim the geraniums if they are not in good shape, then they will not wilt when taken into the home, but are ready to keep right on growing and blossoming. Ever- Monday when I wash they get a good watering with the dirty suds. I keep them in a room where there is no fire, but a fire in each of the adjoining rooms. In this way I always have blossoms.

If you want a pretty bed of geraniums and some good, young plants for the winter, when you make your flower garden or the ground becomes warm, break off a lot of slips, plant them in this bed and you will have blossoms all summer; at least I do from even little slips. Never put geraniums in large dishes if you expect many blossoms.

A package of good geranium seed will give you several new plants. —New England Homestead.

BANKERS AND RED CAPS PLAY THE LAST GAME

On account of the inability of the Bankers to play the first game of the Mercantile League double-header to-morrow, the schedule has been altered and the clash between the Bankers and Red Caps will be the second fixture of the afternoon. The De Laval and Draughting Room teams will clash in the first game at 2 o'clock. Two good games should be the portion of the fans tomorrow. The De Laval team looked good in its opening game last week and with Mahoney pitching, the Draughting Room will have their work cut out for them. The Red Caps—Banker clash will be a battle all the way. Each team has a victory to its credit and to-morrow's battle will be an important one. W. Andrews will umpire both games.

Sullivan Appeal, etc.

WILL APPEAL.

The appeal will be heard to-day of Raymond Sullivan, against a decision of Magistrate Dumble in the Police Court.

Sullivan, it will be remembered, was fined $100 for keeping a common gaming house. The fine at the time was paid under protest.

Patterson and a Parsonsons, who were each fined $20 for frequenting a common gaming house, are also appealing the judgment.

The claimant, though he could not make an identification of the hat, brought out in evidence that he was not responsible, and that the defendant had been told this.

His Honour dismissed the claim, and also the counterclaim for $10, but directed that the hat should be returned to the owner, Mr. Lech.

Upon hearing the judgment, Mr. Dumble, counsel for the defence, took the hat, and proceeded to wrap it up.

Mr. J. Corkery, acting for the claimant, thereupon asked the Court to repeat the judgment.

Mr. Dumble, however, refused to give up the hat, stating that the decision was an unfair one.

His Honour, thereupon, directed the bailiff to take possession of the hat. This official, acting on instructions, went to execute his duty, when Mr. Dumble held the hat behind his back, and at the same time, placed a formidable looking fist in front of the bailiff's face.

Mr. J. J. Turner was awarded judgment for $30.00 against S. Veraldi, of North Bay. No defence was put in.

In the case of W. J. Fermson v. F. Sherwood, judgment was given in favour of plaintiff for $76. He had originally claimed $75 for building and constructing the walls of a cellar. The defence claimed the work was improperly executed.

In the case of James Davidson vs. Joseph and Garfield Crowe, for $113.50, being the amount due upon a joint promissory note, His Honour gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff against Joseph Crowe, whom, it was deduced in evidence, had made payments upon the note during the past six years, over which length of time the note was made. Garfield Crowe was outlawed, as he had made no payments whatever.

The Generous Florist.

An enterprising young florist in order to increase his trade displayed this sign in his window:

"We give a packet of flower seeds with every plant."

His competitor across the street promptly sought to meet the competition by placing in his window the following announcement:

"We give the earth with every plant."

LACROSSE

The following players are asked to turn out to-night at the Riverside Park: McFadden, Dillon, Mein, Crough, Johnston, Manion, Flemming, Burris, Donovan, Kelly, Halpin, Robertson, Kennedy, Morgan.

CRESSWELL'S FINE PITCHING WAS LOST ON ACCOUNT OF ERRORS BY THE PETES

Ottawa Won First Game of the Series Yesterday Although Local Boy Only Allowed the Senators Five Scattered Hits.

SUPPORT SAVED SHOCKER

OTTAWA, June 4. — The Senators took a listless game from Peterborough here to-day, winning 3 to 2. Cresswell, on the mound for the Petes, twirled well, but got wretched support. He held the champions to five hits, only two coming in one innings. Shocker, on the mound for Ottawa, was unsteady, but two sensational catches by Rogers in the ninth saved the game for him, and the support he received generally was first-class. Manager Shaughnessy had a dispute with Umpire Miller, and was put out of the game in the sixth. The score:

BASEBALL CHATTER

Hard luck for Cresswell.

The kid has pitched two grand games against Ottawa.

The first time out the Petes did not give the local boy a run to work on.

And yesterday they made four errors behind him.

Any time you hold that Ottawa bunch to four hits you are out there pitching.

The Petes have dropped six out of seven games on the road trip—if Wednesday's game is decided against them.

Nothing seems to be breaking for the Petes. The usual luck of a tail-ender.

The Canadian League race is nearly at the quarter pole and the homesters have won only six games.

We're back about where we were when Curtis H. Templin departed from our midst two years ago.

The fans will get a chance to see the Toronto and Hamilton teams next week. The Petes are home for six games, opening with Toronto on Monday.

The need of a fast infielder to add speed and ginger to the Petes' infield is still in evidence.

Other teams seem able to get men to fill the gaps. Can nothing be done here to secure a shortstop?

WAS ENTITLED TO A HOMER BUT ERRED IN TAKING TEAM OFF FIELD

That is the Consensus of Opinion of the Toronto Sporting Writers in Regard to Wednesday's Fiasco at the Island ---The Incident Discussed From All Angles.

The fiasco in Wednesday's game between Toronto and Peterborough has attracted a lost of attention in the Toronto press. The Queen City sporting writers evidently believe that Blount should have been awarded a home run, but that the Peterborough manager made a mistake in taking his team off the field.

The Telegram says: What was shaping up as the most interesting game of ball staged by the Canadian Leaguers since their arrival at the Island, was brought to an unsatisfactory end in the 10th at the Island yesterday afternoon. With the score six all and two of the "Petes" dealt with in their half of the tenth, Manager Blount made his fourth hit of the day, a screaming line drive that just lit inside the left field foul line. Rolling on its course the ball found the break in the curb between the bleachers and the grandstand, stopping in the alleyway. Schultz fielding the ball, held Blount at third, and then the fireworks commenced.

Claimed Home Run.

Peterborough claimed that as the ball left the sight of the umpire Blount was entitled to a home run. After fifteen minutes' heated argument between the umps, the entire Peterborough team and Manager Knotty Lee, Hallinan ruled for three bases—what the runner had made. Peterborough refused to accept the verdict and the team marched off the field. Hallinan awarded the victory to the Beavers 9 to 0.

The Ground Rule.

According to rules Peterborough have a right to claim a home run, but there is a ground rule at the Island which awards but two bags on such a hit. It is the duty of the manager of the home team to advise visitors and umpires of any existing ground rules. This was evidently not done. Hallinan and Landry, twol ocal men trying out as arbitrators in pro. ball, were running along swimmingly until the tenth. Hallinan was exceptionally good on balls and strikes while Landry in the first innings caught Welsh cutting second. Hallinan, without a ruling on the point in question, was forced to use his own judgment, and he could not have given any other decision. The matter will be referred to the league president, who will also be asked as to whether Peterborough were justified in marching off the field and leaving the game unfinished.

Flanagan's Opinion.

Tom Flanagan has the following in the Telegram: The Canadian League team has come and gone for its first appearance before a Toronto audience. They didn't draw well, except on Saturday, but after all, that is no sign of success or future outlook. Every expert in town says they played splendid baseball. Because they had an average of four or five hundred spectators at the games during the week is no argument for or against.

Possibly against the races on week days the International team would not have done much better. The real trial of the Canadians will come when they return here June 11 to open the Motordrome diamond. It is close and handy and there will no longer be any doubt. The fans will either adopt or reject them.

The action of the Peterborough team in refusing to continue yesterday was not exactly the way they should have handled the case. If they were right their chances would have been much better to go on after giving the umpire notice of a protest. Refusing to continue is not the way to handle any situation.

Meanwhile Peterborough, by defaulting, forfeit their share of the gate yesterday. That punishment goes according to constitution to a forfeiting club. The question of the game itself will come before the president in the form of a protest.

They seem to be rather handy with their fists, these Canadian Leaguers. Twice they have been handed stiff fines and suspensions for battling on the field, but again two of them went to it at Erie. More and stiffer penalties will follow until the thing is stopped.

What Good Says.

Charlie Good comments thusly in the News:

There was absolutely no excuse for the action of Manager Blount, of the Peterborough Club, in forfeiting yesterday's game at the Island. Whether his kick was justified or not, he owed it to the public to remain on the field and finish the contest. He did not gain anything by quitting, but rather hurt himself, the club and the league. If the game is ordered replayed, which is altogether likely, the Peterborough Club will not get one cent of the receipts, while in addition they forfeited whatever percentage was coming to them yesterday, and the crowd was the largest of the season at any Canadian League game. Blount is a good player, but he is many degrees removed from being a good manager.

President Fitzgerald would pass no opinion upon the case this morning in the absence of a report from his umpire, but he stated that the league would punish the Peterborough club severely for leaving the field. Blount had good grounds for protest. The ball went out of sight, and he was entitled to a home run according to the rules, though in the International League a hit such as he made is only good for two bases. Apparently, no ground rules were in force yesterday, and Umpire Hallinan had to use his own judgment. He acted perfectly within his rights. The only mistake that he made was in not fining several of the Peterborough players who pulled and hauled him around. The whole affair savoured of the "bush."

The Trouble League.

This is also from the News:

There was another mix-up in the "Trouble League" at the Island yesterday, the Peterborough Club leaving the field with the score tied in the tenth innings, because they were dissatisfied with a decision rendered by Umpire Hallinan. With two out Manager Blount smacked a grounder over third, the ball rolling into the areaway between the grand stand and the bleachers and before Schultz had returned the ball to the diamond Blount reached third base. He, however, claimed that as the ball had gone out of sight that he was entitled to a homer, and in the absence of a ground rule such as prevails in the International League, his contention was doubtless correct. Umpire Hallinan ruled that he must stay at third base, but Blount refused to accept his award, and after holding up the game for fifteen minutes finally took his team off the field and the contest was awarded to Toronto. In view of the fact that he thus ferfeited all right in share of the gate and also any part of the proceeds if the game is ordered replayed his action was altogether childish.

Blount Pulled a "Boot."

The proper course for him to have taken was to have played the game out under protest, but he absolutely refused to finish the combat, and the large crowd, who remained to the finish, despite the chilly atmosphere, came away totally disgusted. Blount displayed a petty spirit throughout, yanking Pitcher Tracey with an unnecessary show of feeling in a tight spot and handling himself generally in "bush league" fashion. The game was hotly fought all the way, with Peterborough always having a slight edge. Roberts was batted out in three periods, and Auld finished the game in good style. Belting started for Peterborough, but after he had been clubbed for three runs he was retired in favour of Tracey, who was chased in the seventh, and Schettler finished up. Schultz's homer to the score board was a feature. Duffy, from Bonaventure College, played short for the Beavers, and showed good form in the field but not at the bat. Blount, with four hits, and Welsh and Ort with three each, led in the batting. Welsh tossed off a triple by failing to touch second in the first innings. He ran all round the bag, evidently considering that it was there for ornamental purposes only.

Entitled to a Homer.

The Star discusses the game as follows:

With the score 6 all and two out in Peterborough's half of the tenth innings, Manager "Curly" Blount drove one of Bobby Auld's slants over third base, the ball bounding into the area between the bleachers and the grand stand. Blount was stopped at third base on Schultz's throw to Isaacs, after the former had recovered the ball.

Blount and other Peterborough players immediately claimed a home run, as the ball had passed from the view of the umpire. Frank Hallinan, who was the umpire at the plate, ordered Blount back to third base, but he would not go. Instead he demanded that he be given a home run. When the International team plays on the Island grounds it is an understood fact that such a hit goes for two bases only, and that is all that Manager Blount was entitled to. Through some hitch this ground rule was not declared to Umpire Hallinan or Manager Blount, of the Peterborough team, and, therefore, it looks as if the Peterborough manager was entitled to a home run, the ball disappearing from view.

However Peterborough would not finish the game unless they were given their point, and after fifteen or twenty minutes of wrangling, during which the disgusted fans got nothing in the stands, Umpire Hallinan gave the game to Toronto.

The News says:

The Leafs and Beavers at last won on the same day, although the Beavers did get their victory by a default.

That was a fine old wrangle at the Island yesterday. Apparently the Canadian League had no rule covering the dispute.

It was the best crowd that the Canadian Leaguers have appeared before this season, and then they disgusted the fans.

Duffy, a new infielder, replaced Murphy, and did well in the fielding line, but looks weak at the bat.

Up until the dispute the game between Peterborough and the Beavers was full of excitement.

Peterborough used three pitchers and the Beavers two.

The Canadian League is full of excitement. A row at the Island, and two players have a fight at Erie.

Schultz's homer was a peach. It went to the score-board in centre field.

Manager Blount had a busy day with the bat, getting four hits in five times up.

Ort lead the Beavers with the bat, getting three safe hits.

Manager Blount may have been right, but he should have continued with the game and made his protest to the league.

A CHALLENGE.

JUNIOR CHURCH LEAGUE.

In a fast game of ball at the Oval last night, the George Street Methodists defeated the Murray Street Baptists by a score of 10—8. Batteries—George Street Methodists—Gumpricht, Helson and McGee; Murray Street Baptists—Ward, Lapp and Thompson.

Ottawa Free Press—Peterborough opens a four-game series to-day, and while the weather was overcast early in the day, the game will be pulled off on schedule if the rain keeps off. The Petes are a good ball club lacking the breaks. They have been beaten by one run margins in almost every contest they have lost. With such a staff of pitchers as Schettler, the ex-Philadelphia National Leaguer, Sterling, Belting, Tracey and young Cresswell, they should be battling up in the first division. Manager Curly Blount is sure to give the Champs a tough argument. Peterborough for two years has figured as Ottawa's greatest bunker. To-day's game is called for 4:30.

FOOTBALL

An interesting soccer match will be played on the Nicholls Oval on Saturday evening, between the above-mentioned teams. Kick-off at 5.30 p. m. Mr. G. East will act as referee. The players are requested to meet at the Post Office at 5 o'clock, sharp. Those interested in soccer should turn out and see the coming game, as it is promised to be fast from start to finish and both teams will be out to win. The Warsaw team were a stronghold in the district last season.

LADIES' GOLF.

The formal opening of the Peterborough Golf Club will take place on Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock. All lady members are requested to be present. Gentlemen members are invited for tea.

Ford

Put the difference in the bank. The saving between Ford cost and heavy car cost is "velvet" for the prudent buyer. He knows the Ford not only saves him dollars but serves him best. It's a better car sold at a lower price and backed with Fords ervice and guarantee.

THE "Y" CAMPAIGN

The Y.M.C.A. campaign which was commenced on Monday last, having as its objective plan to raise $4,500, will be continued for another week. So far, the efforts of the few canvassers who have taken the work to heart, has been most successful, they having raised the sum of $1,700. The citizens are appealed to for support to carry on a work which is recognized as being of a great and beneficial character throughout the world. The expenses incurred in the upkeep of an establishment such as there is in Peterborough are large, and contributions which are made by private donors are insufficient to carry on such an extensive, not to say expensive, work.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN NOTES

Make frequent sowings of your favorite vegetables all season.

Prepare the land well for melons. They should have warm, rich soil.

Early sown spinach, lettuce, and radishes should be ready for the table now.

Grapes should be tied to the trellis, and new shoots which crowd may be removed.

Cucumbers, melons and other vine crops, may go into the ground during May.

Mulch large trees or shrubbery which has been set this spring. It will help to prevent drying out.

Chicken wire makes a neat support for peas and pole beans and does not cost much more than brush.

Was a good bed of strawberries set out this spring? It may still be done, although rather late.

Tomatoes may be staked or grown on a wire fence. Trim to one or two branches. It is more work but larger and better colored fruit results.

Late this month all plants such as tomatoes, egg plant, and peppers may be set out. There is always danger of frost up till the last week of May.

If garden land is not available, now is the time to think about making a window box. Cannas, geraniums, coleus, and trailing vines are stock plants for such work.

Harden off such plants as tomatoes and cabbage before setting them out. This is done by giving air to the plants and by reducing the amount of water for several days before they are put in the field. Cabbage or tomatoes properly hardened off should be of a purplish color and the foliage will be hard and firm.

RUNAWAY ON AYLMER STREET

Dashed Into Gang of Men Who Were Paving the Street

Yesterday afternoon, about 5 o'clock a runaway on Aylmer street caused considerable excitement. A team of horses attached to one of Curtis Bros. delivery rigs, which was standing at the Creamery, after the bricks had been unloaded from the waggon, took fright at a passing automobile and dashed down Aylmer Street. At the corner of Simcoe Street a woman wheeling a baby carriage, dodged to the sidewalk in time to escape the feet of the speeding horses, and about half way between Simcoe and Charlotte Street the outfit struck a pole, breaking the front wheels from the rest of the waggon. With only these attached to a broken pole, the horses swooped down on the men who are paving the street, at the corner of Charlotte and Aylmer Streets and caused a speed scatter of tools and people there. In attempting to turn the corner they were caught. The waggon and harness were both broken beyond repair. The horses were not hurt.

SCOTLAND.

A baker's establishment and villa, owned by Thomas McArthur, at Chryston, near Glasgow, were destroyed by fire a short time ago. Eight inmates, including four children, got through the window on to the roof, where they were rescued.

At Glasgow Licensing Court in the case of billiard saloons, which numbered 86, licenses were granted on the understanding that accommodation was not given for public telephones. In the City Billiard Room the proprietor stated that that would cause great inconvenience to commercial men who attended his rooms.

In Berwickshire Sheriff Court, at Duns, William Lugton, dairyman, Swinton, was fined $15 for selling milk which contained 15 per cent. of added water. He pleaded guilty, and his solicitor said that the water had been added not for pecuniary gain, but in order that he might keep his customers while his supply was short. He could not buy milk to keep his customers going.

At Dumbarton a charge of cruelty to a pony was made against Henry Braid, farmer, Tambowie, it being alleged that he terrified a pony, the property of John Wallace, butcher, by fixing a zinc pail to its tail and causing it to run off a distance of four miles along the road. Accused pleaded guilty, explaining that he only meant to scare off the pony, which was always straying on to the farm. A penalty of $15 was imposed.

BIG GRAIN COMPETITION

New Feature of Prize List of Canadian Exhibition

A Grain and Sheaf Competition, open to the world, is an added feature of this year's prize list of the Canadian National Exhibition, which is now being distributed. The prizes in this competition are $100 and medal each for spring wheat, fall wheat, barley, oats, Flint corn, Dent corn, beans and peas. All exhibits must be the product of the crop of 1913 or 1914, and must be sent through the Minister of Agriculture, Commissioner or Secretary of the Province or State, or Officer in charge of an agricultural department.

The exhibit shall consist of two bushels of grain in sack, accompanied by one sheaf of the same grain. Sheaves are not required for entries of beans and peas.

The other departments of the prize list have been carefully revised, and the total amount to be awarded for live stock and other products of the farm and home is $55,000. The list has been specially framed to protect the interests of the small exhibitor.

The Grenadier Guards' Band from England will feature the music, while two concerts daily will also be given by Creatore's Band, the most famous concert band on the American Continent.

The spectacle, "Babylon," is on a more magnificent scale than ever before, and the other special attractions promise to show marked improvement.

KITCHEN CONVENIENCE

Is your kitchen arranged as conveniently as it ought to be, and might be? Mrs. Christine Frederick, expert in kitchen modelling, has worked out a time-saving, step-saving arrangement by which the various processes follow in logical sequence. Many kitchens, she says, are too large to begin with. That is not likely to be a fault in the modern city house, however. Mrs. Frederick's objection to a "nice roomy kitchen" to work in is that in it one does an unnecessary amount of travelling.

Mrs. Frederick addresses herself to the "average" housekeeper, the one whose kitchen equipment is limited. She it is who needs the most help. The woman of means can secure hired servants to do her bidding, whatever the appointments of the culinary department may be. But the woman of moderate means, who must do her own work and bring up a family besides, is the one who most demands sympathy.

It is this that gives Mrs. Frederick's Experiment Station its greatest value, for with neither gas nor electricity in the house, she has worked out a method of housekeeping that is designed not only to raise the standard of the home, but provide time for relaxation for the busy housewife, which, of course, is the first means to that end.

At the start she discovered that in order to do this, a woman must conduct her home as a man does his business. She must give to every operation its proper value. One important point to be considered is the adjustment of the height of sink, table, range, etc., to suit the worker; and another is the location of the various articles of kitchen furnishing in relation to the work of preparing and clearing away meals. A waste of energy in the kitchen is having the sink and the tables too low.

For clearing away a meal, the same rule applies, only there is the additional assistance of a wheeled tray for the removal of soiled dishes to the kitchen. From the sink to the draining basket and the china cupboard beyond constitutes a set of operations done in the same one, two three order.

A NEW CRUISE FROM THE LOWER LAKE PORTS

Northern Navigation Comp'y Makes Important Announcement

People who take advantage of summer holidays on the Great Lakes will welcome the announcement that the Northern Navigation Company has instituted a new cruise from the lower lake ports.

This company has arranged to operate a line out of Detroit and Cleveland, which will ensure tourists of a nearly all-daylight trip from the lower lakes up to Mackinac, Sault Ste. Marie, Georgian Bay, and the 30,000 Islands and return.

Because it will be a personally conducted affair, this new route over which the steamer Majestic will operate, is sure to find favour with a good many who otherwise would not be interested. The Majestic has been serving the St. Lawrence tourist trade, and is an up-to-date lake liner in every way, having a wide reputation for its dining-room service and sleeping equipment.

None of the historic or natural wonders of the journey will be passed by in the night, and their values will be much better understood when artistically explained by the guides.

Sight-seeing tours at Mackinaw and fishing parties en route are also included in the trip. Little Current, called the finest fishing grounds in America, is one of the places where a fishing trip has been arranged for. Then again, there is a lawn fete and picnic set for Killarney, later the steamer Waubic picks up the tourists for the 30,000 Islands journey.

That historic old kissing rock at Killarney, the Blarney Stone, will surely get its share of affection, as the shore guides at Killarney will see that every person who has a desire to osculate on the famous old bit of granite can do so to their heart's content.

The Majestic has lately been in service down the St. Lawrence, and prior to that served tourist trade on the lakes. It is a thoroughly up-to-date steamer in every way, and well qualified to be a member of the fleet of which the magnificent new s.s. Noronic is the flagship.

Trades And Labour Notes

By the Official Scribe

There was a fair attendance of delegates at the regular meeting of the Council on Wednesday last.

President J. J. Hartley occupied the chair.

Government Labour Bureau.

A reply to the request for a Government Labour Bureau stated that it was too late in the session to deal with the question, but it would be considered early in the next session, probably about six months hence.

Bancroft-Gibbons Testimonial.

A communication was received from Toronto Trades and Labour Council with reference to the proposed Bancroft-Gibbons testimonial. Every worker in the Province of Ontario should take this opportunity of showing their appreciation of the excellent work done by Bros. Bancroft and Joe. Gibbons in conection with the Workmen's Compensation Act.

The Political Situation.

An interesting discussion took place with reference to the forthcoming Provincial elections. Several of the delegates were of the opinion that the Trades and Labour Council should nominate a candidate to uphold the cause of labour, and it was suggested that Bro. Dave Moore, formerly president of the Council, be asked to accept the nomination. It was pointed out that a thorough organization of the workers was necessary to ensure success, and it would not be wise to enter a candidate at this time, as only a few weeks would elapse before the elections took place. It was finally decided not to enter the contest, but it was strongly urged that the work of organization proceed at once, and that candidates be prepared to contest 11 elections.

Still They Come.

It was reported that a meeting in connection with the organization of the labourers had been held on the previous Monday evening. The result was most satisfactory, and an application for a charter had been sent to the International Hod Carriers' Building and Common Labourers' Union of America.

Letter to Board of Works.

It was alleged that the City Dads had been handing out work to a certain local firm, without having given other firms in the same line of business an opportunity to put in contracts. The secretary was instructed to write to the Board of Works with reference to this matter.

Medical Inspection In Schools Is Declared Wrong

The following may be of interest to local readers, especially parents, whose children are now attending the Public schools:

Medical inspection of schools is absolutely wrong in principle, says Dr. Graham Chambers of Toronto in an article entitled the Family Physician and Public Health, which appeared in the Canadian Journal of Medicine and Surgery.

"My reason for believing that it is wrong in principle is that it tends to undermine the influence of the family physician," says the doctor. "If he were recognized as he ought to be, as one whose special function consists in the prevention of disease, he is in a position owing to his intimate acquaintance with the history and environment of his patients, to do more good than the medical inspection of—say a hundred—officers of any medical health department.

"The medical inspection of school children by a medical health official can never be anything but superficial, because the time is limited, it is impossible to obtain a complete record of each individual case and even if he detects conditions which render treatment advisable, the only means at his command for carrying such treatment into effect is by reporting the facts to the parents of the child who are very apt to minimize their importance and the more so because the physician recommending the treatment is a stranger to them.

"I think that in order to make medical inspection more effective its character should be more educative and less inspective."

Don't Swat That Fly

Mashing flies is unsanitary and dangerous because it always leaves the disease germs to be distributed through the house when dry.

WILSON'S FLY PADS kill both flies and disease germs, and they kill them all.

Just think of it! One ten-cent packet of WILSON'S FLY PADS has actually killed a bushel of flies.

No other fly killer gives results at all approaching this.

All druggists and grocers sell WILSON'S FLY PADS.

A Matter of Initials.

An engineer who was repairing a railway line in South Africa found a cosy farmhouse, which he proceeded to occupy.

Promptly came a telegram which read:

"G. T. M. wants house."

The engineer wondered who "G. T. M." might be. On inquiry he found it referred to the general traffic manager.

"All right," he murmured. So he wired back:

"G. T. M. can G. T. H."

Two days later there came a very indignant and self-important gentleman. It was the general traffic manager. In coldly polite tones he asked the engineer what he meant by sending such an insolent message.

The engineer said innocently:

"Why, it wasn't insolent."

"What do you mean, then, by saying I can G. T. H.?"

"Simply an abbreviation," explained the engineer. "I wired that the G. T. M.—the general traffic manager—can G. T. H.—get the house."

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By LOUIS TRACY

"No," he managed to say. "You must not read that. It is meant for me alone. But give it to me. I—I am afraid of falling. My head——"

Vastly puzzled, the guide handed him the half-folded sheet of paper. The bald explanation that Mrs. Power had "left" her husband "forever" sounded like the wildest variety of moon-madness. In Granite's own phrase, he had never before clapped eyes on two sich genuwine lovebirds as Nancy and Derry, not in all his born nateral, and to be told that one had deserted the other merely went to prove that the speaker had gone plumb crasy. For a time, indeed, he was convinced that Power was suffering from a slight sunstroke, because they had paddled nearly two miles while facing the sun, whose rays were reflected in a glowing path on the surface of the lake. Such attacks, though infrequent, were not unknown in that high region. When reaction set in, and Mrs. Power returned, the patient would become violently sick, and a few hours of complete rest would complete his cure.

"Jest go right inside an' set yerself dsown," he said cheerfully. "Me an' the dawg 'll git on Madam's trail in a brace o' shakes. We'll bring her back, you bet, an' of you kinder feel as though you'd swallered a live rabbit, wall, let it bolt!"

Power uttered no protest. If he was capable of any definite sensation, it was one of relief that the friendly guide meant to leave him alone. He stumbled into the hut, and collapsed on a chair, burying his face in his hands. He heard Peter's lively command to the dog. "After her, Guess! Hark to it, Pup! Keep yer nose to the ground, an' I'll do the rest," as if the man's voice and the eager whimpering of the hound had travelled through a long tunnel before reaching his ears. The sounds of the chase soon died away among the trees. A great silence fell, and seemed to wrap him in a pall that would never unfold again. Fearing lest his brain might yield under the strain, he spread the letter open on the table, and read it many times. At first eyes and mind were equally incapable of mastering its contents; but a subconscious knowledge that he must either understand those vague words or go mad in time enabled their sense to penetrate the gathering mists.

And this is what he read:

"Derry, I am leaving you. Mr. Willard has followed us. He is here with me now. He has forced me to believe that duty demands my return to Hugh Marten; so I am going. It is best so. Derry, don't grieve for me. If I thought——(these three words were cancelled). Derry forgive me. I can write no more. My poor heart is breaking.

"NANCY."

Slowly, through a haze of pain, certain incongruities were revealed in the curt, disconnected sentences. Never before, in all the years he had known her, had Nancy alluded to her father as "Mr. Willard." Even during these later days, when the discovery of a parent's treachery was a prime factor in her seemingly irrevocable decision to dissolve her marriage, she spoke of him invariably in terms of affection. Indeed, Power had practised some measure of duplicity by pretending to agree with her hopeful prophecy of a speedy reconciliation between Willard and himself. He believed he had summed up the man's character only too well. Such a mean nature would assuredly remain stubborn in its hostility; in fact, he was prepared to encounter greater difficulties and annoyance from Willard than from Marten, and meant to persuade Nancy to take a world-tour of some years' duration as soon as the divorce was secured, and they were legally married. Why, then, should it be "Mr. Willard" who had followed them, and not "my father," or "Dad?"

And what an extraordinary plea she had put forward to excuse her precipitate flight? "He has forced me to believe that duty demands my return to Hugh Marten!" When had woman ever convinced herself more thoroughly than Nancy that "duty" did not "demand" the sacrifice of her whole life? Had she not weighed "duty" in the balance, and found it wanting, before she cast all other considerations to the winds, and fled from Newport with the man she loved? But "Mr. Willard" had "forced" that view upon her. Forced! A strange word! Had he threatened to murder her? Had she written that letter at the dictation of a maniac? Why, of course! The notion stung Power to the quick, and he groaned aloud. How crass and blind had been his anguished spirit when first it quivered under the shock of her disappearance! How much wiser and saner was Peter Granite! Even Guess, the dog, read the riddle aright, and had urged instant action. And how fortunate that these two faithful friends had raced off in pursuit rather than wait at the cabin until belated reason shed its light on the brain of the one person in the world Nancy must have trusted to understand her dilemma. At the thought of his failure to grasp the essential elements of a mystery that was simplicity itself when analysed in cold logic, the blood rushed through his veins like a stream of molten metal, and he leaped to his feet, all afire now to be up and doing. He ran out, and was plunging wildly into the tangle of forest and scrub, when it occurred to him that undirected search in that wilderness was worse than useless. He was no Indian, skilled in jungle lore, that he should discern the tracks of pursued and pursuers, and follow them unerringly. Better possess his soul in patience until some sight or sound announced the return of Peter — with Nancy. Oh, yes, Peter and the dog would soon overtake that vengeful old man and his terrified victim! Pray Heaven there might be no opportunity given Willard to do evil to the girl who had thwarted his plans! Yet how often had the chance to do ill deeds made ill deeds done. Power wilted now under a horrible doubt which brought fresh tortures. He listened for the distant pistol-shot which might shatter his new-found hope. Perforce, he stilled his frenzy, and stood in anguished silence.

But no sound of death-dealing weapon jarred on the brooding solitude of that lake amid the hills; the earliest intimation he received of the real nature of his loss was when Granite and the dog came back — alone.

He strode a few paces to meet his allies, and in that moment of black despair the pride of his manhood sustained him, and choked the bitter words, the fierce ravings, the storming of the very heavens, which tore and raged for utterance, yet were so futile and helpless in the one way that mattered—the rescue of his lost love.

"So, then, you could not overtake them?" he said, and, if Granite had not seen Power when the blow fell, he would never have estimated the volcanic fury of the furnace hidden under Power's unemotional voice and manner.

"No, sir," came the quiet answer. "Thar was hosses in waitin', three hosses. They've circled the head of the lake, an' I saw Mrs. Power's dress as they rode away from the hotel."

The perplexed guide deemed it best to blurt out the actual facts. He thought, and rightly so, that any attempt to minimise the full extent of the tragedy would only add to Power's suffering when he knew the truth. Nor was he comforted in the least by the unnatural calm with which his news was received.

"But, look-a here, Mr. Power!" he protested earnestly. "I'm ready to swear on the biggest Testament ever prent that your good lady didn't vamoose of her own free will. Leave you? Gol-darn it, that's a bit too rich fur me ter believe! Who's tuk her, anyhow? Why did she go? What sort of a spiel did the cuss put up that she walked off with him — when she had a gun; an' Guess was here, an' she must ha seen you an' me comin' in the canoe?"

"The man was her father. This quarrel is between him and me. Peter, we must cross the lake at once. We can hire horses at the hotel?"

Granite shook his head sorrowfully. The affair was beyond his comprehension; but it was his business to undeceive his employer if he was counting on the chance of overtaking the vanished pair.

"Sorry," he said. "This yer plot was well laid. They run three hags at the hotel, an' the hull blamed bunch hit the pike fur Racket."

Racket was the nearest station, the terminus of a short railway serving the Forked Lake district. It lay six miles away! With the start Willard had secured, he would be at the rail-head before the others had crossed the lake. But Power knew he would go mad if compelled to remain in the cabin when Nancy was not there, and Granite made no further effort to detain him.

"We'll travel a heap quicker if we unload them stores," was all he said, and Power turned instan'' to help in the work. When Peter had occasion to enter the cabin, he examined the gun, and found the two cartridges.

"Gosh!" he muttered. "She tuk 'em out herself. I allow she didn't want ter shoot her own father; but she must hev' damn well felt like it!"

Then he eyed the dog.

"Wish you could talk, Pup," he said. "Your long lugs heerd what passed atween them two, an' I guess it kinder tried you good hard ter keep yer teeth outen that old sinner's leg."

Power spoke no word until the canoe rested by the side of the small landing-stage provided by the hotel. Bidding the guide await his return, he hastened into the building, and found the proprietor. Yes, a Mr. Francis had registered two days ago. He had rented a room overlooking the lake, and had hired the hotel's three horses this morning. Two of the animals were carrying him and a lady to Racket, and the rider of the third was a groom, who had charge of Mr. Francis's grip, and who would bring the nags back from the depot. Mr. Francis seemed to be in a desperate hurry; but that was not to be wondered at if he meant to catch the next south-bound train, there being just fifty minutes in which to cover the five miles. There was no other train until the night mail, which was due to leave Racket at seven o'clock. The hotel possessed a buggy; but Mr. Francis refused to use it. In fact, he was willing to pay any price for the horses; though it was most inconvenient that there should not even be one horse left in the stable, as it might be wanted in an emergency.

Power thanked his informant, who doubtless wondered what whiff of excitement had stirred this remote corner of New York state that morning, but gleaned little from his cool, self-contained questioner. Indeed, Power raised only one more point — could he be driven to Racket for the late train?—and was assured that there would be no difficulty in that respect.

Then Peter received his orders.

"Pack Mrs. Power's baggage and mine, and bring everything here," said Power. "I want you to remain in the cabin till you hear from me; but come to the hotel every day for a letter or telegram."

Granite nodded, and paddled off silently and swiftly. He understood, not all, but some part, of Power's mood. There were ordeals from which any man would flinch, and high among these for the bereaved husband (as the guide deemed him) would rank the heartbreaking task of sorting out and folding Nancy's clothes, and replacing her toilet requisites in a dressing-case. Each garment would speak of her with a hundred mouths, each tiny silver article and cut-glass bottle would recall the grace of her gestures when she was brushing her luxuriant hair or shrugging her slim shoulders in laughing protest against Derry's clumsiness as a lady's-maid.

Before Peter returned, a luncheon-gong boomed from the porch of the hotel, and a number of men came in from their canoes or fishing-punts. One of a small party noticed Power sitting on a shaded seat in the little garden which ran down to the water's edge.

"Isn't that the man with the pretty wife who lives in Granite's shack?" he asked. "He looks as though he'd lost a dollar and found a nickel."

"P'raps he's lost his missis," laughed another.

"No fear. They're a honeymoon couple if ever there was one. Why, when he comes here for stores she stands at the door of the hut the whole time he is absent, watching him all the way here and waving to him all the way home again."

The hotelkeeper, noting Power's absence from the dining-room sent a maid to remind him that the meal was being served.

DINED ON JACKALS.

But There Was Other Food the Arabs Simply Would Not Eat.

Describing the Mohammedans of Algeria in his book, "The Barbary Coast," Albert Edwards says he discovered that with the exception of the obvious difference in clothing they seemed to be very much like other men, although "they do not care for the same things—at least not for the same reasons." Of this he had a striking example during his first winter in Algeria:

"I had asked my host about the jackals which howled the night through in the brousse about his home. I was curious to know how much they resembled the coyotes of our western plains. A few days later he called me from my desk with the news that some of his Arab workmen had trapped a jackal. I followed him out into the patio and found a half dozen natives squatted about an earthen pot. Two of them were holding the animal while another skinned it. A jackal looks like nothing but a very sick and mangy dog. I can not imagine anything less appetizing. I was surprised and rather nauseated to see that the men were preparing the beast for cooking.

"'Do the natives eat these things?' I disgustedly asked my host in French.

"The man who seemed to be the chief cook understood the language of the conquerors. He looked up swiftly.

"'Yes,' he growled, 'but we don't eat pig.'

"I thought of our slaughter house scandals and the doubtful cleanliness of our food supply and felt very much like the owner of a glass house who had thoughtlessly begun to throw stones."

IVORY CARVING IN CHINA.

Only Six Expert Workers in Forty Shops in Canton.

There are in Canton about forty shops which make and sell ivory articles. Each store is small, consisting usually of a showroom open to the street and a back room, where the cutting is done. Members of the store also usually work in the showroom. The industry may be divided into two stages, cutting and carving. Tusks imported from Siam constitute the raw material. These are first cut with a saw to the shape capable of being worked up by carving. The cutting apparatus consists of a wooden block or vise, a saw and a tub of water. The ivory is secured firmly by the vise, moistened with water and cut to the required shape.

Perfectly flat pieces of ivory nearly as thin as paper were shown in evidence of the skill of the cutter. The cutting finished, the blocks are then carved into shape with knives of many different shapes. These have a short blade and a long handle made of bamboo, like a penholder. Other instruments noted to be in use by the carvers were wire saws and a gimlet worked by a leather twirling apparatus.

The number of expert workers in Canton is far less than the number of stores, being only about six in number. An expert carver seldom works in the shop which employs him. He generally works in his own house and can earn about $30 Canton currency a month.—Consular Reports.

DELIGHTS OF SKIING.

Perfection of Motion and a New Risk With Every Turn.

The delightful sensation of skiing is thus described by Arnold Lunn in Cornhill:

"Skiing is the perfect motion. I shall not qualify this dogmatic statement till I find a good ski runner who prefers some other form of speed. I have met runners who have tried everything from an aeroplane to a racing car, from a steeplechase to a Cresta toboggan run. One and all placed skiing above all rivals. Aeroplanes used to raise uneasy doubts till I met a distinguished air man, who told me that he found skiing more exciting. After the first novelty wears off—so he said—flying becomes monotonous. One patch of air is very much like another. Wind pockets are exceptional, whereas the snowy hillside is full of traps for the unwary.

"The ski runner sweeps down the hillside erect with a natural and graceful poise. He creates pace without the aid of machinery. Skiing is autochthonous; it is born of the Mother Earth. Between you and the hillside there is an inch of sensitive ash that pulses with every beat of the slope. The skis form an intimate link between you and the ever changing surface.

"As they rise and fall, leaping over hillocks, sinking into dips, they seem at once living vital things, with a will and a joy that is all their own. And this is the peculiar glory of our craft. It forces us to a knowledge of nature in one of her most fascinating moods. The ski runner must adapt his tactics to every change in the hillside, to every fickle fancy of the snow. The skater and the skeleton rider soon learn to know the tricks of the rink or ice run. But the hills are never the same, the snow is never the same; every slope is a revelation, every snowfall a new discovery."

His Whiskers Saved.

The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, the patriarch of the crowned heads of Europe, some time ago formed the resolution to shave off the whiskers which make his physiognomy so familiar all the world over. The protests of his family and the feeling which the announcement of this decision caused in court circles, however, have induced the aged monarch to reconsider the matter.

Velocity of the Sun.

Professor Boss has been pursuing his researches to redetermine the translational velocity of the sun through space. The figures which he arrives at are 14.0 miles per second. He regards the speed formerly obtained by spectroscopic methods—namely, 12.4 miles per second—as subject to systematic error.

"We, the People of England."

Every one has heard of "the three tailors of Tooley street," but it is not generally known that only two of them were actually tailors. The three men were John Gross, tailor, Tooley street; Thomas Satterly, tailor, Weston street, and George Sandham, grocer, Bermondsey street. They were accustomed to meet after business hours at a public house in Tooley street in Southwark to drink beer, smoke their pipes, talk politics and discuss public affairs. During the movement for Catholic emancipation, when Canning was prime minister, these three worthies determined to petition parliament on the subject, and they commenced the document with these words, "We, the people of England!"—London Express.

Shakespeare's Descendants.

Besides his first child, Susanna, Shakespeare's only other children were a boy and a girl, twins, born in 1585. Susanna married a Dr. Hall, a Stratford physician, in 1607, was left a widow in 1635 and died in 1640. She had only one child, a daughter, who, though twice married, left no children. Of the twins, the boy, named Hamnet, died at the age of eleven, and the girl, Judith, married Thomas Quincy and had three sons, who all died childless.

What the Hoofs Tell.

Equestrian statues on the battlefield of Gettysburg all follow a general rule which sculptors have adopted as an arbitrary convention. If two feet of the horse are in the air the rider was killed. If one foot is lifted from the ground the rider was wounded. If all four feet are planted on the pedestal then it signifies that the subject of the statue was not [illegible] New York World.

DESERVED THE LEGACY.

The Gift Left by the Old Turk Was Properly Bestowed.

A Turkish story reads that a pious man bequeathed a fortune to his son, charging him to give £100 to the meanest man he could find and £100 to the most foolish.

The most foolish man is another story. As to the meanest, accounts agreed that a certain cadi filled the bill. Accordingly the dutiful son offered him £100.

"But I can't take your £100," said the cadi. "I never knew your father. There was no reason why he should leave me the money."

"It's yours all right," persisted the mourning youth.

"I might take it in a fictitious transaction," said the cadi, relenting. "Suppose—I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll sell you all that snow in the courtyard for £100."

The young man agreed, willing to be quit of his trust on any terms. Next day he was arrested, taken before the cadi and ordered to remove his snow at once. As this was a command the young man was utterly unable to execute, he was fined £20 by the cadi for contumacy.

"At least," the young man said ruefully as he left the court, "father's £100 went to the right man."—New York World.

RUSSIA A DANCING NATION.

And Red Is the All Pervading Color of the Real Native.

"Red is the obsessing color of the real Russian. His word for beautiful is 'prekrasnee,'" says a writer, which means literally 'very red.' A peasant girl in gala dress is red from the scarf on her head to her bright red boots, often relieved only by the white blouse, on which again is red embroidery. The snow white steps of state in the Kremlin are called the 'red stairs' as a tribute to their beauty and with no suggestion of their color.

"Russia is not barbaric. It is simple and childlike, whence its enormous charm. And it is a dancing nation; the dances are national, unique and quite unoriental. Peasants may be seen in their log built villages dancing away until they almost drop from fatigue. The Russian dance is full of vitality, spontaneous and strenuous; the eastern dance is restrained, suggestive and sometimes sinuous.

"Russian literature is supposed to be consistently gloomy. Of course there is a tendency to depression, but it would be equally correct to assume that German literature consists only of classical annotations and scientific treatises."—Chicago News.

Teaching the Visitors.

How to look at pictures is now being taught in the National Art Gallery. For ninety years the public have been compelled to wander about the Gallery looking at famous paintings in an aimless way. Now all this is changed, and recently, for the first time, an official guide and lecturer in the person of M. Kaines Smith, conducted a little band of twenty-five art enthusiasts, and lectured to them for an hour on the old masters of the Dutch, Flemish, and Spanish schools. The pictures by Rembrandt were chiefly dealt with, and it was pointed out how, by the manner in which the picture was painted, it is possible to tell at what period of his life the picture was executed.

THE "EXAMINER"
419 GEORGE STREET . . PETERBOROUGH

A PAGE OF THE BEST HUMOR OF THE WEEK

It Often Pleases.

"It is the duty of every one of you to make at least one person happy during the week," said the Sunday school teacher. "Have you?"

"I did," said Johnny promptly.

"That's nice. What did you do?"

"I went to see my aunt, and she's always happy when I go home again."

The Ready Tale.

A second-hand picture dealer was trying to sell what he described as a genuine Raphael.

"The signature does not look like Raphael," remarked the prospective customer, after using his magnifying glass. "It reads more like 'Racner!'"

"Ah," said the dealer, "I will tell you the history of that. When Raphael painted that picture he was heavily in debt, so he put it in the wife's name for safety!"

A Sign That Failed.

"Did Brown have a good time on his excursion?"

"On the contrary, he experienced one of the greatest disappointments of his life."

"What was it?"

"He was fagged out, and then he started running to a building where he saw 'BAR' on a window, and when he reached the spot he found it was a burglar's sign with one of the panes knocked out."

"It's such a silly superstition to be always picking up pins."

"You may call it a superstition if you wish, but I know a chap who makes about a pound a week by doing it."

"How can a fellow gather that many?"

"He works in a bowling alley."

The Usual Compliments.

Mr. Fogarty (in proposing the bride's health): "An' it's meself is proud to say I 've known the bride this forty year."

The Bride: "It's a thunderin' liar you are, Fogarty, me bein' only just turned thirty wan un' a half."

A Quiet Departure.

Mrs. Smith was engaging a new servant, and sat facing the latest applicant.

"I hope," said she, "that you had no angry words with your last mistress before leaving."

"Oh, dear, no, mum; none whatever," the prospective maid replied, with a toss of her head. "While she was having her bath, I just locked the bathroom door, took all my things, and went away as quietly as possible."

Power of Wealth.

"Wombat's wife wants to go on the stage."

"Well, he's rich enough to build a theatre for her."

"Yes, and to hire an audience."

At a negro wedding, when the clergyman read the words "love, honor and obey," the bridegroom interrupted and said: "Read that again, sah! Read it once mo', so's de lady kin fetch de full solemnity ob de meanin'. I'se been married befo'."

A German farmer was in search of a driving horse.

"I've got just the horse for you," said the liveryman. "He's five years old, sound as a dollar and goes ten miles without stopping."

The German drew his head skyward.

"Not for me," he said, "not for me. I lif eight miles from town, and mit dot horse I haf to valk back two miles."

THE WANDERING JEW.
The Patient: I vont to gif all mine money avay!
The Doctor: (to himself): Undoubtedly delirus.

Wary.

A woman, wearing an anxious expression, called at an insurance office one morning.

"I understand," she said, "that for five dollars I can insure my house for a thousand dollars in your company."

"Yes," replied the agent, "that is right. If your house burns down we pay you one thousand dollars."

"And," continued the woman anxiously, "do you make any inquiries as to the origin of the fire?"

"Certainly," was the prompt reply; "we make the most careful inquiries, madam."

"Oh!"—and she turned to leave the office—" I thought there was a catch in it somewhere."

Improving The Occasion.

He had obtained a place in an estate agent's office, and was doing everything he could for the interests of his employer. The other evening he was at a social gathering, and was asked to [illegible] responded with "Home, Sweet Home." His friends were a little surprised at the selection, but it was heartily applauded. Stepping forward he said: "I am glad you like the song. There is nothing like Home, Sweet Home,' and let me say that the company I represent is selling homes on terms to suit everybody within forty minutes' ride of the city. Everybody ought to have a home. If you don't want to live in one of these houses yourself, it's the chance of your life for an investment."

"Cook has been dreadful today. I had to send for a policeman."

"What, to arrest her?"

"No, to pacify her."

Sir George Reid, the genial high commissioner for the Australian Commonwealth, who has just returned from a visit to Australia, is enormously popular "down under."

When he was made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George the people of Australia who had known him as plain George Reid worried a good deal about his new dignity. At one of his meetings a heckler called out, sarcastically:

"Say, Sir George, what does K.C.M.G. mean?"

Without a moment's hesitation the new K.C.M.G. replied:

"Keep calling me George!"

Soon Looking.

"Mother," said Bobby, after a full week of obedience, "have I been a good boy lately?"

"Yes, dear," replied his mother, "a very, very good boy."

"And do you trust me?" he continued.

"Why, of course, mother trusts her little boy!" she answered.

But the chastened child was not pacified. "I mean really, really trust me, you know," he explained.

"Yes, I really, really trust you," nodded his mother. "Why do you ask?"

"Just because," said Bobby, diving his hands into his pockets and looking her in the face. "If you trust me like you say you do, why do you go on hiding the jam?"

Ocean Voyager: Don't the passengers make you tired with the questions they ask?

Captain: Yes, indeed; what else is it you want to know?

No Hurry.

While a reporter was telephoning his story from Sing-Sing early yesterday morning, a convict hammering on the floor made it hard for the reporter to hear. "Would you mind stopping for a few minutes?" asked the reporter.

"All right, boss," said the convict, "go to it. I got twenty years to finish this job."

A man had stayed out at a banquet very, very late. He awoke in the dawn and saw, perched on the foot of his bed, an organ-grinder's monkey that had climbed in thru the window.

His hands trembling, his eyes bloodshot, the man drew his revolver from beneath his pillow and said:

"If you're a real monkey, it's a bad lookout for you; and if you're not, it's a bad lookout for me."

"You may cackle, my son," said Smithy, "about our big fleet, our efficient army, and our wonderful resources, but you must, in spite of our so-called flying corps, admit we are miles behind in the airship biz. America, France, and Germany are all before us in the flying game."

"Quite right; they should be," replied Private Brown. "I've never known England fly before a foreign power yet!"

A race had just been run off, and the bar was thronged with the "boys."

"What's the funniest thing I've ever seen?" remarked the sporting gent in the check suit. "Well, I guess it was a dead-heat in an event where there was only one entry."

"How in the world was that?" asked a friend. "Was it a horse-race?"

"No," answered the sporting gent; "it was a cremation! You pay."

When Prince Victor of Hohenlohe Langenburg was serving as a midshipman his vessel touched at a port where there was an English garrison, and the commanding officer came on board. He asked the captain whether there was not a prince related to Queen Victoria among his officers. "Ought I to call him 'Your Highness' or 'Your Serene Highness'?" he inquired.

"Please yourself," said the captain. "We always call him 'Sausage,' because he's a German."

Mad Not Gone.

He was a new customer from the country, and he had given a fairly large order. The courteous old senior partner was conducting him over the establishment, and the various improvements caused Mr. Giles boundless astonishment. A fabric telephone interested him as much as anything. He had never seen anything of the sort before.

"It is a great convenience to us," explained the senior partner. "You see, I can communicate with all our departments without moving from my seat here."

"My, that's wonderful!" said Giles. "Can I try it for myself?"

"Certainly."

The visitor got himself switched on to the packing-room.

"Have Mr. Giles of Madbury's goods been sent off yet?" he inquired.

Back came the answer:

"No; we haven't packed 'em yet. We're waiting for a telegram from his town; he looks like a slippery customer."

Quite True.

The vicar of a mining village sent a pair of boots to the cobbler's for repairs, but Bill, who had been imbibing rather freely, felt no inclination for work, so the boots were not touched that day. Next morning his nerves were rather shaky and he longed for "a hair of the dog that bit him." His own boots were rather dirty, so he thought there was no harm in putting on the parson's, which he accordingly did, and turned off into the village pub for a big "reviver." He had not gone very far when whom did he meet but the vicar, who said:

"I sent my boots down for repairs, William. Are you not finished with them yet?"

"Wey, maister," answered Bill, calmly, "they're not mended yit, but they're on the road."

At the Soccer Game.

It was over a simple penalty kick. The argument grew more heated, and the rival captains protested in wrangling heedless of the referee's presence and authority.

"You're a fool!" yelled the captain of the Wasteground Wanderers.

"And you're a liar!" roared the captain of the Sandrut Normads.

The referee saw his chance and seized it. "Now that the captains have identified each other," said he, "we will proceed with the game."

The Reason Why.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," observed the Sunday-school teacher severely, to the small girl who had but too obviously omitted to wash her face that morning. "Look at your little brother; see how nice and clean he is."

The small girl sniffed. "Well," she replied, "it's 'is birfday."

Sandy (newly arrived in the Canadian forest land): "Whatna beast's yon?"

Native: "A young moose."

Sandy: "Ooh, haud yer tongue! If that's a young moose, I'd like to see ane o'yer auld rats!"

She weighed close upon twenty stone, but she insisted on entering the crowded tramcar, and as she stood and swayed with the movement of the car she waxed sarcastic.

"If there were any gentlemen in the car," she said, "they would not allow a lady to stand!"

And then little Dobbins got up from his seat with a sigh.

"Don't be cross, ma'am," he said. "I'll make one towards it!"

A newly-married young woman had a gas cooker fixed in her kitchen. The gas company sent her a card of rules, with instructions to study them well, and what she couldn't understand they would explain to her. Imagine the clerk's surprise the next morning when he read the following note:—

"Dear Sir,—I can understand all the rules except the one at the bottom of the card— 'See other side.' It's impossible to see the other side; the man has fixed it against the wall."

The late Rev. Silvester Horne, who represented Ipswich in Parliament, used to tell an amusing story concerning a visit which Mr. Balfour once paid to that town. An old lady, hard of hearing, seeing the crowd of people outside the station and the extra police present, mixed up the Unionist leader's arrival with the Ipwich Assizes, and asked a neighbor for whom they were waiting. When she was told it was Mr. Balfour, the old lady said:—

"Well, I suppose if the poor man has done anything wrong he's got to suffer for it."

A revival was being conducted by a muscular preacher. He was disturbed by two young men who scoffed at everything they saw or heard.

He paused and asked them why they had attended the meeting.

"We came to see miracles performed," imprudently replied one of them.

Leaving the pulpit and walking quietly down the aisle, the minister seized one after the other by the collar and, as they disappeared out of the door, remarked:—

"We don't perform miracles here, but we do cast out devils."

"So you were bound and gagged by bandits while in Italy, were you?" asked a sarcastic man of a friend who had traveled. "Regular comic-opera bandits, eh?"

"No," said the other. "There was nothing of the comic-opera style about them. The gags they used were all new."

Questionable Praise.

A well known bishop, as he was going about his diocese, stopped the porter of a lunatic asylum, and asked how a chaplain whom he, the bishop, had lately appointed was getting on. "Oh, my lord," said the man, "he preaching is most successful. The idiots henjoys it partickler."

Admiral Dewey, on being complimented on his superb health, smiled and said:—

"I attribute my good condition to plenty of exercise and no banquets. One-third of what we eat, you know, enables us to live."

"In that case," said his friend, jestingly, "what becomes of the other two-thirds?"

"Oh," said the Admiral, "that enables the doctor to live."

Waiter and Lawyer.

A gentleman prominent in legal circles had entered a cafe and was immediately approached by a waiter, who remarked, cheerily:

"I have devilled kidneys, pigs' feet, and calves' brains."

The lawyer surveyed him coolly.

"Have you?" he replied. "Well, what are your ailments to me? I came in here to eat."

Mr. Callahan (reflectively): "Ash Wednesday—Harvey Tuse-Tuesday—Good Friday—say, this is a new one on me!" —The Masses.

Some Ceremony.

Mr. Jinks (bawling from bathroom): Suffering cats! Emily, who put the broken glass in the tub?

Mrs. Jinks (hurrying to the scene): Gracious sakes! I haven't the slightest idea—oh, come to think of it, Willie invited a few friends in this afternoon to see the launching of his new battleship and he must have christened it with something!

A Small Detail.

Enthusiastic reporter (to city editor): I've got a story here about a man who drank poison, cut an artery in his wrist, shot himself, and jumped into the river in an attempt to commit suicide. Somebody pulled him out, sent him to a hospital, and he's going to live. It's a cracking good yarn.

City editor: What's his name?

Reporter: I didn't bother to get that. I thought you would want just the big features for the noon edition, and I could get the details afterward.

Fifty Years Hence.

Deacon: What did you find in the cornerstone of the old church that was torn down?

Minister: A copy of a Biblical novel, a moving-picture film of a white slave drama, and a school lesson on sex hygiene. They were of such a nature, however, that we had to destroy them.

Dramatic Values.

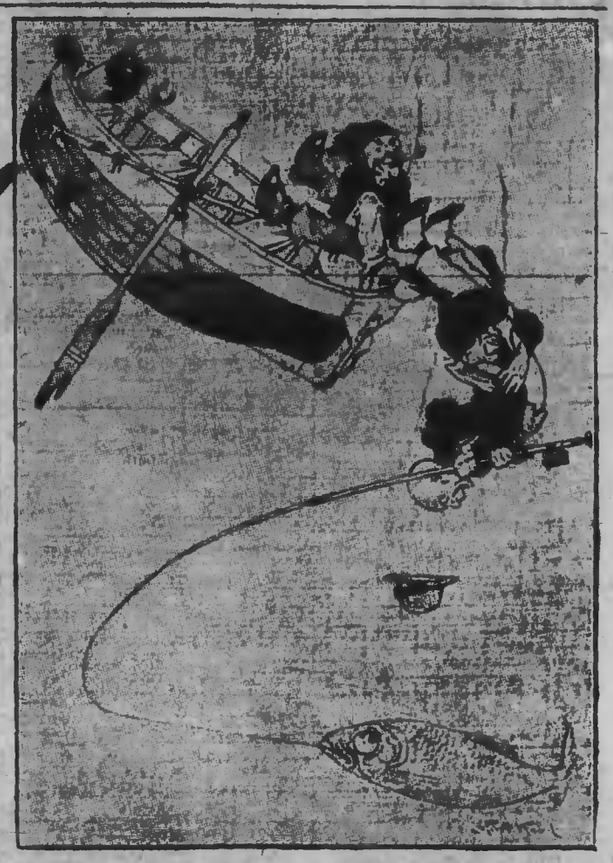
City Nephew: "But don't you want to see this show, Uncle? It's the best in town, two dollars and fifty cents a ticket."

Uncle Eben (visiting in the city): "No-siree! We'd be sure to get stung. I tell yo it's a living impossibility for any gal to kick ten times as high as that twenty-five cent show we saw last night."

Overjoked.

First Chorus Girl: Well, how do I look now, Madge?

Second Chorus Girl: I think you look a little slovenly, tonight, dear. Take another bead off your necklace.



THE INCOMPLETE ANGLER.
The Man in the Boat: Take yer time, Sir, and play 'im. We've got yer.

...LY FROM THE TEMPERATE ZONE...
...Have you given the goldfish any fresh water today,
...y: No, Mam. They ain't drunk as the water I gave them the ...day yet, Mam.

Wilson Barrett used to tell an amusing story against himself. At a time when he had a lot of workmen redecorating his private residence, thinking to give them a treat, he asked if, after work one evening, they would like to have seats to go and see him play in "The Lights of London," at the Princess' Theatre.

They said they didn't mind; if they did, and being complimentary tickets, all went on a Saturday night to see their employer's performance.

At the end of the week Barrett's eye caught sight of this item against each workman's name on the pay-sheet: "Saturday night, Four hours' overtime at Princess' Theatre, eight shillings."

The guests at the table were discussing diets.

"I lived on eggs and milk for two months," remarked one lady, "and gained ten pounds."

"And I," said a gentleman, "lived for over a year on nothing but milk and gained in weight every day."

"Mercy!" came the chorus. "How did you manage to do it?"

The gentleman smiled. "I cannot say that I remember," he replied; "but I presume my method was similar to that of other babies."

Such a Shock.

Philosopher: "Hot today? Wait. Do you know that in seventy million years the earth will fall into the sun?"

Business Man (who has long-time investments): "Great Scott! What's that you say?"

Philosopher: "I said that in seventy million years the earth would fall into the sun."

Business Man (wiping the fear-beads from his brow and apparently much relieved): "Oh, I thought you said seven million years."

GET'S IT?
He: Really, dear, you've eaten next to nothing.
She: (Piteously): Oh, I always do that when I sit next to you.

LITTLE GIFTS FOR THE BRIDE

A bride is usually provided with lingerie, but there are many accessories that may be given by the girl friend. Dainty nightgowns are of soft silk, crepe de Chine or wash taffeta. They are trimmed with real Valenciennes and narrow filet or with effective imitations of these same laces. Generous bows of wash ribbon should be used as a finishing touch.

Petticoats, too, make charming gifts; and as they require only a bit of material, they can, with a little ingenuity and the use of fine laces and ribbons, be evolved into "dreams" of loveliness.

Matinees or bed jackets of sheer handkerchief linen, embroidered batiste or crepe de Chine combined with pleating of creamy lace, are fascinating. The possibilities of boudoir caps and breakfast bonnets are limitless. An original girl can make dainty materials into creations quite unlike anything the most exclusive shops have shown.

Caps of fine dotted silk net with a layer of chiffon for firmness lend beautifully to a trimming of bows and flowers. A cap just finished for a June bride is Dutch cut and trimmed with soft bowknots of twisted white satin and lovely silk marguerites. A combination of pink and blue in very pale tints is equally charming on negligee. Stiff ribbon should never be used, but knots or bows should nestle among the laces.

Nightgown cases, slipper bags, corset bags and boudoir pillows come under the list of dainty hand-made gifts suitable for the bride. Sheer linen, fine batiste or the popular organdie, if used with motifs of real filet, or Venetian lace, lined with pale silk and finished with a cluster of the ribbon flowers, make the loveliest of remembrances.

Giving things in pairs or sets is quite the thing. Satin or taffeta slippers, combined with garters and cap make a charming trio, or garters of pleated lace and flat flower clusters to send with mule sandals of plain material, finished around the top with a pleated frill of lace.

Another idea that appeals to a bride—no matter how many she may have already—is embodied in a set of coat hangers, four or six slipper trees and a chintz covered hat box, large and round, for the guest room closet.

Dainty cross stitched markers for the piles of linen that will assuredly grace the bride's linen closet, dresser covers or toilet table covers of fine linen, monogrammed and ornamented with inserted lace motifs, will also make attractive gifts.

ECONOMY IN GAS.

There are still some women who need reminding that the oven door should always be opened before the gas is lighted, otherwise there may be a small explosion. Just the smallest leakage of gas will so result. The absolutely safe way to light the oven is to first open the door, then turn on the pilot and light it. After a few seconds turn on the gas and do not forget to put out the pilot. Lastly, close the oven door.

The triple saucepans are an economy when the family is small, because three vessels can be cooked over one burner, while for ironing the iron plates perforated on the edges will hold a couple or three irons, again using only one burner. Some women use a small griddle and cover the irons with a large bread pan. This is a good plan, too.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

WOMAN'S TASTE.

A cultivated taste marks a woman of elegance and refinement as decidedly as a knowledge of classical literature does a gentleman; and there is nothing in which female vulgarity is more clearly shown than in want of taste.

This is an axiom that we think will not admit of dispute; but it is a question how far taste is natural, and how far it may be acquired.

A delicate taste must, to a certain extent, depend upon the organization of the individual; and it is impossible for any rules to be laid down which will impart taste to persons entirely devoid of it.

But this is very seldom the case with women, as it is one of the few points in which women naturally excell men.

Men may be, and probably are, superior to women in all that requires profound thought and general knowledge; but in the arrangement of a house, and the introduction of ornamental furniture and articles of bijouterie, there can be no doubt of the innate superiority of woman.

Everyone must have remarked the difference in the furnishing of a bachelor's house and one where a lady presides; the thousand little elegancies of the latter, though nothing in themseves, adding,, like elphers, prodigiously to the value of the solid articles they are appended to.

A GOOD NATURED MAN.

In an Omaha church, Sam Jones shouted, "is there a man present who has never spoken a cross word to his wife?" The silence was becoming oppressive,; every husband looked here and there; every husband wanted to get up, but did not dare to. But the sadness that had possession of Jones' face vanished a moment later when a round-faced, good-natured man rose from his seat. "Thank God!" exclaimed Sam, "there is one man who has never spoken a cross word to his wife." The good natured man smiled a bland smile and said, "No sir, I never did. I'm a bachelor." Then he put on his hat and calmly walked out of the door.

Say, young man, there is one thing you can not do. You can not make a success in life unless you work. Better men than you have tried and failed. You can't loaf around street corners and saloons, smoke cigars, tell foul stories, drink whiskey and sponge on someone else, without making a failure in life. You must learn a trade or get into some honest business. If you don't you will be a chronic loafer, despised by all, producing nothing, simply making yourself a burden on your parents or the state. There is no place in the world for loafers. The ripe fruit is all at the top of the tree. You must climb to get it. If you wait for it to fall at your feet you will never get it. Smarter men will jump up and get all. Move. Do something, no matter how small. It will be a starter. Help yourself and others will help you. There is no royal road to success. Toil, grit and endurance; these are requisites. Wake up and see what you can do.

SECRET OF CHEERFULNESS.

How you admire that lady who seems to be all brightness and cheerfulness, and yet she is as busy as the rest of us in household duties with everything to do. Listen, and we'll tell you the reason why she seems to have more time than the rest of us, she wastes no time in fretting; she has learned the true value of things, he never frets and she never scolds. It doesn't pay. Fretting and scolding leave ugly marks upon the face and upon the character. Is everything wrong, the day upside down, the fire won't burn, the children out of sorts, a picked-up dinner, and company at the last moment. She does the best she can and lets the consequences take care of themselves. Worry will not help matters; and then she has a secret, a secret that she is willing to tell all her friends. Every day at a certain hour she goes to her room and locking the door, has half an hour absolutely to herself. If she is very tired she wrings a towel out of water as hot as she can bear and winds it about her neck, renewing it till the weary muscles relax and she can lie down and sleep for a few minutes, arise refreshed and invigorated for the rest of the day. Try it, weary mother. Be good enough to yourself and those who depend upon you to take time for rest and refreshment.

The girl who is so lacking in self-respect as to be ashamed of any honest work commands no respect. She who endeavours to do whatever work her hands find to do in the best and most thorough manner, as by God's law, makes that and the action fine. It is not so much the work as the manner in which it is done that ennobles or disgraces the worker. A well scrubbed floor is a much more useful work than a stupid oil painting in which much valuable canvass and other material has gone to waste. Intelligence and faithfulness tell in every department of work. Respect your work whatever that work may be, and remember that the best, brightest and wisest of men and women will respect you for it.

PREPARING FOR THE PICNIC

There is so much joy in a meal taken in the woods, on the water, or in whatever delightful out-of-doors spot one may best select, that the trouble of transporting the necessary supplies is quite compensated for. And things can be made fairly easy, for there is an art in planning a picnic meal that the result may be appetizing and the labour reduced as much as possible.

A suitable requirement is necessary for comfort; there should be plenty of paper napkins, paraffine paper, and small paper plates. The food is best packed in small paper boxes, so if the expedition is to be on foot each tramper can carry a part. Then, when the feast is over all the papers, boxes, and soiled paper dishes can be burned, or at least buried out of sight, so that the camping ground for the day will not be an offence to the next comers.

If the picnickers with their edibles are not to make the trip on foot more elaborate plans for the luncheon can be made than would be possible. Such things as a small improvised fireless cooker, and patent bottles, may be included in the equipment, with the resulting hot dish, for the main feature of the luncheon and refreshing cold drinks. But even without these everything necessary to comfort and enjoyment of the out-door meal may be taken.

About Sandwiches.

Without sandwiches it could hardly be called a picnic so wedded have the ideas become, but different results can be arrived at in making these necessaries to the picnic meal. There are some rules which should be followed: Never put sandwiches together at home if you can possibly avoid it. Have your bread cut thin, and buttered on one slice, the second slice to be left dry. Roast beef put in a sandwich at eight in the morning is not at all tempting in appearance by one or two o'clock. But if the roast beef is sliced thin, wrapped in paraffine paper, and then placed between the slices of bread at luncheon time, it is a very different thing indeed.

There are various sandwiches. Almost any meat left from the day before may be converted into the most delicious handwich. If in a too ragged shape to slice, mince it up very fine, add mayonnaise dressing, and before mixing, rub the dish with a clove of garlic cut in two. It may need more salt and pepper, for a sandwich filling should be highly seasoned. Minced chicken may be treated in this way too. Carry the prepared meat in a gem jar and just before luncheon is served open the slices of bread and butter, which will not oling as they would if butter had been put on both sides, and spread with the prepared chicken.

Eggs and sardines make very good sandwiches. Cut six hard boiled eggs (which have been boiled for twenty minutes), into halves, and separate the whites very fine and put the yolks through a ricer or coarse strainer. Remove the bones and skins from a dozen sardines, add sifted yolks and mix to a paste with a little olive oil, and season to taste with salt, cayenne and lemon juice. Mix in the chopped whites and pack in a glass jar to carry. If, before starting for the outing you have time to prepare bread for these sandwiches by cutting it into thin rounds and frying it brown in butter, it will make very delicious sandwiches. Any crisp unsalted cracker spread with this mixture gives variety.

Sweets and Beverages.

Nut loaf is very popular and as it keeps well it is a good plan to have it on hand when picnics or drives may come up suddenly. Take one and a half cups of flour, two cups of graham flour, one half cup of corn meal, one half cup brown sugar, one half cup molasses, one pint sweet milk, one cup walnuts chopped but not fine, three tablespoons baking powder and one teaspoon salt. Bake in long tin for forty-five minutes in moderate oven. Cut in thin slices and spread with butter, putting a little jelly between the slices. A sweet sandwich that is very delicious is spread with maple cream in which butternut or other nut meats are mixed.

The matter of drinks is the most serious one when considering transportation. If possible get the little paper cups that are sold very inexpensively at most department shops. They can be burned before leaving the picnic ground, and are light to carry there. It is necessary to have a pail to bring water in, whether you walk or ride. Lemon punch is about the most condensed drink to carry. Take the juice of four lemons, or five if they are at all dry, and two cups of sugar; put into a quart jar. Fill up the jar with tea. Shake until the sugar is thoroughly dissolved. When ready to serve, put a portion into each tumbler, and fill with water. It is so refreshing that one is repaid for the trouble caused by the carrying.

Orangeade is equally refreshing Take the juice of six oranges and three lemons and add three cups of sugar, Mix well the day before, stirring occasionally to make a smooth syrup. This may be bottled and a little put in a drinking cup, then filled with water when serving luncheon, or a large pail may be taken and all prepared at once. Orangeade always calls for one-third lemon juice.

It is always well to take extra supplies in case of an unexpected addition to the picnic. A box of biscuits, or sardines, a tumbler of jelly or some nut paste, over and above what seems necessary, are very convenient should friends be met by the way.

OVERWORK AND WORRY

A Fruitful Source of Broken Down Constitutions

A little worry does a great deal of harm. Overwork and worry give rise to headaches, nervousness, sleeplessness, weak back, lack of interest in your work, indigestion and sometimes a complete breakdown of the nervous system, leading to paralysis. If these are your symptoms you need a tonic. And the only way to tone up the nerves is through the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a direct nerve tonic because they make new rich red blood, which feeds the nerves and strengthens every organ in the body. Under the tonic influence of these Pills nervousness and all the other evils of worry and overwork quickly disappear. They restore the digestion and enable the body to take full advantage from the food eaten.

Mrs. J. C. Chapman, Omemee, Ont., says: 'I became completely run-down and my nervous system shattered from overwork and worry. I always felt tired and exhausted and slept badly at night. I tried several medicines but did not find the hoped-for relief. Then I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I took them regularly for several months and they restored me to perfect health, and I have since been well and strong. I can recommend these Pills to any afflicted with nervousness or a broken constitution as I feel they will effect a cure."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2 50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HINTS TO HOUSEWIVES

When boiled and unboiled eggs get mixed, spin them, and the boiled ones will spin round quite fast, while those which have not been cooked will hardly spin round once.

Permanganate of potash will cleanse dirty filters of all impurities. A solution should be passed through the filter until it comes out as pink as when it was poured in.

Sal-ammoniac will clean a furred kettle. Fill the kettle with cold water, add a little sal-ammoniac to it and boil. All the furr will dissolve. Well rinse the kettle afterwards.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve tar so that it can be rubbed off.

Cayenne pepper is excellent to rid cupboards of mice. The floor should be gone over carefully and each hole stopped up with a piece of rag dipped in water and then in cayenne pepper.

AVOID MONOTONY IN SALAD MAKING

A famous expert on salad making says the greatest fault of the amateur salad maker is her—or his, for many men pride themselves on their salads — tendency to use the flavourings and ingredients they best like to the exclusion of all others. Monotony is the result.

So it would seem that the good salad maker should aim for variety. The fact that he likes tarragon, for instance, does not mean every one else likes it. His taste for mustard may be peculiar and the dressing over-flavoured with mustard becomes monotonous to others.

Salt is the one seasoning necessary to all salads. Everything else should be varied occasionally.

Mayonnaise, for instance, sometimes can be made with salt, oil, egg yolks, mustard and paprika, and thinned with white wine vinegar. Again salt, oil, egg yolks, cayenne pepper and lemon can be used. Salt, oil, egg yolks, tarragon vinegar, mace and a dash of sugar can be combined again. The combinations to give different flavours are almost endless.

Pure olive oil of good quality, seasoning agents, and a thinning agent are necessary for all mayonnaise. And good oil and lemon or vinegar, with seasoning, must be used in all French dressing. But the seasoning can be as varied as the wind.

Onion is an advisable salad seasoning. It should always be carefully used. The inside of the salad bowl can be rubbed with an onion or juice can be used or a small piece of onion can be put in the bottom of the dish and covered with a piece of bread, so that it will not touch any of the ingredients of the salad. Its flavour will still permeate the salad.

Tomato Salad.

Dip solid, round tomatoes into boiling water, drain, peel off the skin without cutting into the firm flesh of the tomato, and set on ice to chill thoroughly. Chop hard boiled eggs rather coarsely and mix lightly with mayonnaise dressing. When ready to serve, hollow out the centre of each tomato, fill it with the mayonnaise and egg, pile chopped whites in a pyramid on the top, and serve each tomato on a lettuce leaf. The tomato cups may also be filled with a mixture of celery and mayonnaise.

Cauliflower Salad.

Wash a medium-sized head of cauliflower; soak it in ice water for one-half hour; tie it in cheesecloth as you would a pudding and boil in salted water, gently for thirty minutes. Drain and break apart carefully into the small heads or florets. Chill, arrange in a salad bowl with a garnish of parsley, and pour over it French or Italian dressing.

MAKING USE OF ASPARAGUS

There are two special blessings that spring brings the housewife; strawberries and asparagus. And far too little is made, by the average housewife, of asparagus which is not only toothsome but exceedingly nutritious as well. Sufferers from rheumatism and other uric acid disorders may eat all the asparagus they want with impunity though strawberries, alas, are debarred to these unfortunates. Asparagus, boiled and served with drawn butter or cream sauce is a vegetable course fit for the gods; and odds and ends of asparagus may be used for entree dishes at luncheon time, or put into salad.

More important than the cooking of asparagus is its preparation for the saucepan. Each stalk must be separately washed and lightly scraped. A wire basket for cooking asparagus is a great convenience, for the bottom of the basket may be opened and the delicate stalks deposited on the platter with no danger of breaking, as when the stalks must be lifted from the saucepan with a spoon or fork. If no wire basket is available, put the stalks into the sauce pan, heads pointing upward and fill the saucepan with boiling water up to within an inch of the heads. In this way the tougher stalks will cook in the water while the rising steam cooks the heads. Fifteen minutes is usually long enough to boil young, tender asparagus; as the vegetable becomes older and tougher more cooking will be necessary. And do not forget to add a teaspoonful of salt to a quart of boiling water.

Serve asparagus with the heads resting on a thin strip of toast, and pour over a drawn butter or cream sauce, well seasoned with salt and pper. The flavour of the asparagus makes all richer seasoning superfluous. Asparagus omelet is delicious for luncheon. Stir into the prepared omelet a cupful of cut-up asparagus stalks which should be very soft and freshly boiled. Garnish the lightly-browned omelet with sprigs of parsley.

Vinaigrette salad made with asparagus stalks, chopped chicory and heart of lettuce is delightfully agreeable for a spring luncheon or dinner. This salad is not served with mayonnaise dressing but with a French dressing made with lemon rather than vinegar, and plenty of the best olive oil.

Pounded Cheese.

This is a reliable recipe which may be made up in quantities and packed down in small stone jars, covered, and set away in a cool place. Place in a mortar with three ounces of butter about a pound of good dry cheese and pound it to a paste. Into this mix a half teaspoonful of black pepper and a teaspoonful each of mustard (made mustard), ground spice, and curry powder. It is tasty if served on slices of bread and sprinkled over with a little paprika.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Pneumonia.

The cough of pneumonia, says Dr. E. F. Bowers in the New York Tribune, is not wise nor expedient to stop before it has done what it started to do—that is, to help eject from the lungs the billions of pneumococci and other germs that cause pneumonia and also the germ products that are filling the lung cells. Any attempt to stop this cough may result, first and foremost, in locking up the secretions and, next, in confusing the symptoms. Skillful, prompt action is necessary in this dangerous disease. There is no place here for the amateur and his "cures." In pneumonia it is necessary to do something, and do it quickly, or pneumonia will do it first. The main thing is to equalize the circulation, keep up the strength and, if unable to abort the disease, prepare the patient for the crisis. Don't dry "cough remedies" in pneumonia unless it should be on yourself and you don't care much what happens to you.

A French aviator recently flew 800 miles in a little over twelve hours. Aviation is rapidly becoming a jumble of new records and death statistics.

A Chicago woman has secured a divorce on the plea that her husband refused to talk to her. Speak up, men! Don't sit around and listen all the time.

Appeals to Everybody.

Many people overlook the advantage of newspaper advertising. If the farmer has stock to sell, he can find buyers, if he wants to buy, he can have the sellers come to him. When anything is lost or found, when help is wanted, or a position is sought; when any article from a baby carriage to a pet fox could be exchanged to advantage, a small advertisement in the newspaper will accomplish the desired result.

Nearly everybody can use the advertising columns to advantage at some time, and every person will profit by reading the advertisements regularly.

BEDS IN BRITTANY.

A Surprise That Startled a Visitor in a Tiny Cottage.

A remarkable and amusing experience is related by Frances M. Gosling in "The Bretons at Home." The author says:

"I had gone with my husband to find a barber. It was dusk when we entered the one room of the tiny cottage, and work was over for the day. The last customer sat idly in a corner gossiping with the barber's wife, while the man of razors himself was idly glancing over last week's newspaper. It was too dark to see the details of the room, but I managed to find an oak chest in front of a bed and sat down to watch proceedings.

"It was a curious sight. In the middle of the room sat my Englishman in his light tweed suit, a towel round his neck, his face covered with ghostly gleaming lather. In front of him stood the barber's wife, a lighted candle in her hand to guide her husband in his work; finally, his thin cadaverous face almost touching that of his victim, the barber himself, his left hand holding my husband now by the nose, now by the chin.

"Suddenly behind me I heard a movement and felt a warm little hand on the back of my neck. There was a smothered laugh, and I turned to see a pair of eyes twinkling at me from the depths of the cupboard bed against which I was sitting.

"'Taisez vous donc!' growled the barber mildly, still intent on his work. But the laugh had broken the charm. From every corner came rustlings, giggles, little voices and shining merry eyes. And everywhere there were beds—beds full of boys and girls!

"'Why, however many children have you?' I asked as soon as the bewilderment of finding myself surrounded by this crowd of onlookers allowed me to speak.

"'Fourteen, madam,' replied the woman.

"'The house is so small that we console ourselves by the size of our family,' remarked the barber jocosely, at which there was much merriment in the cupboard beds."

SUSPENDED ANIMATION.

If This Scientist Succeeds We Will Have a New Economic Era.

A remarkable suggestion is advanced by a Russian scientist. Could the vital functions of animals be completely suspended for a period and then restored to full vigor an economic revolution would result. The stock on the farm which yields no profit in the winter, such as bees and sheep, might literally be laid aside until spring, costing nothing during the unproductive season and yielding a profit as soon as they began to incur expense.

The cost of shipping live stock of all kinds would fall to the irreducible minimum. With vital functions suspended all kinds of animals, birds and fish could be made to occupy the smallest possible space in the transporting vehicle and carried without injury to themselves or of any deterioration in their food value, to be received in full flesh and vigor at the end of the journey or when needed for use.

Such a hiatus in the existence of man could it be brought about successfully would add materially to his apparent life span and tide him over many critical periods.

Such are the thoughts occupying the mind of the Russian scientist, who is making exhaustive experiments along the very lines which suggest them. He has succeeded in suspending the vital functions of lower organisms by drying and restoring them by the application of moisture.

He has accomplished the same ends in some insects by submitting them to varying degrees of low temperature and afterward applying heat.

Now he is gradually ascending in the scale of life, but with the frank confession that he dares not hope that his successes will reach the height to which he aspires.—Boston Herald.

Prussian Executions.

By the German law all capital punishments must be carried out by beheading, but it is left to the separate states to choose their own method. In those districts which were annexed by Napoleon I. the guillotine still prevails. Other regions may use the ax, the sword, or a carving knife if they please. The Prussian method is that, the victim sitting in a chair, he is beheaded by a horizontal sweep of a long sword.—Manchester News.

He Knew That Much.

"Do you think you will be able to keep me out of jail?" he asked after he had made a full confession to his lawyer.

"I may not be able to do that, but I can make the state spend a lot of money in putting you there."—Chicago Record-Herald.

LONDON'S "QUARTERS."

Each Trade or Profession, as a Rule, Flocks All by Itself.

Undoubtedly one of the most curious features of London is the manner in which men engaged in particular businesses and professions have congregated, for some mysterious reason, in certain streets or areas. This peculiarity is recalled by the suggestion that Harley street will before long cease to be the abode of doctors, on account of the fact that it is becoming in these days of motors too noisy.

Where, should the doctors decide to desert Harley street, they will move to is, of course, difficult to say, but it is almost safe to affirm that when they do migrate they will finally settle down again all together in some quiet corner of the metropolis.

There are many Londoners who still remember the time when London's chief doctors congregated in the neighborhood of Finsbury square, which was deserted for Harley street on account of the many businesses which set up in the former neighborhood.

There are many other curious instances, however, of the manner in which professional and business men flock together. Tottenham Court road, for instance, is the great furniture thoroughfare of the metropolis, while Long Acre is monopolized by motor car firms and carriage builders. Aviators have made Piccadilly the headquarters of the aeroplane industry, in which street the Aero club and the offices of the Aeroplane are situated, while film manufacturers have congregated in the immediate neighborhood of Charing Cross.

Why is Hatton Garden the home of diamond merchants and why do so many music hall artists insist on living at Brixton? A stroll down Holborn reveals the fact that it is a favorite street for the show rooms of bicycle manufacturers, while there are probably more typewriting firms in Queen Victoria street than any other part of the metropolis. Gerard street, Rupert street and some of the other streets in Soho appear attractive to the cinema trade, and many private theaters are found in that classic neighborhood.

Hat manufacturers seem to have a great liking for Blackfriars road, while Willesden can probably boast of more laundry firms than any other district in London. Most of the builders are in Wandsworth, the bootmakers and cabinetmakers in Bethnal Green, tanners in Bermondsey, potters in Lambeth, brewers and printers in Southwark.

Hoxton seems to be the home of jam manufacturers and Houndsditch that of toy dealers, while Clerkenwell road is the greater center of ice cream merchants, makers of street organs and mosaic floor makers. Charing Cross road is a street of bookshops and Fleet street the hub of the newspaper world.—London Tit-Bits.

LINDSAY'S WIRELESS.

A Scotch Genius Who Anticipated the Work of Marconi.

James Bowman Lindsay, a Scotchman, began experimenting with electricity in 1820. In a few years he produced a "constant stream of light," which was the admiration of scientists. He sent messages over wires and delivered many lectures on an electric telegraph. Then in 1832 he invented a system of wireless telegraphy and submitted it to a public test, regarding which a Dundee paper of April 12, 1833, said: "The experiment removes all doubt of the practicability of Mr. Lindsay's invention, and there is every reason to think that it will soon connect continent with continent, and island with island, in one unbroken line of communication."

Lindsay's lectures were advertised under the title of "Telegraphing Without Wires," so that the familiar "wireless" itself was anticipated. But he was more than a scientific experimentalist. He projected a dictionary in fifty languages and labored on it for a quarter of a century. It was too huge a task, and the Pentecontaglossal Dictionary exists in an unfinished state only in manuscript. He also compiled with more success a set of astronomical tables for the use of chronologists.

Yet this astonishing man never enjoyed more than an income of $250 a year as a teacher until the eve of his death, when the prime minister granted him a pension of $500 "in recognition of his "great learning and extraordinary attainments."—Exchange.

BRASS ROD MONEY.

Currency That Used to Be Very Popular With African Natives.

The annual "bullion letter" of Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. of London suggests that the phrase expressive of wealth, "plenty of brass," was introduced into England by sailors trading with towns at the mouths of the great African rivers, though the brass rods used by the natives are now passing into the limbo of things obsolete.

A brass rod at Momsemb was fifteen inches long and not quite so thick as a slate pencil. Everything had its price in brass rods—one egg equaled one brass rod; a fowl, ten brass rods; two yards of cloth, twenty brass rods; a male slave, 600 brass rods, and a female slave, 2,500 brass rods.

The brass for these rods was originally melted down for their brass ornaments—anklets, necklaces, armlets, leg rings, bafts of spears, paddles and handles of knives, etc. It was using the brass for this purpose that first gave it any real value to them. In 1890 the brass rods still retained their value.

It is quite possible that the rods changed hands in fathom lengths, and those who came into possession of these lengths each cut off a little piece to procure a little bit of brass for nothing, and hence the length was gradually shortened until in 1890 it was fifteen inches. The process of shortening continued, and in 1905 the standard length was only eleven inches.

Is There a "Born Criminal?"

Is it to be wondered that most authorities are inclining more and more to find in a faulty environment rather than in a bad heredity the explanation of the boy who goes wrong? Not that it is as yet possible and perhaps it never will be possible to rule out entirely the idea of the "born criminal." A small proportion of delinquents unquestionably do show almost from infancy an irresistible and seemingly instinctive impulse to evil, but to just what extent this is actually due to inherited and irremediable conditions remains to be ascertained. Medical progress, in fact, is constantly making it clearer that many supposed instances of "innate depravity" are in reality the result of curable physical defects and sometimes of defects that are comparatively slight.—H. Addington Bruce in Century.

Turkish Smoking Pipes.

The "hookah" is a large tobacco pipe much used in Turkey, Persia and other eastern countries. It consists of two bowls, one placed over the other. The upper bowl contains the tobacco and is connected by a tube with the lower, which is partially filled with water. The connecting tube passes down into the water. The stem, which is usually a long flexible tube, is connected with the air space above the water, and thus the smoke must pass through the water before reaching the smoker. In passing through it is cooled and deprived of most of its harmful constituents.

Needless Advice.

"How are you getting on at your new place?" asked a lady of a girl whom she had recommended for a situation.

"Very well, thank you," answered the girl.

"I'm glad to hear it," said the lady. "Your employer is a very nice person, and you cannot do too much for her."

"I don't mean to, ma'am," was the innocent reply.—London Answers.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

His Race For Life

A Story of the Sahara Desert

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Paul Dunlap halted his racing camel and turned around to glimpse his pursuers.

Far behind, there among the sand dunes of the Algerian desert, were little black dots winding in and out among the dunes, now rising to view and again melting from sight behind some protecting hillock of sand.

Paul spoke sharply to his beast, and the camel shook his homely head, gay with trappings of red leather and silver, and without apparent exertion rocked forward at a most amazing rate of speed.

Mile after mile vanished under those broad hoofs, and each time that Paul turned around his pursuers still held the same distance. Although some of them were mounted on fleet Arabian horses, not one had apparently gained an inch of the race.

It was late afternoon when Paul sighted the blue blur that marked the Oasis el Dur. At first he thought it was a mirage, but at last he was convinced that indeed he was approaching cool shade, food and water. He was weary with twenty hours of hard riding, he had not eaten since early morning, and only occasionally had he swallowed water from his flask.

Water was very precious, and he must make it last.

Now with the oasis in sight he could drain the flask and satisfy his thirst to a degree.

A last glance over his shoulder showed him that his enemies had given up the pursuit for the moment. Evidently they were making camp so that they might rest and eat and thus be ready to continue the chase after the full moon had risen to flood the desert with light.

The oasis was a small one, but it possessed a good well of water, a group of date palms and a little grass that the camel promptly nipped away.

"NOT ON YOUR LIFE, YOUNG MAN!"

Paul watered the camel, satisfied his own thirst and plucked some dates and filled his saddlebags with more of the desert fruit. He filled his flask with the cold water and also filled a goatskin water bag that dangled limply from the saddle.

He looked to his weapons to see that they were in readiness; then, sitting down with his back against a tree, he turned his face toward the west, where he might watch for the coming of his enemies.

Occasionally he closed his aching eyes, but he did not dare to hold them thus for very long. He caught himself nodding now and then.

It had been a long day and a wearing one.

Paul Dunlap had left the city on the rim of the desert with a faithful guide who was to lead him across the Algerian desert to Murzuk. Ali Mora had been highly recommended by the hotel where the American was stopping, and Paul had been attracted by the alert, bright eyed young man.

On the third day out, when the desert city was far behind, Ali Mora had suddenly sickened. Whether it was some organic trouble or whether it was a malady induced by a trial of some of Paul's tinned provisions the American could not find out. All he knew was that Ali Mora had developed a high fever and suffered much pain.

Paul had searched his "first aid" case for remedies and had applied such as he deemed would help the stricken man. But all to no purpose.

Just at sunset the night before Ali Mora had turned his face toward Mecca and died, and at that very moment a large band of Bedouin Arabs came flashing up on their unshod horses.

Their leader, a fierce eyed sheik of commanding presence, demanded the reason of the guide's death, and when Paul had endeavored to explain in halting Arabic they had cut him short and pronounced death against him.

So he sat down and waited near the recumbent form of his guide while the Bedouins made preparations to take him to their encampment.

Ali Mora's death had got him into trouble. This roving band of Arabs had seized the opportunity to rob him, and if he escaped with his life he would be lucky.

Well, he had managed to escape from them as they journeyed toward their encampment. Just as the black shadows of their tents came into view Paul had maneuvered his camel around a sand hillock and was a mile away before his flight was discovered.

If he could circle around to the north and then return to his starting place, the city of Ghourd-Aghad, he was positive that with another guide, perhaps a little body guard, he could successfully accomplish his projected trip across the desert.

In fact, he must accomplish it. He had made an arrangement to sell the photographs, together with an account of his journey across the desert, to a prominent American magazine, and he could not afford to lose the money. He had promised to deliver the first batch of photographs on the 1st of March, and now it was the 1st of January, and all his labor had been for naught.

When the noon was high Paul mounted his camel and rode toward the north. He had no doubt that he would run across his enemies sooner or later; indeed, if they had not believed him to be worn out by the day's race they would undoubtedly be sneaking around the oasis now, but they were sure of him. Foreigners had not the endurance of the desert people. So the Bedouins believed.

Paul had a good start while the moon was high; the racing camel was true to his name, and his long strides eliminated distances in an incredible manner.

Mile after mile the sand flew from under the hoofs of the strangely swaying beast, and at sunrise, just at the very moment when Paul was congratulating himself that he had outdistanced and outmaneuvered his enemies, he saw a black figure silhouetted against the pale desert.

It was a motionless horseman guarding a little group of white tents pitched in a hollow among the sand hillocks.

The horseman turned and shrilled a challenge at Paul, and by the time the young American had halted his camel he was almost upon the white tents.

The sentry was an Arabian, intelligent looking and with a smattering of the English language.

Paul explained his dilemma, and ere he had completed his explanation the Arab shouted wildly and pointed off to the southwest.

Plainly visible in the early sunlight was a scattering company of horsemen.

"Yours is a peaceful camp," said Paul hastily. "I will ride away and they will not disturb you; I"—

He stopped short, for the white tents had given up their occupants—a dozen men dressed in hastily donned khaki and all carrying weapons, modern repeating rifles that made the ancient flintlocks of the attacking Arabs look like foolish toys.

"What's the matter?" demanded a grizzled haired veteran, addressing the Arab sentinel.

Paul Dunlap broke in and explained and expressed his intention of riding on and thus luring the approaching bandits away from the peaceful encampment in the hollow.

"Not on your life, young man!" cried the grizzled man. "You'll stay and fight, and we'll see you through to a finish!"

"Thank you," said Paul quickly. "Now, sir, I think we must be fighting. They are almost upon us."

In a few moments ammunition was passed around and the men were all flat on the sand, each behind a hillock. The rifles cracked menacingly as the Bedouins came flying up, screeching a savage warcry. With each rifle crack an Arab tumbled from his saddle until at last the scattering remnants of the band dissolved in the shimmering heat of the day.

The unharmed Americans looked at each other and grinned congratulations over the success of their defense.

"And now, sir," asked Paul of the elderly man who appeared in charge of the party, "will you please tell me to whom I am indebted for this rescue?"

"My name is Chester," explained the veteran—"Wayland Chester, at your service. I am manager of a moving picture company, and you, sir, have just afforded us an opportunity for getting as fine a reel of film as I can desire. Why, man, that attack was immense, and I don't know how to thank you."

The amazed traveler looked closely and saw that two camera men were fussing over moving picture machines near by. From different points of vantage they had taken both sides of the little skirmish.

The white tents gave up further occupants, many pretty actresses, who had witnessed the battle from safe quarters, and one and all of them gave a warm welcome to the young adventurer.

That moment was the turning point in Paul Dunlap's career. He joined the moving picture company in its journey across the desert, and his special magazine article was expanded into several that had to do with the fascinating art of motion picture making.

Some day when you are watching the motion picture screen you may come across the scene of that early morning skirmish in the Algerian desert or you may see a handsome youth riding a fleet camel across the sands to rescue a lovely damsel in distress, and the handsome hero will be none other than Paul Dunlap, and the girl is his wife, for he married the prettiest actress of them all.

HEART WAS SO BAD
Could Not Do Her Housework

Many women get run down and are unable to look after their household duties owing to the heart action becoming impaired or the nervous system unstrung. To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will give prompt and permanent relief.

Mrs. Thomas Melville, Saltcoats, Sask., writes:—"I thought it my duty to write and tell you how much your Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. My heart was so bad I could not sleep, eat nor walk about the house. I could not do my housework at all, and what my husband could not do had to go undone. I had two small children depending on me besides three men to cook for, and it worried me to not be able to do anything. My husband had taken some of your pills some years ago, and insisted on me trying them, so I started, and before I had taken them two weeks I was considerably better, and before I had taken two boxes I was doing my own work again. Any one suffering from heart or nerve trouble should just give your pills a trial. If anyone cares to write me I will gladly give them all the information I know concerning your wonderful medicine."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

MRS. WINN'S ADVICE TO WOMEN

Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and be Restored to Health.

Kansas City, Mo.—"The doctors told me I would never be a mother. Every month the pains were so bad that I could not bear my weight on one foot. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and had not finished the first bottle when I felt greatly relieved and I took it until it made me sound and well, and I now have two fine baby girls. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I always speak a word in favor of your medicine to other women who suffer when I have an opportunity."—Mrs. H. T. Winn, 1225 Freemont Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Cumming, Ga.—"I tell some suffering woman every day of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it has done for me. I could not eat or sleep, had a bad stomach and was in misery all the time. I could not do my housework or walk any distance without suffering great pain. I tried doctors' medicines and different patent medicines but failed to get relief. My husband brought home your Vegetable Compound and in two weeks I could eat anything, could sleep like a healthy baby, and walk a long distance without feeling tired. I can highly recommend your Vegetable Compound to women who suffer as I did, and you are at liberty to use this letter."—Mrs. Charlie Bagley, R. 3, Cumming, Ga.

REVERIE

I should be happy, I suppose.
Perhaps I shouldn't thus complain.
I have as many friends as foes,
As much of gladness as of pain.
My health is good; my appetite
Is great. I can't kick on those scores.
But in the middle of the night
My roommate snores!

That knocks the bliss from my repose.
I wake and shudder at the sound.
I wish his breath came through his nose.
At present he buys like a hound.
I like him, but I'd like to fling
Him, snore and all, clear out of doors,
'Cause when I'm dreaming some swell thing
My roommate snores!

I never heard a noise before
So sudden in its dread effect.
When roused from slumber by that snore
I leave my bed quite unbedecked,
I cross to his and close his face—
Aye, that's the way to stop such roars—
And then it's quiet round the place—
Until he snores!

Royal Children Well Informed.

Queen Mary is immensely interested in everything historical, and when going on a visit to a new place invariably reads everything connected with its past. This plan of knowing all about places of interest beforehand commends itself so greatly to her that she encourages her children to do the same, and the young princes and princess are consequently extremely well informed.

Vitamines Survive Cooking.

Dr. Leonard Hill, the famous London physician, contributes to the discussion on vitamines the assertion that those contained in wheat are not destroyed by baking nor are those that prevent scurvy killed by boiling. He says all the evidence goes to show that the vitamines in milk are unaffected by pasteurization and that sterilized milk is therefore suitable for children.

QUEEN FOR A DAY.

Mi-Careme In Paris Is Full of Quaint Ceremonies.

The day's reign of a Paris Queen often brings fortune to the lady elected. At Mi-Careme, the French capital is called upon to choose which of the eight queens, already elected by various bodies, should become the queen of queens.

The electors who make the final choice are the members of the Mi-Careme Fetes Committee, Senators, deputies, municipal mayors, and councillors, deputy mayors, members of the press, and the president of various societies.

The eight queens this year were Suzanne Martin, brunette (20), shorthand writer, queen of the Stella Artistic Association; Yvonne Delune, brunette (19), queen of the Wine Sellers' Association; Marcelle Favier, blonde (18), queen of the Markets Committee; Jeanne Thomas, brunette (20) stenographer, queen of the Mascotte Association; Marcelle Guillot, blonde (18), dressmaker, queen of the Artistic Society of the Golden Lyre; Lucienne Gault, brunette (18), queen of the Temple Markets; Isabelle Barbotin, typewriter (24), queen of the Fourteenth Arrondissement; and Georgette Benoist (23), who holds a stall in Auteuil Market.

On the second vote Marcelle Guillot was elected. The President of the Municipal Council kissed the queen of queens and congratulated her. Other voters wanted to do likewise, but their zeal was not appreciated. Queen Marcelle expressed her feelings as follows:

"Je suis tres heureuse." (I am very happy.)

The queen of a day enjoys other privileges besides riding through the streets of Paris on the car of honor during the Mi-Careme fete. The fetes committee gives her a savings bank book on which 200 francs ($40) are inscribed to her credit, and dressmakers, hatmakers, and dealers, and other such firms hasten to present choice specimens of their wares. These are mostly for advertising purposes. Jewelers send gifts. The Mi-Careme procession calls at the Hotel de Ville and the Elysee Palace, and both the Mayor and President see that she has a souvenir of the call. All told, the day of her queendom may be estimated to be worth $2,000, which means that the queen is in a position to marry well and start a business of her own.

Mlle. Balmadeir, a dressmaker, who was queen in 1905, married a general's son. A fish seller, Mlle. Georgette Juteau, was the 1907 queen. She married her sweetheart of those days last year. Her reign would have enable here to do so before, but she would not leave her family till all her young brothers were able to work.

The queen of 1905 had the honor of receiving King Alfonso. Mlle. Orliac, queen in 1909, visited Folkestone, Eng., and won first prize for beauty at that resort's famous competition. The Mayor of Canterbury called on her. Mlle. Gaillard, the 1910 queen, visited Prague, Turin, Milan, Naples, and Rome, where King Victor presented to her a splendid tea service. Evidently it is well worth being a queen, even if only for a day.

Finished splitting the winter's rails—about sixty. Have never been able to determine whether they split best from top or butt. Sometimes one succeeds, sometimes the other. FINE FEATHERS

In a pretty Elizabethan cottage surrounded by shade trees and a flower garden dwelt Miss Jessamine Sands and her fair young niece, Betty. The former was a noted housewife and tried her utmost to add this same good quality to Betty's lengthy list of accomplishments. The two ladies were considered heiresses by the villagers, for the rentals from the elder's farms brought no mean amount each month. Betty's father had left her several thousand pounds.

Miss Jessamine, being the head of the house and extremely religious, used the greater part of her income dispensing charity to the needy. Little Betty never could understand why they were considered wealthy, for she was supplied with a new dress and a bonnet only once every two years.

Betty sat beside a window mending a rent in a muslin frock. Two rows of red geraniums in pots of the same hue contributed a fascinating note of cheery brightness to the sitting room. Now and then she glanced from her work to the aristocratic profile of her aunt.

"What causes such unseemly restlessness this morning, child?" Miss Jessamine asked, busily threading a needle.

"I trust William has not asked you to drive again, for he has had you to Bradbury twice this week, which is quite often enough."

Judge Trimble and his family occupied the home adjoining the Sands cottage, and William, their eldest son, had been Betty's playmate ever since the little girl first came to live with her aunt.

"Aunt Jessamine, Phoebe Blakemore teased me about wearing the same Sabbath frock for two years and said it was a shame that I was not allowed to purchase a new one now and then since I am supposed to be an heiress."

"Phoebe is a gossip to talk to you of such things, and I disapprove of her frivolous ways. Your father left you well provided for, and I dare say you always appear genteel and neat when you walk abroad, and that is all that is required of a maid."

"Aunt Jessamine, next Sabbath is Easter. All the girls have new silk frocks and bonnets to match. I am past seventeen, and never have you given me a dress of silk. If I have means of my own I desire above things, to visit London and buy loveliest flowered taffeta I can find. Please say we will go."

"Since you are no longer content with the wardrobe selected by me I suppose we will have to purchase some London finery. Master William will think no more of you with all your fine toggery than he would if you attended church in your simple muslin frock."

The Easter morning chimes awakened Betty. By the time the last bell summoned the tardy worshippers to divine service she had donned her flowered taffeta trimmed with frills of lace and tied beneath her chin the broad ribbons of her poke bonnet. The vain little sinner gazed at her reflection in the mirror, and a smile of satisfaction radiated her countenance.

Aunt Jessamine could not conceal her astonishment and pride when the fair vision descended the stairs. "Well, well; fine feathers have certainly made my Betty lovely! Hasten child! Do not stop for posies."

William walked home with Betty from the church, while Aunt Jessamine remained to invite the pastor to dinner.

When they entered the garden William boldly clasped her hand between his own, saying: "Betty, dearest, I want you to know that I love you. This morning when your song floated into my heart I knew you were the one. Can you love me?"

The dainty maiden's frank blue eyes gazed into the brown ones as she archly said: "Was it the bonnet, William, that made you care?"

"No," he answered; "it was the girl beneath the bonnet."

Ancient Money.

In Biblical days silver and gold coins were struck of such weight that one of them represented the value of a particular animal. Thus the word kesitah (used in Genesis) translated "pieces of money," means literally a lamb. The Latin pecuniary comes from pecus, a general name for sheep and the smaller animals. In early times coins bore figures of a horse, a bull or a hog, together with the names of the animals pictured. Afterward, as values changed, the figures upon the coins no longer bore representations of their value in cattle, but figures representing a rose, an eagle, etc.

A Monster Polar Bear.

"The largest white polar bear I ever saw," said an old whaler and hunter, "was shot in November, 1885, about 150 miles northeast of Point Barrow, Alaska. It measured twelve feet two inches from tip of tail to nose, six feet three inches in girth, fifteen inches across from ear to ear and possessed a seven inch skull, while the track made by the huge beast covered eleven inches in length. An idea of the size of this monster can be gained when it is known their average length is only about eight or nine feet."

HOW TO PREVENT ACID STOMACHS AND FOOD FERMENTATION

By a Stomach Specialist.

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to the conclusion that most people who complain of stomach trouble possess stomachs that are absolutely healthy and normal. The real trouble, that which causes all the pain and difficulty, is acid in the stomach, usually due to, or aggravated by, food fermentation. Acid irritates the delicate lining of the stomach and food fermentation causes gas which distends the stomach abnormally, causing that full bloated feeling. Thus both acid and fermentation interfere with and retard the process of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy and normal, but irritated almost past endurance by these foreign elements—acid and wind. In all such cases — and they comprise over 90 per cent. of all stomach difficulties—the first and only step necessary is to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation by taking in a little warm or cold water immediately after eating, from one to two teaspoonfuls of bisurated magnesia, which is doubtless the best and only really effective antacid and food corrective known. The acid will be neutralized and the fermentation stopped almost instantly, and your stomach will at once proceed to digest the food in a healthy, normal manner. Be sure to ask your chemist for the bisurated magnesia, as I have found other forms utterly lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties.—P. J. G.

Wagner's Search For a Pawnshop.

Wagner's worst experience of poverty was during his sojourn in Paris in 1840, when he had to pawn all that he and his wife possessed of any value. "I looked up the French equivalent for a pawnshop," he relates in his autobiography, "as I was too shy to make inquiries. The only word I could find in my little dictionary was 'lombard.' On the map of Paris I found a very small thoroughfare called 'Rue des Lombards,' and thither I went only to find the expedition fruitless. Often on reading the inscription 'Mont de Piete' I felt curious to know its meaning. Eventually, to my great delight, I learned that this 'Berg der Froemmigkeit' was where I should find salvation, and there we now carried all we possessed in the way of silver."—London Chronicle.

Admit They Are Great.

In an address to the Canadian club in Montreal, James Bryce said: "I do not think it would be advisable for me to say much, for I have the good fortune to be a Scotchman myself. I won't pursue the theme of what contributions Scotchmen should be able to make to Canada's literature and science for the very simple reason which was given by a friend of mine, who said, 'I never argue with Scotchmen that they are a great nation—they admit it.'"

His Weakness.

"Have you ever invested in mining stocks that were to pay 100 per cent in less than a year?"

A WOMAN LOST HER HAIR AND GOT IT BACK WITH HERPICIDE

While there are no thrills in the narration of Mrs. P. T. Nichols, 623 Broad St., Beloit, Wis., her story is nevertheless one of amazing interest. "Stricken with neuralgia and erysipelas I lost all my hair. My doctor recommended Newbro's Herpicide. I used six or eight bottles and now have a fine head of slightly curly light brown hair. Not a grey hair in my head. This is the more remarkable as I am middle-aged."

While the results which follow the use of Newbro's Herpicide are always more or less astonishing, they are always natural. Herpicide destroys the dandruff, stimulates the flow of blood to the hair follicles and keeps the scalp perfectly healthy. It makes possible a natural and luxuriant growth of hair, except in cases of chronic baldness.

While remedies said to be "every bit as good" as Newbro's Herpicide are frequently offered, one should insist upon having "the original germ destroyer"—Herpicide. This is genuine. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

Applications may be obtained at good barber shops. Send 10c. in postage for sample to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA.

When It Falls Out, If It Ever Does, Goodby Old World.

When the bottom of the sea gives way from some future volcanic disturbance the whole earth will be consumed in flames, just as other worlds every day are being consumed, according to Louis Rabourdin, the French scientist. Recent volcanic disturbances lead this scientist to believe that such a time is not far distant. The earth's crust is very thin at the bottom of the sea, he says, and he adds that the floor on which we stand is more frail than we are led to believe.

M. Rabourdin imagines a disaster so great as to involve the whole earth. If such an event should occur he thinks that from a distant world its appearance and progress would exactly parallel what we ourselves see in the case of the "novae," or distant stars, that blaze out in the heavens from time to time.

M. Rabourdin says: "Suppose that following upon an extraordinary twisting movement, due to retreat of the central mass, a large mass of the sea bottom should give way and, falling suddenly, should let in the mass of the ocean's waters upon the incandescent interior matter? The water would be decomposed by the heat, the hydrogen would burn, and it would burn more as it had access to more oxygen. The conflagration would thus gain gradually in force, accompanied by electric phenomena, and the greater part of the earth's crust would probably be displaced. The earth, passing through a critical epoch and returning for the time being to its formative period, would again be nothing but a globe of fire.

"For the faroff worlds that swing in sidereal space this would be the phenomenon of a new star that blazes out all at once, increases in brilliancy as if it would eclipse the luminous splendor of all its neighbors and then becomes feebler and feebler, to disappear finally forever in the profound darkness of the limitless distance."

When such a catastrophe takes place, if it ever does, that will be the "end of the world," so far as we at least are concerned.—New York World.

THRIFT AND THE MAN.

Self Help and Self Respect Allied to Good Citizenship.

Thrift is an essential and imperative part of good citizenship.

The man who sets aside a few pence or shillings every week or every month is not only making future provision for himself, his children or others who may be dependent on him; but, consciously or unconsciously, he is at the same time serving his country by helping to create a type of character which is one of the most valuable of national assets.

He is setting an example of self command every time he fights down the temptation to spend on some passing pleasure the money which should be reserved for a more useful purpose. And self command means much in good citizenship.

He is setting an example of self help. He does not wait for "something to turn up," but sets to work resolutely to improve his position in life by his own exertions.

He is setting an example of self respect. The saving of money honestly earned fosters that spirit of sturdy independence and confidence in one's own powers which have played no small part in building up the prosperity of this country.

In addition to the ethical value which I have endeavored to indicate, the practice of thrift by individuals has a material value to the nation. The security of the intricate fabric of national credit depends to a very large extent upon the reserve of capital accumulated by those who invest in savings banks and similar institutions.—Sir T. Vansittart Bowater in London Answers.

One Thoughtful Editor.

The proprietor of the local paper at Eberswalde, a small Prussian town not far from Berlin, does his best to make his paper useful as well as instructive. Two days a week he has the General Anzeiger printed on only one side of the paper so that it can be used for wrapping up provisions without any danger of contamination from printers' ink. On these days the paper is twice as large as on ordinary days, so that the public loses nothing in the way of reading matter.

Renewed Vigor In Old Age

This Letter Brings a Message of Cheer to the Aged—Results of Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

New, rich blood is what is most needed in the declining years to keep up energy and vitality. That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a wonderful help in maintaining good health and prolonging life is attested by the writer of this letter.

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes: — "At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. Had I not obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their hearth and strength by using this great medicine." 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. How Oil Calms the Waves.

An impression prevails that great quantities of oil are required to calm the sea, but Professor Ray Lankester of England suggests that a pint of oil an hour will secure a zone of calm water around a ship sufficient for the safe launching of small boats. According to this authority, nine pints of oil are sufficient to calm a square mile of water, and, incredible as it may appear, one drop will calm seven square feet! The oil spreads out over the surface of the sea in a film which has the almost unimaginable thickness of two-millionths of a millimeter, yet it holds in leash the mighty power of the ocean. When this film of oil spreads over the surface the heaping up action of the water, which results in the formation first of ripples and then of waves, can not take place. The thinner the film the greater is its effect in pulling down the crests of the waves and making a lower wave line, free from break.—Harold Waters in Leslie's.

What the Tweed Divides.

The difference between English and Scotch inheritance law is very wide. For instance, supposing a man dies in testate and his only living relatives are his wife and mother. In England each would take equal shares of his personal estate, but in Scotland the wife gets one-half of the movable estate, the mother one-sixth, and two-sixths go to the crown.

But supposing the mother alone is living. In England she would get the whole, but in Scotland she would only get one-third, while the other two-thirds would go to the crown.

Then, again, if a man dies intestate and his father and several brothers and sisters are living, in England the father gets the lot, but in Scotland he only gets one-half, while the other half is divided equally among the brothers and sisters of the deceased.—Pearson's Weekly.

Have You a Cold? Try FOSSAL BALM!

There is nothing slow or roundabout in the way Fossal Balm gets after a cold in the head, nasal catarrh or irritation in the nasal passages.

The action of its antiseptic, healing ingredients is made more certain and effective by the handy way of applying it. The collapsible tube containing the Fossal Balm ends in a little nozzle about half an inch long, which fits into the nostrils and applies the ointment well up in the passages.

Here it works almost like magic, killing the disease germs, checking the inflammation, relieving that burning irritation, clearing the passages for easy breathing, and restoring normal, healthy conditions.

Use Fossal Balm at the first sign of a cold in the head—it will not only save you from all the miserable discomfort of it, but in doing so will protect you from the more serious diseases which follow neglected colds. Every Meal Brought Agony

But Since Taking "Little Digesters" He Can Eat Heartily

From Osgoode Station, Ont., comes a story of five years of suffering from Indigestion and Dyspepsia—five years of doctoring in vain—then "Little Digesters" and a complete cure. Mr. R. H. Ralph tells the story—his own story—thus:

"I have been a sufferer from Indigestion and Stomach Trouble for five years. I had treatment from several doctors. I did not find a cure until I began using "Little Digesters".

I can hardly describe how much I suffered at times. Every meal brought with it more or less agony and I seemed to have a complete distaste for food. I had almost begun to think my case incurable when I came across an advertisement in the papers about 'Little Digesters". I decided to give them a trial. I am very thankful that I did so for I had not been taking them long when I found them helping me. I can now eat heartily and no longer feel pain and discomfort after eating."

Does Indigestion or Dyspepsia make your life miserable? Take "Little Digesters"—they will cure you or your money will be refunded.

Insulated Wires.

To keep electricity in the wires, to prevent it from escaping, which it is always trying to do, the wires have to be bandaged up in some substance through which the electricity cannot penetrate. This is called insulation. A wire is said to be insulated when it is wrapped in nonconducting covers. Dry hair is the best material; next rank glass, mica, porcelain, rubber, lava, oils, silk, cotton, etc. The wires used about ordinary buildings are insulated with rubber, oils, varnish and dry cloth. Some of the smaller wires, for electric bells, etc., are merely covered with closely woven silk or cotton threads. The best known conductor of electricity is silver, but it is too costly to be used commercially. Copper ranks next and is generally used for electric wiring.—New York World.

Did Her Work at Night.

Mrs. Catherine Gore, who wrote seventy novels between 1824 and 1861, worked on a strange plan. When J. R. Planche visited Paris in 1837 he found Mrs. Gore living in the Place Vendome writing novels, plays, articles for magazines—almost every description of literature flowing from her indefatigable pen. He says: "'How do you manage it?' I asked her. 'I receive, as you know, a few friends at dinner every evening. They leave me at 10 or 11, when I retire to my room and write till 7 or 8 in the morning. Then I go to bed till noon, when I breakfast, after which I drive out and pay visits, returning at 4 to dress for dinner. As soon as my friends have departed I go to work all night again.'"

"Rowell's Policy Is My Policy" Says Mr. George A. Gillespie

HOME RULE SITUATION TAKES ANOTHER TURN

Sir Edward Carson's Mission in Belfast this Week Was One of Peace Rather Than of War.

HOPE OF SETTLEMENT

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Eng., June 6—With Sir Edward Carson's return from Belfast, this morning, the opinion as to the Home Rule situation has taken another turn. When he went to Ireland, some days ago, it was freely stated that he was going to arrange for an immediate summoning and operation of Ulster's provisional government. It seems now that he was on a mission, rather of peace, than of war. Addressing the Orange workingmen in Belfast, yesterday, he emphasized the necessity for forbearance, even intimating that he had yet hopes for a settlement by mutual compromise. Like all other Ulster leaders, Carson Unitarites who have to be held in a Ulsterites who hav eto be held in a leash. They are asking daily, "When do we act?" They look for drastic action, rather than reasoning. On the whole, the situation to-day is more hopeful of settlement.

REVIEW OF THE GROCERY SITUATION

Reviewing the grocery market situation, Canadian Grocer says in this week's issue:

Office of Publication, Toronto, June 5, 1914.

While from the East there are most favourable reports as to business conditions, it cannot be said that there has been any marked improvement in Toronto, and from the West, here is the influence, of dry, hot weather which is general on the prairies. Montreal has found conditions improved with the opening of navigation, and St. John finds better weather conditions a factor, but in the West, where the crop is behind two to three weeks, the influence of such weather as is now prevailing is likely to be serious. Under conditions which must be considered as adverse to a big business, the markets are maintaining strength and Winnipeg particularly finds prices tending to advance; in Ontario it is felt that with normal conditions there would be higher prices quoted on some commodities.

The sugar market has maintained strength under the increases and there seems to be a feeling for still higher prices, the situation in New York being strong and the increase in the visible supply being fully offset by the large consumption.

Western conditions have given strength to wheat, and flour might be expected to advance under normal conditions. As it is the high price of mill feeds is some consolation to the miller. Export offers have increased and are now on a basis that would have meant big business a few weeks ago, but in the face of the wheat market, prices have naturally stiffened. May corn closed very high and higher priced corn cereals may be expected.

The butter situation is interesting, and there will undoubtedly be an effort to establish export relations with the American market, but the spread will need to be better than at present to encourage a big volume of trade. Grass products are late and there has not been marked improvement in the quality as yet; first quality stuff is firm. Eggs are being graded in a wider compass, but first selects are firmer in price if anything.

Hams are firm and will soon advance. Hogs are finding a better market and higher prices may be looked for.

Potatoes are easier in Ontario, with new varieties more plentiful, although St. John reports a scarcity and higher prices. Toronto quotations are lower. Oregon fancy apples are in, and canteloupes are now to be had. Southern vegetables and fruits are abounding, and lower prices are in order—this is particularly noticeable in Montreal's vegetable market.

THE WEATHER

During the night the temperature was again down almost to the freezing point. Thirty-five degrees was the official figure, and it is probable that Jack Frost made his appearance in low lying sections.

INTERESTING JUDGMENT BY JUDGE HUYCKE

There's no Recovery Under the Canadian Act When a Diseased Animal is Sold

AN AWKWARD CASE

His Honour Judge Huycke delivered judgment yesterday in a case which, he says, has been a most awkward problem for him to solve. The case will be of particular interest to the farming fraternity.

George Mitchell and David Oliver, who retained as counsel, Messrs. Gordon, and Widdifield, sued Samuel Whatley, and John Allen, who were represented by Mr. G. W. Hatton.

The plaintiff's claim was for $68, for the sale of a cow from defendant, Whatley.

The defendants claim that the cow purchased was diseased at the time, and defendant Whatley counterclaimed for expenses and trouble, owing to the animal's condition.

There is, in vogue, a Canadian Act, known as the "Animals Contagious Diseases Act," and a section of the Act says that if a person sells an animal which is diseased, he is liable to a heavy penalty"

The Judge said there are only two Canadian cases on this point, but many English cases.

One of the Canadian cases decides that the rule of Caveat Emptor must apply. The other Canadian case was decided in one of the western provinces, a part of the decision being as follows: "Any money given for a cow that is sold with a disease, or the sum given for any diseased animal, is no consideration.

The Judge was satisfied that both parties were innocent, that is, the plaintiff did not know that the animal was diseased when he sold it, and the defendant bought the cow not knowing it was diseased. The result is, he said, that we have two innocent parties, and it is a question as to who must suffer.

In this section of the Canadian Act, be same as in the English Act, it finds that there is no recovery, and therefore no civil remedy can be applied.

After the counter claim had been stated, the Judge said that if the plaintiff had known the cow to be diseased, the result would have been different, but as he did not know, no civil remedy availed. The original claim entered by the plaintiffs was for $69.70 of which $62 was made to be the value of the cow, and the remaining $7.70, of some chickens. In this matter His Honour gave judgment for the plaintiff, for $7.70, the value of the chickens, and costs. Defendant succeeding as to the price the cow was sold for.

INTO ONE TROOP

All the Scout patrols in Peterborough have combined into one troop for the present, which will meet every Friday night at the Armouries under the following leaders: Scout Master, J. W. Milby, and Assistant Scout Masters McNeilly, Brooks and Sedgwick.

A signalling patrol is being organized under the leadership of Mr. McLeish. Week-end camps will be held down the river throughout the summer holidays. This year it is expected that a patrol will be sent to the Toronto Exhibition. Any boy who wishes to have the opportunity to take advantage of these outings had better join the Scouts right away.

Would any person who has a picture of the Scouts being inspected by the Duke of Connaught please send it to the Examiner or communicate with us, as the Scouts would like to get one of the pictures for their rooms.

On the evening of the 14th inst. the Boy Scouts will hold a church parade to St. Luke's Church.

A parade was held last night at the Armouries and a good number of Scouts were out. Afterwards scouting games were played.

GEORGE A GILLESPIE UNANIMOUS CHOICE OF LIBERALS AS STANDARD BEARER IN THE COMING ELECTION

Striking Tribute to the Personality of the Candidate and the Soundness of the "Abolish-the-Bar" Policy of Mr. Rowell—The Most Harmonious and Enthusiastic Liberal Convention Ever Held in Peterboro' Selects Mr. Gillespie to Fight For the Cause of Liberalism and Temperance.

At the most enthusiastic and most harmonious convention in the local history of the Liberal party, ex-Ald. Geo. A. Gillespie was last night unanimously chosen as the standard-bearer of the Liberal party in West Peterborough in the coming Provincial election. There was no doubt about the feeling of the convention. The gathering was a unit in favour of Mr. Gillespie, and in acclaiming the abolish-the-bar platform of Mr. N. W. Rowell. The wildly enthusiastic reception of Mr. Gillespie's nomination was a remarkable tribute to the candidate's personality and record, as well as to the soundness of the policy of the leader under whose cause he has enlisted. The meeting rose to its feet and cheered wildly when Mr. Gillespie was nominated, and then burst into singing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

The large Conservatory Hall was filled and it was a confident, enthusiastic gathering throughout. Any mention of Mr. Rowell's policy was enthusiastically received, and the hearty speeches that followed the nomination were a barometer of the feeling of the meeting.

Mr. Gillespie's speech in acceptance of the nomination was a frank, manly declaration of his entire accordance with the policy of Mr. Rowell. "Rowell's policy is my policy" was the keynote of his remarks.

In opening the Convention President Hartley remarked that the Government had seen fit to spring an election within a few weeks. He could not see any reason for calling an election in such haste, but they were not there to criticize the Government; they had gathered to select a candidate. Mr. Hartley was sure that if the man was selected, the Liberals could carry West Peterborough. It was evident that the Liberals had awakened and were prepared to take a deeper interest in the coming election. "We have a policy that none need be ashamed of, and a leader that all have confidence in," remarked Mr. Hartley amid loud applause. "We will make no mistake in following him."

Election of Officers.

The first business was the election of officers resulting as follows:

President—J. J. Hartley.

1st Vice-President—Philip Crough, Ennismore.

2nd Vice-President—Thos. H. Graham, Smith.

Secretary—G. N. Gordon.

Treasurer—Ald. J. J. Duffus.

Executive—Herb Dawson, North Monaghan; John Fowler, South Monaghan; J. H. Garbutt, Smith; John Young, Ennismore; Robert Shaw, Harvey; Chas. Coben, Galway; Wm. Ford, Cavendish.

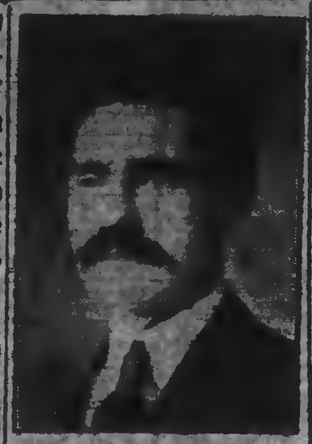
The services of Mr. Hartley as president were appreciatively referred to by Mr. A. H. Stratton, who nominated him.

Mr. Gordon's Remarks.

Mr. G. N. Gordon expressed a desire that he be relieved of the duties of the secretaryship, but the Convention would not hear of his resignation. Mr. Gordon was of the opinion that the chances before the Liberals in the coming election were brighter than for a number of years. He referred to the fact that Hon. J. J. Foy, the author of the so-called Law Reform, had had a narrow escape from losing the nomination in a Toronto riding. Mr. Gordon redicnied the Conservative law reform, saying that it was like the tariff, revised upward. There was not a lawyer in Peterborough who was not thoroughly satisfied with it because he was making more money than before.

Mr. Gordon pointed out that the Workmen's Compensation had been fathered by Mr. Rowell and Mr. Proudfoot. The Liberals gave it, although the Conservatives promised it.

Law reform as promised by Mr. Rowell embodied courts that would do common, rugged justice, courts for the common people and courts that would do away with technicalities that deceived the people. Rowell's policy meant a great social and moral reform. The Liberal platform had come back to true principles, as it never had been for a generation.



EX-ALD. GEO. A. GILLESPIE,
The Unanimous Choice of the Liberals of West Peterborough.

Resolutions Passed.

The following resolutions were unanimously passed:

Moved by W. C. Austin,
Seconded by Geo. Laing,

And resolved, That this convention, representing the Liberals and friends of moral reform of West Peterborough, hereby place on record an emphatic expression of entire confidence in Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., leader of the Liberal party in this Province; and also its sense of admiration of his high character as a man; of his courage and resource, energy and perseverance as a leader, and of his breadth of vision and regard for the best interests of the public as a statesman; and,

This convention heartily approves his policy as one of progress and incarnation of the principle that the good of the people is the supreme law—embodying, as it does, the great reform, as far as legislative action can be effective, implied in the abolition of one of the greatest state and social evils in the world's history; and also embodying such important measures as taxation reform, a fair chance to labour, reforms in educational agricultural organization and administration, extension of the municipal franchise to married women; energetic measures for the settlement and development of our arable resources; and in a word, every progressive reform demanded by the people and welfare of the Province of Ontario; and that

This convention pledges its united and hearty support to the candidate nominated by this convention; and promises to employ every legitimate means to secure his return, as a supporter of the leader who keeps his word and means what he says, and will do his duty to his Province without fear or favour.

Mr. Stratton's Absence regretted.

Moved by Wm. Stevens,
Seconded by Wm. B. Anderson,

That this convention hereby voice its deep regret at the enforced absence from it, through serious illness, of Hon. J. R. Stratton, who during a third of a century has not been absent from a Liberal convention, but has been to the front of the Liberal fighting line at every contest, and in his own case, with one exception, at the head when the votes were counted; and also bears testimony of its appreciation of the valuable services he has rendered West Peterborough and the County and Province, as one of the best representatives and most capable Cabinet Ministers the Riding and Province ever had;

That this convention deplores his illness and extends the earnest sympathy the occasion calls for, with a hope for his restoration to health; and

That the secretary be instructed to forward Mr. Stratton a copy of this resolution.

In speaking to his resolution Mr. Austin said that there was an issue before the people now. An issue that would carry the country. The time had come when people should be protected against what is not a necessity, but a menace. That issue was made necessary the greater part of police courts and policemen. Mr. Austin referred to the conditions under local option in Owen Sound which he had visited a short time before.

An Ovation For the Candidate —Speakers Acclaim Mr. Rowell's Stand for Temperance and Meeting Wildly Applauds Both Policy and Candidate — Mr. Gillespie Declares Himself as Entirely in Accord With Mr. Rowell's Platform—"Rowell's Platform is My Platform" Was the Keynote.

Temperance Association.

A letter was read from the County of Peterborough Temperance Association as follows:

Peterborough, May 30, 1914.

Mr. G. N. Gordon,
Secretary Liberal Association, West Peterborough, George St. City.

Dear Sir,—We have been instructed to request you to inform the delegates to your nominating convention that at a convention held in the City of Peterborough on Tuesday, May 19th, 1914, attended by about one hundred temperance electors representing almost all the municipalities in the County and representing both political parties, we endorsed with practical unanimity the platform of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance as adopted at the last provincial convention in Toronto. Probably the two most important clauses of that platform as the following:

(1) "That this Convention re-affirms as its platform the object for which the Dominion Alliance stands, namely, 'The Total Suppression of the Traffice in Intoxicating Beverages,' and declares it to be the duty of the Ontario Legislature to enact legislation prohibiting the liquor traffic as far as is within the power of a Provincial Legislative Assembly."

(2) "That this Convention calls upon all friends of the temperance cause to rise above party preference and affiliation in earnest effort on the very opportunity to secure the nomination and election to the Legislative Assembly, of men who will support the most progressive temperance legislation proposed, regardless of party consideration, and that this can only be attained by loyally standing by candidates who are known, avowed, and trustworthy supporters of the Alliance policy."

As the members of our Association represent both political parties we would prefer to support the candidate of the party to which we belong and therefore, we express the hope that both parties in both ridings in the County will place in the field, candidates who will undertake, if elected, to vote for the abolition of the bar and shop and the cancellation of club licenses, and who will also undertake to support all advanced temperance legislation by whichever party it is introduced.

Should only one temperance candidate be nominated in each riding on a platform acceptable to the temperance interests, we shall feel in honour bound to support him provided his record is also acceptable. If neither party places a temperance man in the field our executive is instructed to immediately call riding conventions and arrange for the taking of such further action as may be in the best interests of the temperance cause.

H. B. COWAN,
President.

A. B. CUNNINGHAM,
Acting Secretary.

The letter was received on motion of Messrs. Robt. McGregor and G. W. Powell. The latter stated that he was never more proud of the Liberal platform than he was at the present time.

"Our answer to this communication," said President Hartley, "will be given in our nomination of a candidate." (Cheers).

The Candidate Nominated.

When the call for candidates was made Mr. J. H. Garbutt, of Smith, nominated Ex-Ald. Geo. A. Gillespie amid the wildest enthusiasm which was redoubled when Mr. McGregor in seconding the nomination referred to Mr. Gillespie as a consistent temperance man, a man every Liberal could proudly follow.

"Might it not be well for Mr. Gillespie to express himself as to his policy before the nomination is voted on?" inquired Mr. C. F. Lloyd. "You know the other night a Pharisee, a wolf in sheep's clothing, was nominated at the Conservative Convention and then got up and renounced part of his leader's policy."

This statement was greeted with applause and laughter, and in reply to calls of "Platform," Mr. Lloyd climbed unto the stage and repeated his opinion of the Conservative nominee, whom he said, was not a gentleman.

LAST MINUTE DESPATCHES FROM THE WORLD OVER

PLANTS WERE DAMAGED BY FROST

Farmers' Market Was Well Attended

THE PRICES TO-DAY

The market presented a somewhat more business-like appearance this morning. The upper hall was well filled, while there was a big attendance on the outside market.

The new regulations, passed by the Board of Health, are being better observed, and the tendency is to make a betterment of trade, both for the vendor and the purchaser. The weight of all fowl was this morning ticketed, and the fowl sold accordingly.

A large supply of eggs was available, and as large a demand was made on the supplies, which sold at 22 cents per dozen.

Butter, the household commodity, which proves itself a necessity, was in great demand, met with an average supply, at a slightly increased price. Butter sold at from 23 to 24 cents per pound.

Chickens were scarce, and sold for from 75 cents to $1.00 each. On the outside market, rhubarb and radishes were strongly in evidence, and sold for the customary price of 5 cents per bunch.

Potatoes also were fairly plentiful, and the ruling price for the "Murphies" was $1.00 per bag, although some were being offered at $1.25 per bag.

Meat was conspicuous by its absence, neither beef, mutton, pork or veal being obtainable.

Live stock was in strong evidence, but there was not much demand.

Shoats were selling at from eight to ten dollars per pair.

The farmers report that the slight frosts which have been noticeable of late, have done considerable damage to the smaller spring plants.

The wheat also will be put back a grade.

Other commodities sold at the usual prices.

Hides, 10-11c.
Live hogs, $7.75.
Dressed hogs, $10.00.

Saw Irving's Exit From The Living

LONDON, June 5.—Tatting, the stage manager of the Kingsway Theatre, London, relates an extraordinary dream he had about the time of the Empress of Ireland disaster, in which he saw the exit of Laurence Irving from life. He dreamt he was present at a gathering of a number of people in a handsomely furnished room. The people passed in solemn procession before Sir Henry Irving, who was seated, and had the appearance of a dying man. Each person took the actor by the hand in a sad farewell.

When all had passed Sir Henry rose and uttered the words: "I can endure it no longer." He placed his hand on his forehead and disappeared, death having claimed him.

Tatting then for the first time noticed Laurence standing alone at the far end of the room.

"I went towards him," said Tatting, "and, stretching out my hands appealing, exclaimed: 'Can't you see what is happening to your father? He is dying. He was left up for ever.' He then looked past me with amazement in his eyes. It seemed for a moment as if he would collapse, but suddenly drawing himself up with a resolute expression on his face, he followed his father with unfaltering steps.

"It was a most dramatic departure and made a deep impression on me. There was no sorrow on the part of the son whose call to go seemed to come suddenly and unexpectedly."

Tatting afterwards saw a photograph of the saloon of the Empress of Ireland. He recognized it as the room of his dream. He had never seen the vessel nor was he aware that Laurence Irving was aboard the Empress of Ireland.

OTHER LATE NEWS

ANTI-TRUST MEASURES.

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 6.—This afternoon President Wilson's three anti-trust measures will reach the Senate and there will be commenced a serious fight to throw them out. And as the Senate has already shown its strength against the present administration, it is thought the consequences may be serious. Several senators have indicated their intention of backing these measures even to the limit of the United States' constitution.

BIG FIRM SUSPENDS.

LONDON, Eng., June 6.—Chaplin & Company, big bankers and merchants who, through their former partner, Arthur Morton Grenfell, the son-in-law of Earl Grey, were at one time trying to control the Grand Trunk railway, were announced as suspended to-day. Their capital is nearly two millions and their liabilities very heavy. It is believed that several important Canadian enterprises are involved in to-day's failure.

CABINET DISSOLVED.

PARIS, France, June 6. — Rene Vivian's cabinet was no sooner formed than it was dissolved again, and Vivian called on President Poincare this afternoon and announced his inability to carry on the government. It is thought that Theophile Delcasse will be the next choice.

Wedding Favours Shown By Morgan Hardware Co.

The Morgan Co.'s store windows are just now dressed in a specially attractive manner, displaying a classy exhibit of appropriate gifts for the June bride. Emphasis is given this south window by a display of the "Regent" 1847" silverware, shown in fine cutlery and table ware. A beautiful conception of the wide range is seen at a glance, artistically arranged and conveniently priced. Service and quality being two points well combined in these goods, make them really sensible as well as practical articles for presentation. The north window contains a pleasing relief of Guernsey earthen ware, and are shown in pretty shades of brown on the outside and pure white enamel on the inside. These goods also make useful and common sense gifts and so moderately priced that none need hesitate about the expense. The samples of round and oval casseroles in silver receivers of various sizes are having quite a run. The window dresser is entitled to credit for the displays, which are characterized by both taste and tact.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1914

MR. GILLESPIE, CANDIDATE.

Mr. George A. Gillespie, the well-known and highly respected citizen, the enterprising and honourable business man, the well known cheese buyer and creamery proprietor, was last night nominated candidate of the Liberal party and the candidate of all interested in advanced temperance reform, and social and other reform interests. He was the unanimous choice of one of the most enthusiastic, unanimous and harmonious conventions ever held in West Peterborough. The convention had no cross currents; it exploited no scheming of faction, but was straightforward facing of the issue and above-board conduct of the business of the convention. The gathering was widely representative territorially, and varied in political complexion; there were many prominent temperance Conservatives present and a good representation of what was called in 1911, the "British Born," all enthusiastic for the policy of the candidate and his leader.

There was no doubt of the feeling of this representatives convention. The keynote was Rowell's policy of "abolish the bar." Mr. Gillespie in his modest speech in accepting nomination, placed himself squarely upon Mr. Rowell's platform, not only of temperance legislation, but in regard to the many other questions of tax reform, improved agricultural and educational organization and administration, etc. And the speeches of all who spoke, and they were many, gave expression of the same opinion.

No candidate ever entered the field in West Peterborough with greater promise of success. He has the advantage of a good living and unblemished record as a man and business man and public spirited citizen. He has showed his capacity as a representative by excellent, sane, level-headed service as an alderman. He is an eminently safe man to discharge an important trust. He is well known in city and county, especially in the latter, where his business relations have brought him in contact with all sections of the riding. He has the prestige of being an advocate of the issue which has been forced by Mr. Rowell in this contest, the temperance issue which his opponents cannot evade. If not explicitly, they inferentially, accept the issue. When a candidate of the Whitney government is impelled, in order to give himself a fighting chance to deny the policy of his leader, and steal the policy of Mr. Rowell, it is practical proof that the issue is accepted and feared by his opponents.

Mr. Gillespie's prospects are very bright; but it is difficult to precise a forecast in view of the complication of the situation. New and non-political issues has been injected into the situation. There has been a readjustment of party lines, and the straight Grit and Tory issue is largely obscured. Many Conservatives feel strongly on the temperance issue, whose only hope is the success of the Rowell candidate(and there are some Liberals who do not favour so drastic a temperance reform. In this riding the Conservative friendliness to the temperance issue is indirectly intensified by the resentment they naturally feel at the down-throw and rejection of Mr. Peck. It is known that the better class of Conservatives, the men who cherish honour and fair play in even political dealings, feel this resentment keenly. This feeling will not make them any too enthusiastic in support of the candidate, foisted upon them as a candidate of the Whitney government, but a personally confessed and powerless candidate of his opponent, on one matter of policy. Nor will those Conservatives in favour of the retention of the license system feel any great enthusiasm for the candidate who poses even for selfish purposes as an advocate of a hands-tie-her policy.

If the resentment referred to is carried to the polls and finds expression there, this, and the apathy naturally engendered, will operate in Mr. Gillespie's favour, directly and indirectly; and if the professed friends of temperance of whatever party, are true to their professions and accept the chance of a lifetime to abolish the bar, they will support Mr. Gillespie, the candidate and supporter of the man who keeps his word. Mr. Rowell promised two and a half years ago to make the temperance issue an issue in the next elections, and he has kept his word. If the electors of West Peterborough measure up to this standard, Mr. Gillespie will be the next member for West Peterborough.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

Did any one ever see a horse win a mile race, no matter what his potential speed, that started strong and ran at top speed a hundred yards and then stopped short? Peterborough citizens, the Board of Trade, the Ad Club, the Horticultural Society and the City Fathers made a splendid start a week or two ago at a banquet in the Oriental Hotel; and one who noted the apparent spirit of the occasion, the stirring speeches, would have expected that the civic drive proposal would have in some sense, have been well under way long since. But it has, apparently, stopped short and even in the most figurative sense, the first sod has not been turned.

Why is it that so many of our resolutions in regard to civic betterment partake of the nature of the much saturized New Year's resolution? We shall have to get over these spasms and settle into a steady stride before we can hope to accomplish anything worth while in the matter of city beautification or public improvement of any kind. This is the first step, or one of the first steps, towards accomplishing anything permanent. We must not only make good resolutions, but live up to them.

But it is as well, perhaps, that we do not go faster for the public is not yet ready for the city beautiful. The public will not respect and refrain from destroying beauty in public or semi-public places. As not one of the first, but the very first, step to achieving the city beautiful, we must do a little Christianizing of the public. We must get our churches and our schools to preach and enjoin the divine principle and essence of all religion in our human relations—the golden rule—"do unto others, etc.; that is, respect the rights, the property, the feelings, and the work of others as religiously as if they were our own.

We must try to lay the evil spirit that is far too generally prevalent, that is accountable for things like this. Day before yesterday Mr. Gliddon of the Conservatory of Music, was telling a citizen that last year some vandal or vandals, during a night in early June, broke off the opening buds of several peony clumps, and in so doing wrenched up some of the stems by the roots. Yesterday morning Mr. Gliddon called in the same citizen, as he was passing the Conservatory, and showed him what the outrage had been repeated the night before. Between seventy five and a hundred buds, ready to open had been broken off and taken away, and many of the stems were torn from the roots. This bed of peonies is in the angle formed by the junction of the music hall with the Conservatory building, and is in full view of the street. The lady of the house and family set great store by these peonies, and have been fostering them for years, and think the flowers so beautiful, so fine a view to the public who pass by, that they will not even pinch them for the adornment of their own house.

Herein is manifested the true spirit of the city beautiful. We cannot beautify our own premises, especially with open lawns, or plant trees and build boulevards and keep them in trim order without benefitting the public as much as ourselves. And if we can't persuade the authorities; if we can't civilize a section of the public, we shall only create beauty for the public enjoyment, to be destroyed. We are like, in this respect, the old Romans—they wreathed the ox they were to sacrifice to their heathen gods, with flowers, and we plant flowers and lay down lawns and boulevards to be destroyed—progressively—from the moment they are planted, or made.

Another instance: A citizen, on the corner of Babb's Lane and Homewood Avenue, this spring improved his home, building a fine new verandah, and laying down a beautiful lawn. This public-spirited action—this contribution to the city beautiful involves a double outrage. The owner had to disfigure his work with a barricade of stakes and wires to keep his lawn from being tramped upon before the seed grew. This involuntary and enforced outrage destroyed the beauty of his new lawn. Another outrage consists in the fact that such a protection was necessary.

How in the name of all that is decent can such things be cured? The cure may be slow, but not so slow if reform is begun at the right place. Those who make the unsightly lawn defence necessary include the pupils going to and coming from the Queen Mary school. At this school the lawns have just been laid down and the pupils are made to "keep off the grass." Why should not the teachers ingrain the principles of, respect for property and others' rights, and make their pupils practice these principles after they are from under the teacher's eye—beyond the swing of his birch?

There's where we shall have to begin; there and in the home. We cannot talk hopefully or even, possibly, of the city beautiful till we have got the public in the way of not destroying the beauty of our public and semi-public places. We, or any part of the public, have no more right to set foot on a private lawn, or to make it a path-way, than we have to tramp the pattern out of the drawing-room carpet of the adjacent residence. A man or woman of fine sensibilities and respect for right will not set foot upon a private lawn, even if not enclosed with a fence. When we get this condition of destroying things cured we can then, with reasonable prospect of permanent results, have encouragement, individually and collectively, as citizens, to contribute our share to city beautification.

Exchanging a Compliment.

College Widow — You displayed some marvellous curves this afternoon, Mr. Valeyard.

man and who, if he turned much more, as he had done in the past few days, would turn black.

Mr. Edward Navey expressed a desire to hear from Mr. Gillespie. He said that if Mr. Gillespie was prepared to work for Mr. Rowell's policy he would do everything in his power for him. He was prepared to do anything to fight the drink evil, and if Mr. Gillespie was sound as he did not doubt that he was, he would assist him in any way possible. (Cheers).

An Ovation for Candidate.

There was a wild outburst as Mr. Gillespie made his way to the platform. Cheer after cheer came from the hall and then the gathering broke into "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," followed by three cheers and a tiger that must have been heard all over the West Ward. It was a tribute such as few candidates receive.

"I am quite free to give my opinion," said Mr. Gillespie, "and I am not saying this to get the nomination. I accept Mr. Rowell's platform as it stands framed by him and the Liberal party. It is a straight business-like proposition. Mr. Rowell promises to go further and when he does I will follow him." (Cheers).

Nomination Unanimous.

In moving that the nomination be made unanimous, Mr. R. R. Hall said that the Liberal party had never entered a campaign with more encouraging prospects and that the nominee would be carried to victory.
had his soul seared ithej8 zbzbzzbzbz

The cause before the electorate was one that would appeal to the community. The Conservative party was trying to make out that there was only one issue, abolish the bar. The Liberals were prepared to fight them on that issue only, but there were other questions that demanded consideration. Mr. Hall instanced the decrease in rural population and the high cost of living.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, in seconding the resolution said that he had known Mr. Gillespie for fifteen or eighteen years. "A sounder, fairer, truer man than Geo. A. Gillespie can't be found in Ontario," said Mr. Kerr, amid cheers. He was a consistent temperance man and when Mr. Rowell was making his great fight for temperance on the floor of the House, it would be better for him to have Geo. A. Gillespie with him than to have Robt. J. Soden shooting him in the back one minute and saying, "I'm with you" the next.

Mr. Gillespie was then declared the unanimous choice of the Convention.

The Candidate's Reply.

After the cheering had subsided Mr. Gillespie said that he had had at first no intention of accepting another nomination, at least for some time to come, but he had felt that he was needed to go out and fight for Liberalism and the temperance cause.

"I accept the nomination and thank you for the honour," said Mr. Gillespie. "I feel that I have the unanimous support of the Liberal party and of the temperance people. If the temperance people ever meant anything, they must show it now in voting for Mr. Rowell. I will do my best with the help of the party to redeem West Peterborough, and I hope when June 29th comes we will have nothing to regret in our mode of campaign and that we shall have been successful here and all over the province. I am thoroughly in sympathy with Mr. Rowell's principle and am confident that he will carry out his promises."

Mr. H. B. Cowan.

Mr. H. B. Cowan, President of the County of Peterborough Temperance Association, said that he had sounded the feelings of temperance people on both sides of politics and that the temperance party were absolutely sincere and prepared to fight for the cause. Further than that he was unable to say anything until the officers of the Association had interviewed both candidates.

Mr. Robert Shaw.

Mr. Robert Shaw, Harvey, expressed himself as delighted with the results of the convention and the nomination of Mr. Gillespie. He was confident that the Liberal party would be returned in West Peterborough and promised to do everything in his power to see that Mr. Gillespie was returned.

Mr. Wm. Stevens.

Mr. Wm. Stevens, who introduced himself as coming from the Conservative township of North Monaghan, could see no reason why the minority in that township could not be converted into a majority for Mr. Gillespie. "Our candidate is a clean man. If I didn't know he was a clean man I would not vote for him."

Mr. Edward Navey.

A stirring temperance appeal was made by Mr. Edward Navey, who said that he belonged to neither political party in this country. In a voice that trembled with emotion Mr. Navey, who said he was a Britisher, pleaded for support for Mr. Rowell's policy. "I have had my soul seared with that terrible liquor traffic," he said. "I have lost a sister through it. If you have any regard for your wives and children, for God's sake come out and support the policy enunciated by Mr. Rowell."

The speaker remarked that if a potato disease or the swine fever broke out, the government spent thousands of dollars to check it, but with the terrible effects of the liquor traffic before them they stood idly by and let it go on.

Ald. Duffus.

Ald. J. J. Duffus said that if a man whose temperance record was a sound one had not been nominated he would have been forced to decline the position of treasurer. There was not cause for that with Mr. Gillespie nominated, and he felt sure that Mr. Gillespie would be elected. The nominee was a man they could depend upon to take a consistent part for the temperance cause. He hoped that the policy of Mr. Rowell would be triumphant. The temperance people had not had a fair chance.

Mr. Geo. Ball.

Mr. Geo. Ball expressed his pleasure at seeing Mr. Rowell take a forward stand for temperance. He liked to be mixed up in a contest, but this time there would be no opposition, the Conservatives had no candidate. Their nominee had said that he would vote for temperance when he knew it was not the policy of the party. The Liberal party was the temperance, the Conservative party the liquor party. Why the government even share in the receipts taken in by the bars," declared Mr. Ball. "If that does not make them partners with the liquor interests, I don't know where it leaves them."

Ald. G. Walter Green.

Ald. G. Walter Green expressed himself as delighted that the choice of the meeting had fallen upon Mr. Gillespie. He would do everything in his power to assist Mr. Gillespie in the coming campaign.

Mr. Edward Courtney.

Mr. Edward Courtney said that he had been a temperance man all his life and he was glad to see the convention so unanimous in favour of Mr. Rowell's abolish-the-bar policy. They had a good temperance candidate in Mr. Gillespie, whom he felt sure they would all support.

Hearty cheers for the King, Mr. Rowell and the candidate brought a most successful convention to a close.

IT ALL STARTED FROM A BAD COLD

Watford Man Found Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mr. Robt. Taylor, Sr., After Suffering for Two Years, Tells of the Benefits He got from Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Watford, Ont., June 5.—(Special).—Mr. Robert Taylor, Sr., a very estimable man living here, is telling his friends that the pain in his back, from which he suffered for some time, has disappeared, and that he gives all the credit to Dodd's Kiney Pills.

"My trouble started with a cold," Mr. Taylor states, "and though I was treated by a doctor I got no permanent relief. I had cramps in my muscles and stiffness in my joints, my sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I perspired freely with the least exertion. I had attacks of rheumatism and sciatica, and though I tried many medicines I found no relief till I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. I must say they were a great benefit to me."

Mr. Taylor's troubles came from his kidneys. The diseased kidneys failed to strain the uric acid out of the blood, and the results were as he has stated. Dodd's Kidney Pills put the kidneys in working order, the uric acid was strained out of the blood, and the troubles went with it.

There were in the neighbourhood of fifty couples present, and the dance was a very enjoyable one. A special car conveyed the party City-ward shortly before midnight, bringing to a conclusion a very successful dance.

The first band concert of the season was given last evening in Victoria Park by the 57th Regimental Band, under the leadership of Mr. R. Gliddon. The citizens turned out in large numbers, and enthusiastic applause greeted each selection, especially the one from Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore," and the Broadway Revue, a medley of popular songs. The rendition of "Son of My Soul" and "Abide with Me," with chimes, was one of the most delightful features of the programme. Lieut. Gliddon and Bandsman Minnicola played a selection for two cornets entitled "Flirtation," that was thoroughly enjoyed.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

ROUTINE BUSINESS BY BOARD OF EDUCATION IN SESSION LAST NIGHT

The Board of Education met in regular session last night, and in the absence of Dr. M. A. Morrison, Mr. H. F. Ackerman occupied the chair. There were present, besides the acting chairman, Col. Miller, and Messrs. Crane, Smith, Hill, Eastwood, and McGrath.

On behalf of the Board, Mr. Ackerman welcomed Mr. McGrath to the Board of Education. Mr. McGrath has been appointed by the Separate School Board to represent the Separate School ratepayers on the Board of Education in the place of Mr. L. M. Hayes, who a short time ago was appointed Senior Judge of Wellington County. Last night Mr. Ackerman expressed the pleasure of the Board at having Mr. McGrath with them, and said that he and the other members felt that the Separate School officials had made a wise choice.

Not Satisfied.

Communications were received from the contractors who built the new East and West Ward schools, saying that they were not satisfied with the architects' award of $500 for extras in connection with the erection of the two schools in question. This amount was approved of by the Board at last meeting. Mr. Langford asked for an additional $105 for cement lintels that the architect had ordered, and Mr. Johnson as well as the $105 requested a still further amount of about $100 for extras. The latter's total claim for extras is therefore about $700 and the former about $600.

Mr. Ackerman explained that the original contract called for stone lintels, but in the reducing of the general cost, these had been replaced by wood lintels. Later the wood lintels were changed in the plans to cement lintels, the architect agreeing with the contractors that they be awarded $100 extra for this. They installed the cement lintels, and now the architect will not recommend the $105 to be paid by the Board. The matter was referred to the Building Committee to report back to the Board.

Plans were to hand for a revision of the ventilating system of the Collegiate Institute, and this item will be a heavier one than was at first anticipated. The matter was referred to the Supervision Committee to report back to the Board.

Mr. Crane verbally reported that the Supervision Committee had been looking into the proposal of opening the Collegiate Institute to the pupils of the county. They had found that the matter was not as easily worked out as was thought at first, a great many more factors entering into it, and Mr. Crane, on behalf of the committee, asked for more time to consider it. This was granted by the Board.

It was decided, on the motion of Mr. Hill, that the Public Schools will close on 26th June and open on the 1st of September, and that the Collegiate Institute will close next Tuesday, 9th June, and open on the 1st of September.

A letter was received from the Department of Education informing the Board that no model students will attend the local Normal School next year. Last year there were in the neighbourhood of 25 model students, who came to Peterborough in the middle of August and left at the end of December. They were taught by the members of the Normal School staff. But this year, as the Board was notified last night, there will be no model students attending the local school.

On the motion of Messrs. Smith, and Crane, Mr. Stacey and Miss Warner were both given leave of absence until the end of the term on account of illness.

Mr. V. Eastwood reported to the Board that $30,000 insurance had been placed on the new schools and $9,000 insurance on the contents. The insurance was given (as in the case of the other local public schools) to different insurance companies who, if one school is burned, will all contribute proportionately to the amount of insurance that is to be paid. As the King Edward School is valued at practically the same as the new schools, and is only insured for $18,000, it was expressed last night that the insurance on that school should be raised to $30,000. This was left with the Finance Committee to deal with.

The Report of the Finance Committee was presented as follows:

Skin Trouble On The Scalp

Skin Dried and Cracked and Hair Fell Out—Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Eczema is annoying and distressing at any time, but doubly so when it gets into the scalp and causes the hair to fall out. Here is a grateful letter from a lady who was cured by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mrs. Hector Currie, Tobermory, Ont., writes:—"I was cured of a disagreeable skin disease of the scalp by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. The trouble started with itching and pain in the scalp, the skin would get dry and crack, and at times would bleed, and the hair would fall out. I tried three doctors without benefit, and suffered for three years. Reading in the almanac about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I began its use, and am now completely cured. The hair has grown again, and I am as well as I ever was. You are at liberty to use this letter, for I am glad to recommend so excellent a treatment.

Dr. Chase's Ointment has no rival as a cure for itching skin disease.

I hereby give notice that I will not be responsible for any debts contracted by my wife Caroline Bolton.

MANY NEW BUILDINGS AT STONY LAKE THIS YEAR

STONY LAKE, June 4.—Each year sees a large number of new structures go up at Stony Lake, and the season 1914 promises to outdo all others. Nowhere is this more noticeable than at Kawartha Park.

Mr. Ivor Brock's bungalow of the Californian type, is going up next to Mr. R. B. Rogers' log house; Mr. Husband of Hamilton has a new cottage of the usual Stony Lake type, erected south of Dr. Zimmerman's summer home. Mr. Blackmore of Toronto is having his new cottage erected near Kawartha Park spring, just north of Wynn's wharf. Contractor Ayotte is rushing the work.

Mr. Edmunds of Toronto, has a boat house immediately north of Mr. Blackmore's, which Mr. Ayotte built last fall.

During the winter Messrs. Cassidy Bros. cleared out the lower end of the 15th concession road right through to the lake. This spring the county will spend an appropriation of $150 on this line from the Burleigh road to the lake, removing some of the large limestone rocks that border the track, and reducing some of the steep grades. When completed this should make an excellent road for automobiles and still further popularize this resort.

The water in the lake is receding slowly. As a result "Sandy Beach Folly" is beginning to appear, but in order to reach the wharf, one would be obliged to swim out. The old wharf erected at Kawartha Park Post Office will still continue to do business for a number of years to come, a reminder of the industry of "Charlie" Brown, while the pine package pillar of concrete in the bay will remain a deserted monument to an indulgent government.

Prof. M. A. Mackenzie is having a dining-room added to his cottage, "Lochend." Contractor Cassidy is doing the work. Mr. Cassidy is also at work on the new Anglican Church, and is making splendid progress.

Mr. Thos. Wilson has given his cottage, "Capalino," a coat of paint.

Mr. F. C. Elliott has had his summer home, "Larkston Hall," painted white, with green trimming.

The Stoney Lake Navigation Co. are ever anxious to serve the cottagers, and have put on a regular daily service beginning Monday, 1st June.

The crews on the three steamers will be practically the same as last year. The Empress is busy towing logs at Squaw River. The Stoney Lake has just been up on the ways, and has had her hull below the water line painted a dark green. They are giving the upper works a coat of white paint.

Many yachts are, plying up and down, as well as the tugs Beaver and Ajax, with their scows heavily laden with wood on the down trips.

Last week for a few days we had a pest in the form of blow flies. They were so numerous that they made life almost unbearable unless one was concealed behind netting. They no sooner disappeared than the caterpillars came crawling on the scene; and in places where the trees are of the soft type, such as poplars and cherry, they covered everything. Carpenters who work in the vicinity state that they cannot pick up their tools without crushing a mass of them on the handles.

Mr. H. W. Stock and daughter motored to Kawartha Park last Saturday on their way to Juniper Island.

Mr. John Crane and daughter Miss Gladys spent the week-end at their cottage "Gladhalken."

"SUWANEE RIVER" IN SONG BOOK

The popularity of "Suwanee River" dates back to the time when Christine Nilsson, the fair haired daughter of a farmer near Wexio, Sweden, surprised all who heard her with the sweetness and compass of her voice as she sang Foster's plaintive melody. She was an accomplished player on the flute and violin and she made her debut at the early age of 17 at Stockholm. Like many of the famous prima donnas, the opera chosen for her appearance was "La Traviata." She made a concert tour of the United States and sang many years in Italian opera. At her farewell concert given in London her voice was exquisite in its purity and sweetness and evenness of tone, having a compass of three octaves, an exceptional range. In America she will be known and long remembered for her singing of "Suwanee River" in the height of her success and operatic triumphs. She was the acknowledged incomparable artist of her times. This beautiful song, and many others sang by Nilsson, are to be found in "Heart Songs" now offered by this paper to its readers, who will find the terms given in the coupon published on another page of to-day's issue.

Blacklister Fined $10.00

A blacklister indulged in too much liquor on the 30th of May and was fined $10 by Magistrate Dumble today.

A. Scopina, an Italian labourer, was in police court this morning for harbouring a dog without the necessary tag. After a lot of wrangling to make the foreigner understand the law, the case was enlarged till Monday to give him time to consult somebody who can make him understand enough to get a tag and not get fined for breaking the law.

Vandalism At Cemetery

Mr. Frank Wise, Superintendent of the Little Lake Cemetery Company, informs the Examiner that during the past few days there have been a number of instances of vandalism at the cemetery. Dozens of plants have been stolen and Mr. Wise is naturally highly indignant. He has decided to have a private detective watch the grounds and the first offender caught will be prosecuted.

MORE IDENTIFIED

QUEBEC, June 5.—Three identifications were made this morning of wreck victims, as follows: Mrs. Geo. Bolton, Toronto, by Mrs. J. Carscadden, her sister-inlaw; Miss Jennie Newton, Mineapolis, by Mr. William Cooke, of Toronto, her nephew, and Mrs. Andrew Kivesto, Port Arthur, her husband. Sixty-nine bodies still await identification in the morgue on the wharf, and arrangements have been made to move them to the vault in Solmont Cemetery to-morrow night. Thirty bodies were shipped to various points yesterday.

It is pathetic to see the number of men and women who, although they are certain that the bodies of their loved ones are not here, walk around and round scanning the poor bruised faces in the hope of recognizing their friends.

Mrs. Watson Still Missing.

Mr. C. Watson, of 2 Claremont Place, Toronto, whose wife, a member of the Tecumseh Street Salvation Army Corps, was on the Empress, is returning home to-day. He arrived in Quebec on Sunday afternoon, and also went down to Rimouski, but found no trace of his wife.

Mr. Poole, of Eaton's, who was down here to try to find Mrs. Cullen, is also returning to-day.

Mr. A. J. Musgrave of Winnipeg, last night identified the body of his sweetheart, Miss Alma Assafray. For days he has been uncertain as to whether it was she, but the identification was established beyond all doubt on the arrival of another friend last night.

The bags belonging to Major David Creighton and Ensign Knudson, of Toronto, have been washed ashore and have been sent on to the Salvation Army authorities. Miss Knudson's watch stopped at 2.25.

WHEN BABY SUFFERS FROM CONSTIPATION

Mothers, if your baby suffers from constipation, if his little stomach or bowels are out of order, give him Baby's Own Tablets. They never fail to give relief and an occasional dose will banish constipation and keep the stomach and bowels in perfect order. Concerning the Tablets, Mrs. J. H. Gagnon, St. Simon, Que., writes: I cannot recommend Baby's Own Tablets too highly as a cure for constipation as I have found them the very best medicine in the world for this trouble." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

INTERESTING DESCRIPTION OF LOCAL POWER GATE

Canadian Engineer Describes Plant at Auburn Which is to be Taken Over by the City

The Canadian Engineer has the following interesting reference to a notable sluice gate at the Auburn Power Plant. The Examiner is indebted to the Engineer for the illustrations which accompany this article:

The Auburn Power Company development on the Otonabee River possesses a number of interesting features, among which might be mentioned the specially designed travel-

Articles dealing with the design and construction of this interesting plant appeared several years ago in The Canadian Enugineer, but the above data are given to better describe the sluice gate with which this article deals.

Of the five wheel pits, four were designed for power units and the fifth for the exciter turbine unit. Each wheel has a net entrance area of 224 square feet to shut off the ling sluice gate by means of which the water can be shut off from any of the five wheel pits. The accompiers 6 feet thick and stop-log sluices gate and the gearing whereby it is operated.

The Auburn Power Company, which was purchased about four years ago by the Electric Power Company, operated a plant for a number of years consisting of one 250-w., 2,300-volt, three-phase, 60-cycle generator and exciter; one 100-kw. and one 40-kw. unit, both 550-volt d.c., compound-wound railway generators. These were driven by water wheel, and supplied light and power to Peterborough and power to the Pet-water quickly and completely in cases where repairs or examination of the turbine gates or runners are necessary. The Stoney sluice manufactured by Ransomes & Rapier, Limited, and illustrated herewith, was installed. The dimensions of this gate are 15 feet 3½ inches wide and 14 feet 3 inches high. It is constructed of riveted boiler plate and supported by a travelling gantry of structural steel, as shown. The apparatus is mounted on cast-iron wheels 2 feet in diameter with a 9 feet 8 inch base. It operates on rails at standard gauge.

The main dam is situated about 1,200 feet north of the power house, and is constructed of concrete with piers 6 feet thisk and stop-leg sluices 20 feet wide. Its maximum height is 24 feet and its length 452 feet, including the intake to the head canal, which occupies a total width of practically 100 feet. Each sluice has a depth of 10 feet below normal head water level and provides a total discharging capacity of 25,000 cubic feet per second. The stop-logs of both intake and dam are handled by chain winches.

The head canal, 1,299 feet long, with sides sloping 1½ to 1, and faced with 8 inches of reinforced concrete, varied in width from 74 feet near the head works to 63 feet immediately above the power-house.

even under a full head of water with the turbine gates opened full, consists of a set of circulating rollers on each side to run in the concrete stop-log gains. When the gate is closed leakage is minimized by the settling into place of adjustable side bars.

The gate is fitted for both electrical and hand operation. It may be raised or lowered against quickly running water passing through the opening under the maximum available, in the space of 2½ minutes by electric motor. If operated by hand, lowering takes 4 minutes and raising 60 minutes.

LAUNCHES WITHOUT LIGHTS ON RIVER

Launches on the river these evenings without lights are said to be numerous. A summer resident along the river stated to the Examiner this morning that the practice was altogether too common, and if not stopped, accidents would be the result. It was exceedingly dangerous for people in smaller craft, as very often it was impossible to see a launch without lights until it was so close that a collision was inevitable. Launch owners who risk running their boats without the proper lights are liable to a heavy fine.

Proper Thing Now Is to Peel Off Soiled Skin

Those who abhor sticky, greasy, shiny, streaked complexions should religiously avoid creams, powders and rouges during the heated days. There's no need for them, anyway, since the virtues of mercolised wax have become known. No amount of perspiration will produce any evidence that you've been using the wax. As it is applied at bedtime and washed off in the morning, the complexion never looks like a make-up. Mercolised wax gradually takes off a bad complexion, instead of adding anything to make it worse. It has none of the disadvantages of cosmetics and accomplishes much more in keeping the complexion beautifully white, satiny and youthful. Just get an ounce of it at your druggist's and see what a few days' treatment will do. Use like cold cream.

Another effective summer treatment—heat tending to cause wrinkles and flabbiness—is a skin-tightener made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pt. witch hazel. It's use (as a face bath) leaves no trace.

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2000, No 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only was $16.80.

On the 1st of May 1914 the above Policy matured and he received in cash $2620.25.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2000.00 instead of $2620.25 as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

Senate Requests House to Reconsider G.N.R. Bill.

GOVERNMENT MIGHT REFUSE

Resolution Is Passed In Upper House Pointing Out Grave Dangers In Mackenzie and Mann Aid Legislation — Farmers' Bank Bill Goes Through — Robins Agreement Now Justified.

OTTAWA, June 6.—By a vote of 34 to 22, the Senate last night adopted a resolution pointing out certain alleged defects in the Canadian Northern legislation as it came to them from the Commons and declaring "that this House desires to ascertain whether the Government would not be disposed to facilitate the aid being given on conditions which would not be open to said objections."

The resolution was moved by Senator Bostock, the Liberal leader, upon the motion for the second reading of the Canadian Northern bill. Speaker Landry ruled that the resolution was in order and its adoption would not prevent the second reading of the bill.

Yesterday's procedure has occasioned widespread discussion in the corridors, but many precedents were quoted. The Upper Chamber, having no power to amend a money bill can only request the Government to make amendments. If the Government sees fit to comply, the bill is returned to the Lower House. In the case of the Canadian Northern bill, however, it is altogether likely that the Government will insist upon the Senate passing or rejecting the measure without amendment.

In yesterday's debate Senator Bostock intimated that the Senate would not accept the responsibility of rejecting the bill, as such a course might precipitate a financial panic. He claimed, however, that the country was not adequately secured, and that Mackenzie and Mann should be required to give their personal security.

Other objections raised by the Liberals in the House of Commons were incorporated in the resolution.

There was no reply from the Government benches and the Bostock resolution was carried on a party vote, Senator Melvin-Jones voting with the Government.

When the resolution was adopted, the Government leader desired to proceed with the second reading of the bill, but upon motion of Senator Bostock the debate was adjourned until Monday next. On Monday no doubt Senator Lougheed will inform the Senate that the Government declines to amend the measure, and the bill will then be proceeded with.

The greater part of yesterday's sitting of the House was taken up with another debate upon the bill for the relief of the depositors of the Farmers' Bank. The bill was given a third reading and passed after an amendment moved by Mr. Sinclair calling for investigation into all the bank failures since Confederation, was voted down.

The bill authorizing the Government to guarantee bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific was reported from committee of the whole and stands for third reading.

Toward midnight the House got into supply and Mr. Burnham (West Peterboro) brought up the Trent Valley waterways report, and charged the late Government with having leased the water powers at Burleigh Falls to "a band of political favorites" for one dollar per year. It was a 50-year lease, and the concession was worth at least $500,000, said Mr. Burnham, and he dwelt at length upon the charges of the padded pay-rolls and other charges made by Howard Ferguson, M.P.P.

Replying to the charges made by the member for Peterboro, Hon. Geo. P. Graham said that Hon. Mr. Blair had been Minister of Railways and Canals at the time the lease of the Burleigh Falls had been made. He said, however, that he could not see anything wrong with the leasing of this waterpower at $1 a year for fifty years, as at the time the lease was made the falls were considered practically useless. That the value of the waterpowers on the Trent was small, Hon. Mr. Graham declared, was proven by the fact that the Ontario Government had relinquished all right to them.

The Robins Irrigation Co., about which there was much keen debate in the Commons six or seven years ago, has applied to the Government for assistance in completing its irrigation enterprise.

The company secured 280,673 acres of land in Alberta for one dollar per acre and undertook to irrigate these lands. The Conservatives then in Opposition, opposed the arrangement and they now declare that their attitude was justified. The company has not funds enough to carry out the undertaking. Five million dollars has been spent, but this is not enough.

The Liberals reply that evidently the bargain has not been so profitable to the company as the Conservatives endeavored to make out.

The Government has agreed to refund the money paid for the lands and to permit the company to buy the property at a later date at $1.25 an acre, conditional upon completing the undertaking.

Jail For Pay-roll Padders.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., June 6.—Convicted of padding the pay-rolls of the Sault Dredging & Construction Co., Nelson Vanluven was yesterday sentenced to three years in Kingston Penitentiary by Judge Stone. Roskelly, an accomplice, who turned King's evidence, was allowed to go on suspended sentence, while Eugene Guzzio and his wife, Maud Guzzio, who cashed the fraudulent cheques, were sentenced to two years and one year in prison.

OPPOSITION STRONG

Presbyterian Anti-Unionists May Have Project Shelved.

LARGE MEETING IS HELD

Nearly One-Third of the Delegates to General Assembly at Woodstock Attend Gathering to Oppose Union — Next Assembly In Kingston—Dr. A. S. Grant Resigns From Board.

WOODSTOCK, June 6.—On account of the determined opposition of many of the delegates attending the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church here the opinion is expressed that the effort to promote church union will be discontinued for the present. Those opposing union held a meeting yesterday in the Carnegie library, at which nearly one-third of the delegates were present. Rev. R. G. Macbeth presided. It was decided to make a proposal to the assembly, probably to-day, that the subject be dropped. The stand taken by opponents is that the time is not ripe for a decision, and that the issue should be decided by a vote of all the members of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

The church union committee met again all day but it is understood that they cannot arrive at a conclusion. Those members of the committee opposing union, it is said, will not agree to any terms short of the shelving of the subject.

At the morning sitting it was decided by a large majority to accept the invitation of Dr. Jordan, moderator of the presbytery of Kingston, that next year's assembly be held in that city. Invitations from Victoria, B.C., Saskatoon, Sask., and Sydney, N.S., were also received.

Rev. William Munro, in presenting the report of the eastern section of home missions, said the salaries of ordained missionaries will be raised to one thousand dollars. Mr. Munro presented a resolution to this effect, which was carried.

The report of the augmentation committee contained several recommendations regarding the salary to be paid in the Maritime Provinces. Rev. W. P. Spencer moved that the minimum stipend there be one thousand dollars and a manse or free house, and that augmented congregations shall give no less than six hundred dollars and a free house. This was approved.

Considerable discussion arose during the afternoon session over the report of the committee on "overtures re standards," submitted by Rev. Dr. D. D. McLeod, of Barrie. The report stated that an elder in the church could not be appointed moderator. Judge Forbes, late moderator of the presbytery of St. John, N.B., when it was moved that the report be adopted vigorously protested against there being any distinction made between an elder and a minister.

The report on the motion of Judge Forbes was laid on the table.

Rev. A. S. Grant, D.D., of Toronto, head of the western section of the board of home missions and chairman of the finance board of the Presbyterian Church, has resigned. It became known last night that, after making a spirited address on home missions on Thursday night before the assembly he handed his resignation to the moderator, Dr. W. S. Herridge. He relinquishes all offices held, including membership in several minor committees.

When Dr. Herridge received the written resignation Thursday night he kept his own counsel regarding it in the hope that Dr. Grant could be prevailed upon to reconsider it.

Dr. Grant declined to-day to discuss the reason for his action.

LARGEST IN HISTORY.

Ontario's Newest Gas Well Will Supply Wide Area.

PETROLEO, June 6.—Without exception the largest gas well ever struck in Canada was discovered on Thursday in Oil Springs, by the local gas company, with which is associated W. J. Aikens of Brantford. The well is about seven hundred feet to the southeast of the famous Fairbanks gas well, struck several months ago. The gas was encountered on Thursday at a depth of about 1,900 feet, and the supply increased as the well was being drilled deeper, until the pressure was so great that it blew the drill staker, weighing more than a thousand pounds, through the top of the derrick, forcing the men to run for safety.

The well is flowing at the rate of easily forty million feet per day, and it can be heard over ten miles away. An effort will be made to cap the well to-day by experts, but great difficulty will be experienced. The supply of gas from this one well is great enough to supply all the cities, towns, and villages between Sarnia, Petrolea, and Hamilton.

The appliances for capping the well are being prepared by a special force of workmen. The roar from the well can be compared only to the roar of Niagara Falls.

HANGED HIMSELF TO BARS OF CELL

DAYTON, Ohio, June 6.—The dead body of Arthur Fowler, a British subject found guilty recently of the murder of John Jeames, was found in the county jail. Fowler had secured a strap and hanged himself to the bars in his cell.

During his trial an effort was made to save Fowler on the plea of insanity. A recommendation of mercy had saved him from the electric chair and he was to have been given a sentence of life imprisonment by the court within the next few days.

Petes Had Their Batting Togs On And Hammered Win From Champs

Stewart Led in Vicious Onslaught on Ottawa Pitchers With Four Hits and Wilcox Had a Homer With One On

STERLING'S FIRST WIN

OTTAWA, June 5.—Sixteen hits, coupled with eight errors on the part of the Senators gave Peterborough an 11-6 victory over the Champs here yesterday. The tail-enders were in a hitting mood, and they knocked Tom Kane out of the box in the sixth, getting 11 hits and 7 runs off him during that time. Joe Lill pitched one ball for the last out in the sixth, and Peterson twirled the remaining three innings, with no more success than Kane, the Petes getting five hits and four runs from him.

The Senators only went a couple of innings during the game without an error, their fielding being the worst ever seen here. Sterling was hit freely by the Champs, and also got poor support, but he was fairly tight in the pinches. In the fifth Wilcox hit a home run with one man on.

PETES AT HOME ON MONDAY

The Petes will open at home on Monday with the Toronto team the attraction. The game will be called at 3.45 o'clock. The homesters are playing good ball now and their home games will be well patronised.

FAMOUS HOME RUNS

"Hans" Wagner's four-base swat in Pittsburg which broke the windshield of an automobile standing outside the grounds.

"Big Bill" Lange's homer over the centrefield fence in Cincinnati. It smashed through a plate-glass window of a saloon and broke up a pinochle party.

"Larry" McLean's peculiar wallop made on the Pacific Coast. It sailed over a tree fifty feet high from the fence and splashed into a creek.

"Buck" Freiman's drive off "Chief" Bender at old Columbia Park, Philadelphia. The ball went over a block of houses beyond the fence and landed in the second storey window of a house in a side street between 28th and 29th Streets.

"Heinie" Zimmerman's two homers made over the left field fence in Cincinnati. He was the only player that ever put the ball over the wall.

"Cy" Seymour's hit from Boston to New York. The ball fell into a coal car attached to a fast freight and was found by a brakeman when the train reached New York.

Frank Baker's crash over the right field wall in Washington off Walter Johnson, which made the management decide to enlarge the park.

Miller Huggins' hit in Cincinnati, which fell twenty feet behind the right fielder, who lost the ball in the sun and did not locate it until Huggins had crossed the plate.

Walter Johnson's drive in Washington. The force of the blow tore the cover off the ball.

BASEBALL

President Fitzgerald has issued the Canadian League batting and fielding averages up to and including May 31st. The first eight batters are:

Haeffner, Hamilton	8 games	.500
Kustus, St. Thomas	20 "	.420
Wager, Ottawa	8 "	.375
Peterson, Ottawa	5 "	.375
Reidy, London	16 "	.355
Kubat, Ottawa	6 "	.364
Eunich, Hamilton	11 "	.353
Kelly, Peterborough	10 "	.357

Ottawa Free Press: The game abounded with sensational plays and from a listless beginning developed into a hair-raising finish. The ninth was the one which had the fans gasping when Shoctor after having two strikes and nothing on King, walked his man. Wilcox laid down a perfect bunt, sending him to second. Gorman then combed a drive towards right, easily tagged for two bassocks, but Dolan playing deep, took a running jump and glued it in his mitt hand. King was rounding third and Cosy ambled over to the sack and made the double unassisted, though Fried called for the ball to have the extra chance added to his fielding record. The finish was electrical and had not Dolan speared the ball, King would have been in with the tying run.

Ottawa Free Press: Peterborough kept up their record yesterday by losing out by a single run. They are sure the tough luck team of the League and should be up battling around the first division.

The Petes have Catcher Mully Miller out of the game with a busted hand and First Baseman Swartling out with a bad shoulder, contracted after an attack of pneumonia. Both are Central Leaguers and good men.

INTERESTING HISTORY OF A PANAMA HAT

The Examiner has been furnished with a report of the Division Court case of W. E. Lech vs. J. W. Fitzgerald.

In this case the evidence disclosed that Mrs. Fitzgerald brought a valuable Panama hat to Mr. Lech to be cleaned and blocked. Mr. Lech sent it to J. C. Soulnice and Son, a Montreal firm with instructions to do the work. In due time a Panama hat was returned to Mr. Lech but Mrs. Fitzgerald declined to accept it, alleging that the hat returned was too large in the head, too wide in the brim, was round in the crown instead of flat, and was of coarser weave, and not Mrs. Fitzgerald's hat. Mr. Lech's employees and a milliner who had seen Mrs. Fitzgerald's hat when being trimmed, also stated that this hat was not Mrs. Fitzgerald's. Mr. Lech thereupon returned it to J. C Soulnice and Son, Montreal, Mr. Lech's stenographer writing the letter and stating very strongly that the hat was not Mrs. Fitzgerald's, and pointing out the differences. Her letter was read over to Mr. W. F. Lech and sent off with his approval.

The hat was returned to Mr. Lech reblocked and stated to be the hat first received from Mr. Lech. A second letter, written by the same writer in even stronger terms, refusing to accept the hat as Mrs. Fitzgerald's, was sent to Montreal together with the hat. J. C. Soulnice and Son wrote saying it certainly was the hat Mr. Lech had sent for cleaning. He further stated that at the time the hat was received there was only one other Panama hat in his establishment, and that the owner of that hat had got his own hat and made no complaint. And affidavits from the owner of the other hat were put in to prove that this was the hat received from Mr. Lech, and that the owner of the other Montreal hat had gotten his own hat.

J. W. Fitzgerald, who purchased the hat for $12.50, positively swore that the hat returned to Mrs. Fitzgerald was not her hat.

On the whole evidence the judge found that the hat returned was not Mrs. Fitzgerald's and he declined to give judgment for $1.50, charged by Mr. Lech for cleaning the hat.

He was then asked to give Mrs. Fitzgerald compensation on the counter claim for the lost hat, but Miss McFadden had sworn that Mrs. Fitzgerald was told when she gave in the hat that it would be sent to Montreal at her own risk. Mrs. Fitzgerald admitted that she was so told, but only after the wrong hat came back the first time, and not when she gave the hat to be cleaned.

The judge accepted Miss McFadden's statement and declined to give Mr. Fitzgerald any compensation.

Then the judge ordered that this hat in court should be delivered to Mr. Lech.

Mr. Dumble objected to this on the ground that Mr. Lech did not claim it and had sworn it was Mrs. Fitzgerald's—that Mr. Lech was responsible for the loss and that he, Fitzgerald, should keep this Panama hat until he could get his own.

Mr. Fitzgerald got no compensation and should not be stripped of both hats.

The Court repeated the direction to give the hat to Mr. Lech.

Mr. Dumble refused to comply and the judge ordered the bailiff to take the hat and give it to Mr. Lech. Mr. Dumble defied the bailiff to touch it and taking it in his hand deliberately walked out of Court with it.

The judge threatened to commit Mr. Dumble, Fitzgerald's solicitor, for contempt of court, but refrained.

This case shows that people who give in hats to be cleaned would do well to take security for the return of their own hats.

MAYOR ON STRIKE.

Martin of Montreal Wants Full Pay, Work or No Work.

MONTREAL, June 6.—Mayor Mederic Martin is on strike because he cannot get $325 pay that was handed to his predecessor for two weeks' work before the present chief magistrate was sworn in after election owing to recount troubles. Yesterday morning he refused to attend the meeting of the Board of Control, and his lawyer, J. L. Perron, K.C., sent back a check for $840.22, money already paid his worship, with a notice that the city would be sued for the balance. Mayor Martin has been promised his full salary of $20,000 before his two-year term expires by the Board of Control, but he wants the $325 because he has grocery bills to pay.

Premier Would Prosecute.

SYDNEY, Australia, June 6.—Premier Wm. A. Holman of New South Wales, whose comments on the loss of the Empress of Ireland have given rise to much criticism, denies that he prejudged the official enquiry, when he intimated that the Government ought to prosecute the directors of the C. P. R. as accessories of manslaughter. Yesterday the Premier said:

"The fact that the commercial men who agreed to send the public of Canada to Europe did, in fact, send them to the next world is sufficient to put them on trial."

Divers To Inspect Wreck.

QUEBEC, June 6.—H. M. S. Essex, at present in port, is scheduled to leave some time to-day for Father Point, where her divers will attempt an inspection of the wreck of the Empress of Ireland.

The Essex has the most modern outfits for submarine work, and her diving appliances do away with the air conducting pipes, which enables divers to penetrate in caves, through submarine growth and even through corridors of sunken vessels. This feature will, it is thought, greatly help the search of the hull of the sunken Empress.

DRUNK FIRST NIGHT

PERTH, June 6. — A Bacchanalian policeman for one night only. This was the sad tale that the mayor of this town had to relate to the police committee of th town council after they had appointed a new constable for the night prowlers of the place.

There has been a very valued officer in the position for many years, a Mr. Burns. He retired. A new policeman was appointed.

In some unaccountable manner he got drunk the first night he was on duty. Mayor Grant fired him next morning. Now Perth wants another night policeman.

Stock Markets

A. E. Ames & Co., Bankers, report the following:

NEW YORK, June 6—The Stock Market was again very inactive, only the tractions showing some strength and I think they will work still higher, but I would not buy them now, if long lower down, hold them for a further bulge.

L. V. whose sale I advised Tuesday night, near 138, rallied above 136 today, and if you don't mind a possible further rally of 2 or 3 points you can sell it around 137. I think it will sell at 125 later on.

CAN. whose sale I advised around 28, rallied to 28 3-4 yesterday. I think it is still a sale around present prices and it may show you 15 points profits before long.

When we turned bullish near the end of April we told you that we expected the market to keep advancing with ordinary setbacks until about the end of the first week in June, after which we expected another big downward movement to start which would carry the general list to entirely new low prices.

If the market rallies tomorrow and is fairly strong near the close, your line of long stocks should be further reduced, as the time for the start of the decline is drawing close.

You might sell RG above 165; UB around 62; UP near 155 1-2; SP 33 1-2; MNP 64.

SIR JAMES REPLIES.

Premier Insists That His Health Is Better Than Ever.

TORONTO, June 8. — Sir James Whitney has given the following to the press: "My health is steadily improving, and as far as my judgment goes is in some respect perhaps better than it has been for a number of years. I observe, however, that this is not the opinion of the leader of the Opposition, who is reported as saying at the Massey Hall meeting that the Conservatives are well aware that Sir James would never again be able to lead them in the House. Although apparently the wish is father to the thought in his case, yet I am sorry to observe this new method of conducting a political contest, introduced by the leader of the Opposition. I hope the public will excuse me for mentioning this matter, but justify it on the ground of the remarkable course taken by Mr. Rowell."

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stone, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

KILLED BY CYCLONE

Aged Couple Perish in Terrific Storm Near Woodstock

FARMHOUSE IS SHATTERED

WOODSTOCK, June 8. — Thomas Bartley, 74 years of age, and his wife, 65 years of age, were killed about 6.30 o'clock last night when his farm house was picked up by a cyclone. Portions of it were scattered through adjoining fields for several hundred yards.

The disturbance appears to have originated near a bush between the 12th and 13th concession lines, north of Woodstock. The wind took a southerly course, crossing the field in which an asylum stands, taking trees and fences with it along the south side of the cross road.

A slaughter house belonging to J. Milson, Woodstock, between the 11th and 12th concessions, lost its roof but a litter of pigs in the barn were not injured.

When E. Kinsman, who lives on the cross-road, saw the approaching white column of dust, fences and trees, he immediately rushed his family into the cellar of his house. His house is the first one west of the home of Thomas Bartley and did not suffer damage.

Bartley's residence was a frame dwelling two-storey house and stood on a stone foundation, about two feet and a half in thickness. All that remains is the foundation. The heavy joists of the structure were found across the road and stones from the foundations were scattered by the cyclone for many feet on both sides. The foundation was cleaned to the level of the ground.

Allan Barker, whose father's farm adjoins that of Bartley's at the back, was one of the first to arrive on the scene. He found the body of Mrs. Bartley lying in a huddled position on the west side of the house, and the body of her husband in front of where the house had stood. When Bartlett was still conscious, but died in a few minutes.

Kinsman says that Bartley's body was strangely contorted, his head resting upon the foot of his right leg, which was broken. He was badly cut about the head. It is thought that he had just finished his supper when the wind struck the house. Mrs. Bartley a few minutes previous to the accident had been sitting on the east side of her home, and on account of the outhouses of the onslaught it is probable that she was still there when the house was wrecked.

A graphic description of the cyclone was given by two boys living at the Benfield farm. They saw it from start to finish. The column was only about 100 yards in width and perfectly white. Starting in the black clouds of the raging thunderstorm, it looked like a dust storm. They could discern trees, telephone poles, fence rails, all in the whirling mass. While they were standing in front of their homes they saw it cross the 11th concession line, close to the asylum, traverse the opposite field, taking with it all the trees and fences. After it passed the residence of Kinsman it took a southerly course, rising from the ground and passing over a field in which about 25 cows were feeding.

Back it came in a wide circle straight to the Bartley house, struck it and in a second nothing was left except whirling masses of broken timber scattering across the road and over the field towards Entwhistle's house. It then crossed several more fields, laying six maple trees across the road. When it had traveled a short distance north of the road it vanished as quickly as it had risen.

The Retort Courteous.

Mr. Lloyd-George, after distributing prizes at a school the other day, said he hoped the children would have a good record when he came again. Thereupon they rose and with one accord said, "Same to you, sir!"—London Standard.

A RECENT PHOTO OF THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE AND HIS FAMILY—The German and English Royal families mostly run to boys. It is a curious coincidence that the Kaiser had only one daughter out of a large family, and his son, the Crown Prince, has not even one. King George of England has but one little Princess in his home.

VICTIMS ARE BURIED.

Huge Crowds Witness Funeral of Salvationists Lost on Empress.

TORONTO, June 8.—Saturday and Sunday were days of mourning in Toronto. Saturday's funeral service for the sixteen whose bodies have been recovered from the Empress of Ireland disaster was by far the biggest affair of the sort ever seen in this city.

Round the Arena one hundred thousand people surged, vainly striving for entrance or patiently awaiting the conclusion of the service.

Stirred to their profoundest depths, their every feeling levelled to the universal plane of human sympathy, ten thousand hearts of Toronto's citizens throbbed in unison with those of the mourners.

During the service official messages were read from Gen. and Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Evangeline Booth, Canadian delegates at the congress in London, and from branches of the Salvation Army in different parts of the world.

Representatives were present from Provincial Government, city, Toronto Ministerial Association, C.P.R., fraternal organizations and other societies.

On Sunday there were three services, in the morning, afternoon and evening. The first was a memorial for the officers and soldiers of the Salvation Army "promoted to Glory from the Empress of Ireland at daybreak on Friday, May 29th," held yesterday morning in Massey Hall.

Despite the terrible storm which swept the city during the afternoon the Arena was filled. Sir John M. Gibson, the Lieutenant-Governor, presided, and speeches were made by Mayor Hocken, Hon. Dr. Pyne, Rev. W. Brewing and Mr. T. B. Coombs.

The prominent figures at the evening memorial service in Massey Hall were Staff Captain David McAmmond, Major Attwell and Ensign Ernest Pugmire, all of whom were survivers of the wreck.

WATTS-DUNTON PASSES.

He Was a Famous Critic and Author For Many Years In London.

LONDON, June 8.—Walter Theodore Watts-Dunton, poet, novelist and critic, died yesterday. He was born Oct. 12, 1832. Mr. Watts-Dunton was the close friend of Algernon Charles Swinburne. The two poets lived in the same house for thirty years, and on the death of Swinburne in 1909 he left Watts-Dunton his entire estate.

The late novelist was born at St. Ives, Huntingdonshire, Eng., but lived for many years at Putney. He practiced as a solicitor in London for a short period before devoting himself to literature, adding his mother's name,—Dunton—to his father's in 1897.

For many years he was chief critic on a number of important London periodicals, including The Examiner and The Athenaeum, 1875-1898, when his connection with all critical journals ceased. He published in The Athenaeum much poetry during his twenty years' connection. He contributed to the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

African Farmers Coming.

GETS INTO PALACE

Young Man Scares Officials at Buckingham

HE EVADES THE GUARDS

LONDON, June 8.—A sensational incident of the day, and one that has caused grave anxiety owing to exploits of the militant suffragettes, was the discovery of a young man, who gave his name as Harry Pike, in Buckingham Palace, where the royal family spent Sunday. In the early hours of the morning Pike entered the palace, as he explained afterwards, to prove that entrance could be easily effected. He scaled the wall and wandered through the corridors for some time. Once he was near the Queen's apartment. He was finally discovered, however, and overpowered in the servants' quarters. He will be arraigned to-day in the Bow street police court on a charge of having been found on enclosed premises for unlawful purposes. This is the only offence provable against him, so far as the evidence shows.

There is nothing to show that Pike is connected with the women's suffrage movement. He gave his occupation as an engineer.

Pike was ignorant of the interior of the palace, and had several adventures while wandering about inside. Notwithstanding the heavy guard of soldiers and police, who are supposed to patrol the grounds closely, Pike managed to scale the palace wall, and climb into a basement window on the north side of the building, in which Queen Mary has her apartment. He entered several of the vacant rooms, and in one changed his clothing, which was torn and soiled through scaling the wall and crawling along the driveway to reach the palace building. The suit he exchanged for his own belonged to one of the servants.

The discovery of Pike resulted when he opened the door of a room where a servant was sleeping, saying to the servant, who had been awakened by his entry: "Excuse me, I was looking for number twenty." The servant suspected the man was a burglar and aroused other servants, who crowded him into a corner and held him there until the police came and took him away.

To Summon Cabaret Men.

MONTREAL, June 8.—The Court of Appeal Saturday gave its decision on the question of licenses for four local cabarets by ordering the license commissioners to consider new applications from their proprietors. Cabarets were first refused licenses by the license commissioner, this being quashed by Judge Charbonneau because a copy of the commissioners' judgment was printed in the papers before being delivered. The commissioners again refused licenses and matters were further complicated by appeal against every judgment delivered in the problem, the appointment of a new commission and an order of the mayor instructing the police to summon cabaret owners who in the beginning of the proceedings kept open without their licenses for selling intoxicating liquors.

To Teach Deaf and Dumb Prince.

MADRID, June 8.—Don Jaime, second son of King Alfonso, who is deaf and dumb, is to be put under the tuition of Miss Annie Mansfield Sullivan, whose success with Miss Helen Keller, the blind, deaf and dumb genius, is still a subject for amazement to the scientific world. Miss Keller is said to be one of the six most remarkable persons who have ever lived, but she owes practically everything to Miss Sullivan, who has great hopes of being able to do much for Don Jaime.

MORE BILLS TURN UP.

New Yorker Arrested With $2,500 In New Westminster Money.

TORONTO, June 8.—Harry J. Matthews, aged about 44, who claims New York as his home town, and declares he is in town negotiating for a moving picture site, was arrested by Detectives Guthrie, Newton and Montgomery at a down town hotel, early Saturday morning, with over $2,500 of the $272,000 stolen in the celebrated New Westminster Bank robbery in the early part of 1911, in his possession.

The police believe that Matthews can throw a lot of light on the famous robbery, if he can only be made to talk; but first efforts in this line Saturday morning proved a decided failure.

The police were first notified of the passing of the stolen money by the clerk of the hotel, who had taken down the numbers and compared them with the list kept in all the large hotels. The three detectives arrived just as Matthews was dressing and placed him under arrest. The money was found in a small club bag, done up in packages of $500. There were five packages, each containing 100 five-dollar bills and 13 loose five-dollar bills, making a total of $2,565. Every bill was identified as one of those stolen from the Bank of Montreal. Matthews was lodged in No. 1 station and will be charged in to-day's police court with receiving stolen money.

Matthews is the second man caught in Toronto passing some of the stolen money. Over a year ago a man named Davis was arrested at the Palmer House in company with a woman, who were found to have over $6,000 of the bills in their possession. Davis was sent to New Westminister to stand trial for taking part in the robbery, was acquitted and brought to Toronto and sentenced to six months in the penitentiary on a conviction for bringing stolen money into Canada.

REPORT PRESENTED

Presbyterian Church Union Committee Suggests Changes

AMENDMENTS TO BASIS

WOODSTOCK, June 8.—After several days of discussion the Presbyterian committee on church union presented a report to the General Assembly on Saturday recommending a new basis of union and asking that another joint committee be called for the purpose of laying it before the representatives of the Methodist and Congregational Churches.

The report said:—

"Your committee recommend to the general assembly that the union committee be reappointed, vacancies which have occurred in its membership being filled; that the assembly respectfully invite Methodist and Congregational Churches to meet in joint committee with union committee of this church, to consider the amended basis appended to this report, and prepare basis of union that may be submitted to the assembly in 1915.

"If approved by the assembly of 1915 such basis of union, together with a statement presenting views of both minority and majority within the church shall be sent down to presbyteries, and also to sessions and congregations, that the judgment of the whole church may be had, and such issue as may then seem wisest, be given to what has been subject of negotiations for so many years. And further, that the general assembly earnestly assure the other negotiating churches of their desire to reach that issue without any unnecessary delay."

Some of the most important suggested amendments to the basis of union dealt with the appointment of ministers. It was proposed that there shall be for each conference (synod or union) a settlement committee, consisting of ministers and laymen, and appointed annually by the conference, and upon which each presbytery will be represented.

That the duty of final inquiry into the personal character, doctrinal beliefs and general fitness of candidates for the ministry representing themselves for ordination or for reception as ministers of this church shall be laid upon the annual conference (synod or union). The original paragraph omits the phrase "or for reception as ministers of this church."

"It shall be the policy of the United Church to foster the spirit of unity everywhere, both in its own midst, and, so far as it can, in other Christian churches, also in the hope that this sentiment of unity may in due time, so far as Canada is concerned, take shape in a church which may fittingly be described as national."

At their final meeting Saturday afternoon, the home mission board and the board of social service and evangelism decided to recommend on Tuesday morning that they be amalgamated. The motion will also recommend that Dr. A S. Grant and Dr. J. G. Shearer, the present heads of both departments, be appointed as provisional superintendents. If Dr. Grant does not withdraw his resignation it is understood that an endeavor will be made to have Dr. Shearer appointed as head of the committees.

FOR LOVE OF COUNTRY.

Villa Will Yield to Carranza's Leadership In Mexico.

TORREAN, Mexico, June 8.—The power and authority of Gen. Venustiano Carranza, who is about to declare himself Provisional President of Mexico, has been increased by Gen. "Pancho" Villa's humbly accepting a place as the mere commander of one of the four military divisions into which Carranza has divided that part of Mexico already conquered by the rebels.

Villa, who has been the supreme military commander of the rebels, was to have met Carranza Friday, but instead remained at Chihuahua and had a long communication with the supreme chief by telegraph, as a result of which he acknowledged Carranza's authority and said:

"I am ready to make any sacrifice for my country, provided always that making such sacrifices will aid the greater cause for which I have been fighting."

"Mother" Jones Enters Canada.

SEATTLE, Wash., June 8.—"Mother" Mary Jones, organizer for the United States Mine Workers of America, left for Vancouver by steamer Friday night without hindrance, the Canadian immigration officers who prevented her from embarking on the previous day, having been overruled by their superior officers at Ottawa.

The British Columbia Government ordered the exclusion of "Mother" Jones, who had announced her intention of addressing the striking coal miners of Vancouver Island, on the ground that she would be likely to stir up trouble.

New Cabinet Falls Through.

PARIS, June 8.—A heated discussion arose in the Cabinet when the statesmen chosen by M. Viviani met informally Saturday to prepare their declaration of policy to be laid before Parliament. The question whether the new combination should unreservedly support the three years' military service law or modify it found a hopeless division of opinions.

As a consequence of this confusion M. Viviani at once proceeded to the Palace of the Elysee and told the President he had decided to give up his attempt to form a Cabinet.

ANOTHER LARGE CAMP.

Hon. Col. Hughes Says Ontario Is To Have Big Militia Grounds.

OTTAWA, June 8—Appropriations amounting to approximately ten million dollars were voted for the Department of Militia, at Saturday evening's sitting of the House.

To the majority of the items there was little opposition. During the discussion of a plan for acquiring a militia training area in New Brunswick, Hon. Sam Hughes announced that it was the intention of his Department to secure a similar area in Toronto division. The Niagara camp, he said, was large enough to drill soldiers on, but not large enough to manoeuvre bodies of troops. He said that 60,000 were expected to attend the summer camps of instruction. The proposed area while primarily a militia camping ground would also be suitable for a picnic and excursion ground for the surrounding district.

As to the camp at New Brunswick, to which Mr. George Fowler (Queens, Kings and Albert, N.B.) took exception, Col. Hughes denied that it would be as expensive as Mr. Fowler represented. It consisted of 63,000 acres of partly cleared land, contained enough timber to pay for its purchase price, and its value was shown by the fact that right of way for the National Transcontinental through it had cost the Railways Department $12 per acre.

Prorogation of Parliament is about definitely fixed for Thursday next, with a possibility of winding up a day earlier.

The Prime Minister said Saturday that all the Government legislation which may be described as at all contentious is all through the House. In the Upper House there are three distinct sittings daily, so that bills can be facilitated much more readily than in the Commons.

Hon. Robert Rogers declared Saturday night apropos of redistribution, that "everything is off absolutely."

Next year the Government will likely bring in a redistributing bill directly, and not refer it to a committee at all, he declared.

Peterborough
Dear Sir,—
Since I commenced to use glasses, about three years ago, I never had a pair that gave me such comfort as the ones you fitted. They are so soft and easy on my eyes. I can read for an hour at a time without straining my eyes, which I never could do with any of the others that cost me twice as much. I will certainly recommend my friends to you. When in Peterborough again I will have you put new lenses in my other glasses.
Yours truly,

"THE TERMS OF SURRENDER"

By LOUIS TRACY

Power started violently when the girl's soft-spoken words broke in on his reverie. For an instant he dreamed that Nancy had come, that he would feel her fingers clasped over his eyes, hear her voice.

"It is so hot and quiet here," he explained, smiling pleasantly, "that I was nearly asleep. I don't need any lunch, thank you."

Yet never had man seemed more wakeful. The girl thought that surely he must be ill, and in pain, and she wondered why his wife had left him: for Nancy's departure was already known to the hotel servants, since nothing could happen in that secluded nook without their cognisance, and Willard's corner in horseflesh that morning had been much discussed in the kitchen.

Granite, however, put in an appearance soon, and insisted that Power should eat.

"You'll be headin' for N' York, I reckon," he said, "an' there ain't no sort o' sense in makin' that long trip on an empty stummick. You jest take my say-so, Mr. Power, an' eat yer meals reg'lar, an' you'll size up things altogether different when you set down to yer breakfast to-morrow."

His well-meant advice caused a thrill of agony. Breakfast without Nancy! The dawn of the first day when she was not by his side! The mind often works in grooves, and Power's thought flew back to that other day when he lay crushed on the ledge. As he walked to the hotel with the guide, his leg seemed to be almost broken again, and he moved with difficulty.

Afterward, he spoke and acted in a curiously mechanical way. He was aware that he gave Granite detailed instructions, and paid him far more than the friendly disposed fellow was inclined to accept, and stowed himself and various portmanteaus in the buggy when the hotel proprietor warned him it was time he should set out. He remembered, too, being told that a young lady and an elderly man had taken tickets for New York by the midday train from Racket, but the journey thenceforth was a meaningless blank. He gave no heed to the passing of the hours. He did not even know when the train reached the Grand Central Station. Before he realised that he must bestir himself, one of the attendants had to ask him sarcastically where he wanted to go, as the engineer thought he wouldn't butt into Park Avenue that morning.

Still behaving like one in a dream, he wandered out of the station into 42nd Street, drifted down Fifth Avenue, and entered the Waldorf Hotel. Here, luckily, he was recognized by a clerk—an expert who never forgot a patron's name or face—and was allotted rooms. Otherwise, he would certainly have been turned away politely; for his unkempt appearance and half-demented air offered the poorest of recommendations to one of New York's palatial hotels.

"What about your baggage, Mr. Power?" inquired the clerk, whose private opinion favoured the view that this erstwhile spick-and-span client had been "hitting it up some."

"Baggage? Let me think? I have some recollection——"

Power searched in his pockets, and found a number of brass checks. He really had not the slightest notion as to when and where that detail was attended to, but habit had evidently proved stronger than emotion, and some sense of gratitude stirred in him that he had not mislaid his own few belongings—and Nancy's.

Then, worn out physically and mentally, he threw himself on a bed and slept. He awoke after three hours, and some of the cloud had lifted off his brain. He felt able to think clearly, and plan a course of action, and that in itself was a blessing. He saw now that, if Nancy were actually humoring a homicidal maniac, she would lead her father straight to Newport, knowing full well that he, Derry, would come there without fail. True, there were sentences in that terrible letter which hardly bore out this argument; but, then, it was probably written under Willard's watching eyes, and that last heart-rending farewell might have been the only formula she could devise for a final leave-taking compelled by a loaded revolver.

At any rate, he would telegraph to Dacre, in whose discretion he trusted implicitly; so, not without a strenuous effort needed to collect his wits, he drafted an ambiguously worded telegram.

"My friend's father came to the Adirondacks yesterday, and effected departure forcibly during my absence. Will you make guarded inquiries? Wire me Waldorf Hotel on receipt of this message, and later."

It was a relief to think that he had taken one decisive step. During the two hours of inaction before a reply could come to hand, he bathed, changed his clothes, and ate some food, for which he was ravenous, having refused to dine on the train.

Bethinking himself, too, that Nancy might have found some means of telegraphing on her own account, he inquired, first at the hotel bureau, but without result, since any communications received there would have been sent to his room, and secondly at his bank. Yes, here were letters and telegrams galore, some re-addressed from Newport, and others sent direct. He tore open the telegrams feverishly.

But what was this?

"Your mother asking for you every hour. Why don't you wire?

"MACGONIGAL."

And another:

"For Heaven's sake, wire if this reaches you, and start west by next train.

"MACGONIGAL."

The messages latest in arriving were naturally on top of the bundle, and his trembling fingers were tearing at another envelope when someone touched him on the shoulder. It was an official of the bank, who had spoken to him twice in vain across the counter, and was now standing at his side.

"I'm afraid you have bad news from Bison, Mr. Power," he said gently. "Your manager—or partner, is it?—Mr. MacGonigal, has been telegraphing us repeatedly during the past five days; but unfortunately we did not know where to find you. Your mother is ill, very ill."

"Is she dead?"

Power could only whisper the words and the other noted in voice and manner what he construed as a son's natural agitation at such a moment.

"No," he said, "but she is undoubtedly in danger. It seems to me, from what MacGonigal says, that a telegram from you telling her you are on board a westbound train will be more effective than any doctor's treatment."

Power was shaking as though from ague. He alone knew the frightful alternative that faced him now. If he went to Newport, he would be deserting his mother, who was perhaps dying. If he went to Bison, he was deserting Nancy in the hour of her utmost need. At that instant he dared not, he could not, decide, and the knowledge that he even hesitated was like the thrust of a sword through his heart.

"I—I——" he began, and his tongue seemed to refuse its office.

"I quite understand, Mr. Power," said the official, an assistant manager, as it happened, and a shrewd and kindly man. "It is useless to think of leaving New York before to-night. Come to my desk. I'll write a telegram for you which will straighten things out. Will you travel by the Pennsylvania and Rock Island Route? I thought so. The train starts at seven o'clock; so you have plenty of time to receive an answer from Bison. Now, how will this do?"

And he wrote:

"Your telegrams only just opened. Coming by to-night's train by Pennsylvania road. Wire me care of station agent, Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne, Chicago and Omaha. Message to-day before six will reach me at Waldorf Hotel. Give my love to mother and bid her cheer up."

Power muttered what he conceived to be words of thanks. Then, rushing to his rooms in the hotel like a hunted animal seeking sanctuary, he read MacGonigal's earlier telegrams. There were letters, too, no less than three from his mother, who seemed perplexed and uneasy because of the varying postmarks on his correspondence, but made no mention of her illness.

Indeed, the last letter, dated only a week earlier, spoke of a shopping expedition to Denver she and Mrs. Moore and the two girls had taken the previous day. MacGonigal, too, was not explicit. "Mrs. Power very ill and desperately anxious to see you," ran one telegram. Another told of Dr. Stearn being summoned, and remaining in constant attendance; but the burden of each and every message was that he, Power, must come home.

It was not surprising that the unhappy son should see in his mother's sudden collapse the hand of the Almighty. Deep in the heart of every man and woman is planted the conviction that an unseen and awful deity deals out retribution as well as justice to erring humanity. Power was under no delusion as to his personal responsibility for his actions. He had done wrong, and now he was being punished. "A man's heart deviseth the way, but the Lord directeth his steps." Sternly and terribly had his feet been turned to the new path; but if he flung himself on his knees and prayed now, it was not for forgiveness of his own sin, but in frenzied petition that it should not be visited on his mother and Nancy. Even in this new delirium of suffering he did not forget the woman he loved. Though his torment was as the torment of a scorpion, he asked that Nancy, too, might be spared. On his head be the punishment; but let the Divine Ruler of the world have pity on her youth, and find innocence in her, for she had been hardly dealt by!

He was still kneeling in anguish of spirit when an awe-stricken page entered the room with a telegram. If aught were needed to crush him into the dust, it was forthcoming in Dacre's guarded words:

"Have accidentally secured brief talk on telephone with friend indicated, who arrived this morning Fall River steamer. No secret made of intentions, which I am bidden to warn you are final. Going with father to Europe at once; but would not discuss reasons, for which, obviously, I could not press. I am puzzled and shocked. Command me in any way. Have you received urgent summons to Bison? Your mother is ill."

Then, and not until then, did some Heaven-sent clarity of vision reveal to Power that Nancy had not been acting a part when she wrote the letter he found in the hut. It was only too true that, as he told Peter Granite in the first mad words which burst from his lips, she had left him forever. He did not pretend to understand her motives—he was sure he never would understand them — but her action, at least, was finite. He knew now she was gone beyond recall. By some malign trick of fate she was probably stating her unalterable resolve over the telephone to his friend at the very moment he was reeling under the shock of MacGonigal's frantic messages with reference to his mother.

Well, be it so! His dream of a life's happiness had been shattered by a thunderbolt from a summer sky, and, crowning misery, here was his mother at death's door, in a state of mind surely aggravated by distress because of uncertainty as to his whereabouts! Sheer despair was again calming if benumbing him when, by ill-chance, his haggard eyes dwelt on Nancy's letter. The concluding words seemed to grip him by the throat:

"I can write no more. My poor heart is breaking."

God of mercy, what did it all mean? He gave way utterly. A strong man weeping is a pitiable sight, and Nancy's high resolve might have weakened had she seen him in that bitter hour.

BAD BLOOD

IS THE DIRECT CAUSE OF Pimples.

Pimples break out on the face and body, and it is impossible to get rid of them, unless you cleanse the blood of all of its impurities.

Burdock Blood Bitters is without a doubt, the very best medicine for this purpose.

This old, and reliable medicine has been in use for nearly forty years, and has a reputation unequalled by any other preparation for removing all the impurities from the blood and banishing the pimples.

Mr. Edward Paquette, Navan Centre, Ont., writes:—"One month ago my face was covered with pimples and a rash. I had tried a number of these so called blood purifiers with no avail. Seeing an almanac of yours in which you strongly recommend Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to try a bottle, and after I had taken it I could see a decided change, and after using three bottles more all the pimples had completely disappeared."

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT"

WHEN subject to biliousness, the liver is employed in getting rid of excessive quantities of certain ingredients, and when unable to do so, sick headache is produced by the retention of bile in the blood. Eno's "Fruit Salt" exercises a simple but definite action on the liver, by which the excretion of bile is regulated. It rids the body of the excess bile and carries off all the impurities, cleansing and purifying the system. Eno's may be safely taken at any time by younger old.

A SURE FOUNDATION THE WORD OF GOD

Bible Is Most Wonderful Book in the World.

BASIS OF CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Many Losing Faith In the Bible as the Word of God—Cause of This Great "Falling Away"—The Light of To-day In Conflict With the Darkness of the Past—Difference Between Faith and Credulity—Basis of Confidence In the Bible—Proofs of Its Inspiration—Proofs That It Is Not Man-Made—A Firm Foundation For Full Assurance.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

June 7.—The Photo-Drama of Creation, which is being exhibited throughout the United States, is awakening new interest in the Bible. Many who have seen the Photo-Drama have expressed their satisfaction with its beautiful presentation of the prominent features of Scripture and with its clear explanation of some points which long have puzzled critical people. Whoever sees it thereby obtains a grasp upon the Bible as a whole. The public are certainly grateful to Pastor Russell, through whose instrumentality this wonderful work of art is being exhibited free.

To-day the Pastor's text was, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."—Timothy 2:15.

We are all sadly aware that not many of the people of God have the full assurance of faith mentioned in the Scriptures, the speaker said. Indeed, we must all admit that the great majority are losing, not only their faith, but also the foundation of faith. For years the great colleges of Christendom have been undermining faith by undermining belief in the Bible. While they do not make an attack upon faith itself, while they all admit that faith may have its place as a grand quality of character, and that the Scriptures instruct for faith, yet they proceed to do the very same kind of work that Robert Ingersoll and Thomas Paine tried to accomplish—to undermine confidence in the Bible as the Word of God. That confidence is the very basis of all faith.

After we have lost our confidence, what have we left for a foundation of belief? We have merely what is called Higher Criticism and Evolution; and this means that after a little process of reasoning along these lines many would conclude that the Bible is merely a collection of choice pieces of ancient Jewish literature, written by men who really knew less than do we.

The Pastor then demonstrated that those who reject the Bible as the Word of God have no other foundation for whatever faith they may possess than the guess of this or that man, or of themselves. He pointed out the well-known fact that all men are more or less imperfect in judgment; and that if men were to picture God there would be as many different styles of God as there are different persons.

The speaker illustrated his point by calling attention to the numerous creeds formulated during the Dark Ages and to the different kinds of Gods those different creeds have pictured. The noblest minds of that time were deceived into worshiping the worst kind of images that could be made. He declared that while the heathen nations were making their ugly idols out of wood, stone, clay or metal, the nations of Christendom were printing atrocious descriptions of God the like of which could not be moulded out of clay or fashioned out of anything else. He was not finding fault with our forefathers, but with the real instigator of the cruel misrepresentations of the Almighty. As St. Paul declares, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ should shine unto them."

Then the Pastor showed that the eyes of many Christians are not wide open for the same reason that St. Paul gave the Corinthian Church. The god of this world has fastened the bandages so tightly that it is with difficulty that any get the eyes of their understanding open. Again, St. Paul foretells that in the end of this Age "many shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons." The Pastor declared that we have come to the time when many have denied the faith and others are denying it—good people, intelligent people, ministers of the Gospel in the various pulpits, professors, theologians, college presidents—confessing that they have lost the basis of their faith.

We are not to suppose for even a moment that these people who are falling away from the faith are wicked. On the contrary, they are well-intentioned—many of them are. But they have gotten under a delusion. In the light of the New Dispensation the delusions of the past are coming up constantly for criticism. Indeed, so great is the conflict between the light of the Gospel and the darkness of the creeds that people "see stars," so to speak, and are so astonished that they do not know what to think.

Next the Pastor demonstrated that the great difficulty with people who are losing their confidence in the Bible as the Word of God is that they are not familiar with its contents. Many are still holding to the Scriptures in a blind way, hoping against hope that they may not lose their faith. They are afraid to read and afraid to think, lest they lose the very small amount of faith which they possess. If only such knew it, they never really have had a well established faith.

The Pastor proceeded to point out the difference between true faith and that which is often misnamed faith, but which in reality is credulity. The faith commended in the Scriptures is that which relates to things which God has promised. Our forefathers, he declared, had too much confidence in men. They swallowed the creeds of the Dark Ages; and the more absurd the proposition, the more faith they thought they had. They should have asked, "Where has God declared such things?" He maintains that we should accept by faith only what the Lord has assured us of in His Word.

We have made a great mistake as to what faith really is, he thinks. Faith must have a basis, and that basis must have some intelligent presentation. To believe in the Bible as the Word of God merely because our parents did so is not faith at all; heathen peoples do just as well as that—they believe as their parents did, without investigation. But to have faith in the Bible we must have proof that it is of God; and to have that evidence we must understand the Word.

The Pastor holds that most people are so perplexed that they do not know what to believe. And yet, he declared, at this very time when Higher Criticism is undermining the foundation of all faith, and when many intelligent people are afraid to think along Scriptural lines, Bible students are finding the Word of God to be the most wonderful Book in all the world. God's Plan for human salvation was never so well understood as just now, in the midst of all the turmoil in the denominations, in the great institutions of learning and in the world.

The Pastor then discussed some of the so-called findings of Higher Criticism—that Moses did not write the Pentateuch, nor Isaiah the greater part of the prophecy which bears his name, etc. These critics, he declared, are trying to prove something by the outside of the Bible. Their so-called findings he believes to be a matter of mere guesswork, although, as some of them are very bright men, they put up a strong argument in some things. They will undertake to prove that Jesus was mistaken when He declared that Isaiah the Prophet said thus and so; that St. Paul was also mistaken when he quoted from the Prophet Isaiah and said, Thus saith the Prophet Isaiah; that Daniel did not write the book which bears his name—or if he did, that it was fulfilled before the Christian era, notwithstanding Jesus' assertion to the contrary.

The Pastor, like all reasonable Christian people, relies upon the internal evidence of the Bible that it is the Word of God. That internal evidence cannot be doubted. The Old Testament prophecies and the teachings of the Lord and the Apostles so interlock and depend one upon the other that no human being could possibly have thought out the great Plan therein found. All the way from Genesis to Revelation the parts so co-ordinate and fit together that one great harmonious Plan of the Ages is the result. Another strong proof of the inspiration of the Bible is furnished in present-day conditions, which were foretold by the Prophets thousands of years ago.

Then the speaker considered some of the objections to the Bible usually brought forward by infidels. He showed that it is a weak argument indeed which credits priests and knaves with writing the Sacred Book. If Catholics had made the Bible, they would naturally have put into it many things which are not there; for instance, they would have told about the Mass, about Purgatory, hell-fire and eternal torment, of which there is nothing said; they would also have intimated that we should use beads and images in worship; they would have had something about the Immaculate conception of the Virgin, and about St. Peter's being the first pope, etc.

If on the other hand, Presbyterians had written the Bible, they would have put in a great deal about Hell, about elect and non-elect infants, etc. Methodists would have left out all about Election—making one's calling and election sure, the Very Elect, etc.—for they do not know what to do with these texts. Our Calvinistic friends would have left out the texts about free grace; for these do not fit with their ideas of election. All these denominations would have inserted something in regard to "the trinity"; for they all hold that this doctrine is the very essence of faith, although it is not mentioned even once in the Bible! The Pastor's conclusion is that clearly the denominations did not make the Bible.

From its own standpoint, the speaker continued, the Bible is very simple and fully explains itself. He did not wish to be misunderstood as "poking fun" at the denominations; for he realizes that these dear people mean well, and he loves all who love the Lord. But he believes that the whole world is greatly injured by the false conceptions of God's character handed down from the Dark Ages, and that many people are going after sin to-day who would, if they had a right knowledge of God, be following after righteousness. Many men have been led to drinking and all sorts of debauchery and sin merely by reason of not seeing the real God; for if any one see Him, he is sure to love Him. Mankind are so made that worship is natural.

Notwithstanding the six thousand years of falling, there is in every man's brain, unless he be an idiot, the quality of reverence, which impels him to desire to worship his Creator. But, according to St. Paul's argument in his letter to the Romans, although man was created perfect, there came a time in the history of the fallen race when men were unwilling longer to retain God in their minds; and then the Almighty gave them over to reprobate minds, to do improper things, and to sink lower and lower in degradation. Then it was that the "doctrines of demons" were inculcated into the human mind, so as to keep men in ignorance, darkness and superstition. The god of this world blinds the minds of those who believe not—blinds them by these various false doctrines which once God's people believed.

The Pastor then gave the two views of the Almighty which once obtained in the thoughts of many Christians. One side of our minds, as it were, pictured God as the great representative of Satanic enmity, bent upon destroying nearly all the creatures whom He had brought into the world. The other side, somehow, imagined Him as kind, loving and merciful. But we did not know how to balance these two sides. Fortunately for us, however, we got the devilish side subordinated, and thought of God as loving, and by going to Him daily in prayer we tried to forget the devilish part. The whole world has been more or less in this condition.

But, thank God! said the Pastor, we are in the time when the path of the just is shining more and more unto the perfect Day. That Day is now so near that we can almost see its dawn. In a little while the Church of Christ will have been fully gathered—out of every people, nation, kindred and tongue, out of all denominations.

The Pastor then explained how the consecrated people of God may have full assurance of faith. In His Word God tells us that by nature we were children of wrath even as others; that Christ tasted death for the whole world, and that by and by He will give human life, restitution life, to all who will receive it; but that meantime the call is for those who will separate themselves from the world and be "a peculiar people, zealous of good works"—of everything that is God's will—and ready to lay down their lives in doing that will. Those who know that such is the teaching of Scripture have a good basis for faith. Those who have taken the steps of repentance of sin, of trusting in the Redeemer for salvation, of consecrating themselves to God, now have by faith all those graces of character reckoned to them which the world will actually receive during the thousand years of the Reign of Christ. To the consecrated the Father has fulfilled His promise by giving them a measure of His Holy Spirit.

Lest any should misapprehend his meaning, the Pastor explained that the Holy Spirit is not now manifested in the same way that it was in the early Church. At that time it was manifested in a miraculous way—with outward evidences, such as tongues, miracles of healing, etc., attesting that those who received these gifts were acceptable to God as members of His Church and had been begotten of the Holy Spirit. But after the Church had been established, there was no further need of such manifestations. Throughout the remainder of the Gospel Age the Holy Spirit has manifested itself only by the fruits of righteousness—meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness—love. When the miraculous gifts ceased, these fruits and graces of the Spirit continued.

The Pastor concluded with an exhortation that the people of God see to it that they daily grow in grace and in knowledge, becoming more and more like the Lord Jesus in character. Our Lord said that every tree is known by its fruits. Are we bearing good fruit? he asked. Are we having more and more fellowship with God and with our Lord Jesus? Are we getting into deeper and broader sympathy with all of the Household of Faith? Are we coming more and more into sympathy with the poor world in its fallen condition, and with every good effort to help them up out of such condition? If so, then we have evidence not only that we have believed in the right Book and in the true God, but that we are the children of God and heirs—joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord.

We shall be tested as to our willingness to suffer with our Lord. This does not mean suffering for wrong-doing; for St. Peter reminds us that a Christian who suffers as a busybody in other men's affairs is not suffering for Christ's sake. Perhaps one-half of the suffering in the world and in the Church results from busybodying. But the people of God are not to suffer as evil-doers. They may be misrepresented as evil-doers, but such suffering is not for evil-doing, even if they be so blamed. But "if any man suffer, let him suffer as a Christian." The speaker reminded his hearers that Jesus Himself was accused of being an evil-doer, a blasphemer, an injurious person; and so were the Apostles—all their persecutions were on that score. But if you suffer let it be for something right that you have done, in harmony with your covenant with God, in harmony with God's Word and will. Those who suffer as Christians should rejoice therein; for the Spirit of God and of glory rests on a such, and they may have full assurance of faith.

TOOK "CITY OF BLOOD."

Admiral Rawson's Rockets Spread Terror In Benin.

That intrepid sailor, Sir Henry Rawson, who became Governor of New South Wales, and had the reputation of being the most widely beloved member of the naval service, is commemorated in a biography just published in London.

The expedition against Benin in Africa, the "City of Blood" was the last considerable and important expedition undertaken by the British navy. Asked for an estimate of the cost and length of time required for success, he named the sum of $250,000 and the space of six months. He took the city in four months and at a cost of $150,000.

When the expedition started, it was not even known exactly where Benin was; but Rawson made no mistake, and, having got within range of where he believed it to be, he had a couple of rockets fired in the direction.

"Little did the admiral know the effect those rockets were going to have in Benin. It would hardly be credited that at a mile distant, and fired only in a general direction, they should have pitched into the ju-ju compounds. A Benin woman afterwards described what happened:

"The compound was thronged with people, when suddenly from the blue appeared two hissing thunderbolts, which fell into the very heart of the sacred precincts. Not a white man in sight! Yet here were two messages from the skies. 'Truly the white men are gods!' they said, and ran panic-stricken, from the place'."

Nevertheless, though the city was easily taken, there was some sharp fighting on the way up, and the losses, both in officers and men, were considerable. The following extract, from a letter quoted in the book, from an unknown correspondent, shows what his men thought of their chief:—

"The admiral doffed his uniform immediately on landing, and, attired only in trousers and shirt and a big helmet, walked every step of the journey, plodding along with the aid of a walking-staff, although he was nearly fifty-three years old. His grand example kept the men well together, and although at times he could hardly put one foot before the other, so great was his fatigue, he gallantly refused the services of carriers. His treatment of the force was most kind and considerate, and when our poor fellows were buried, the admiral cried as if he had been their father."

The campaign was hardly over when Rawson fell sick with malaria, which left him with arthritis in the hip-joint. He suffered agonies from this disease for the rest of his life.

The Benin expedition is an episode of very real note in the history of the navy. But Rawson fought also in China, in Egypt, and on the East Coast of Africa. He was a favorite of everybody, from King Edward and the Duke of Edinburgh downwards, a great naval tactician, a gunnery enthusiast, and, above all, a model of all manly qualities, both in his public and his private life.

Here's a Lady Explorer.

Lady Grace R. Mackenzie has left England for East Africa on a big hunting expedition. She is taking with her a recording phonograph on which she will try to get the sounds of the forest, especially the jargon of the native negro and the chatter of the anthropoid apes. She wants to show, among other things, that women are as capable as men when it comes to piercing the African jungle.

Fly Swatting Is Useless

Our Dominion Entomologist says: "I am convinced that the practical results of the fly swatting campaigns that have been carried on by some of our newspapers are useless as fly reducers." But the fact that one ten-cent packet of WILSON'S FLY PADS is capable of killing a bushel of flies proves them to be the best of all fly killers and recommends their continuous use to good housekeepers.

MONEY POURING IN.

London Generous Towards Empress Fund—Memorial Service Held.

LONDON, June 6.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Up to last night the Lord Mayor's fund amounted to $120,000 and the Liverpool fund to nearly $70,000. Sir Herbert Tree, in forwarding a check for $461, proceeds of the People's Theatre matinee, mentions that the author Bernard Shaw, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell, both gave their services, and that he makes himself responsible for other expenses. The National Seamen's and Sailors' Union have given $1,500 for dependents of crew.

General Booth opened a fund yesterday. He said the disaster had not only robbed the army of 144 of the most valuable and experienced men and women, but left them with a large number of their orphans and others depending on what they feel they must make provision for.

One of the most impressive scenes ever witnessed within the walls of London's vast hall took place at the Royal Albert Hall last night when a public memorial service for those who lost their lives on the Empress of Ireland by the Salvation Army.

The immense hall with its capacity of fifteen thousand people was filled to the doors, chiefly with Salvationists and friends and also a large number of the general public.

The service opened with a pathetic procession. It consisted of the international staff songsters, carrying their distinctive flags, followed by those members of the Canadian contingent to the international congress who had happily traveled across by other vessels. The Newfoundland party and Indian officers then followed. Relatives and friends of the lost Salvation Army commissioners and their wives came next.

WAR SUPPLIES PASSED.

Carranza's Arms Allowed By U. S. to Land at Tampico.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Information reaching Washington late yesterday that the American schooner Sunshine from Galveston had landed ammunition at Tampico for the Mexican Constitutionalists without interference on the part of the United States or the Huerta Government, was received in official quarters here without comment.

State Department and Navy Department officials decline to verify the report, but it was learned that the presence of the Sunshine off Tampico with arms aboard consigned to Constitutionalists had been known to the Washington Government for several days. The actual delivery of munitions of war to the enemies of Huerta without interference was regarded with significance.

With the Cuban steamer Antilla, en route from New York to Tampico with arms, consigned to Carranza's forces, there has been much speculation as to what the United States would do in case the Huerta Government should attempt a blockade of the port. Every indication to-day was that the United States would maintain its position that Tampico was an open port.

The movement of arms, pending results of mediation at Niagara Falls, and the proposals to the Constitutionalists to participate in the peace negotiations have been followed by rumors of disapproval on the part of the South American mediation envoys.

Secretary Bryan last night flatly declared that the State Department had received no protest from the mediators.

"Fruit-a-tives" Completely Cured Distressing Kidney Trouble.

St. Thomas, Ont., April 1st, 1913. "In 1911, I was laid up with Kidney Trouble and not able to get out of my chair. Had tried many kidney remedies without satisfactory results. The pain was excruciating and my screams could be heard on the street. One day a friend from Ottawa came to see me, and when he found me in such poor health, said he would send me a sample of "Fruit-a-tives", which he did and I commenced taking them. The results were so apparent with the first few doses that I continued to take "Fruit-a-tives" and was completely restored to my normal state of health. ONE million good American dollars, tucked away in the personal luggage of a score of the world's leading musical and dramatic artists, left New York for England and the Continent a few weeks ago, never to return to their native cash registers.

Financially this sum will set a new record of the total season's winnings by opera singers, conductors and concert stars to be carried away on one vessel. Of the estimated $6,000,000 which it has been carefully estimated is spent annually in the United States to satisfy the American desire for musical enjoyment, twenty artists, all of whom are passengers aboard the Kaiser Wilhelm II., took away one-sixth of the entire amount.

Enormous as this sum happens to be, there is far greater interest in the personalities of the men and women who may regard one million dollars as representative of their artistic value for one season in America. Among them are some of the brightest stars of the concert stage, the most brilliant artists of grand opera and last, but by no means least, the leading actor of the English speaking stage.

In publishing the list this morning it is not at all unlikely that this paper is only anticipating the concert programme to be held aboard the vessel some night during the voyage.

Here they are. First the grand opera stars:—

Enrico Caruso, tenor, of the Metropolitan Opera company, whose income from America alone from the sale of phonograph records and salary as grand opera singer is said to be close to $250,000.

Miss Geraldine Farrar, dramatic soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera company, one of the most popular women singers in the organization.

Miss Mary Garden, of the Chicago Grand Opera company. She is a favorite in Paris as well as in New York.

Mr. Antonio Scotti, baritone, of the Metropolitan Opera company.

Margarete Ober, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera company, who is returning after her first season here, during which she has scored enormous personal success.

Mme. Frances Alda, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company, in private life Mme. Gatti-Casazza, wife of the managing director of the company. She is a concert favorite as well as an operatic prima donna.

Mme. Bella Alten, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company, and known to thousands of children who have seen her in "Hänsel und Gretel."

Basil Ruysdael, basso, of the Metropolitan Opera company.

Robert Leonhardt, baritone, of the Metropolitan Opera company, who is returning to Europe after his first American season.

> Passengers aboard the Kaiser Wilhelm II. who carried with them $1,000,000 or more of American earnings:—
>
> Opera stars:—Enrico Caruso, Geraldine Farrar, Mary Garden, Antonio Scotti, Margarete Ober, Frances Alda, Bella Alten, Basil Ruysdael.
>
> Conductors:—Arturo Toscanini, Alfred Hertz, Cleofonte Campinini, Dr. Carl Muck, Giulio Scotti, Franz Horth.
>
> Actors:—Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and Lady Forbes-Robertson (Gertrude Elliott).
>
> Concert artists:—Ignace Paderewski, John McCormack, Josef Hofmann.

Next are the stars of the concert stage:—

Ignace Paderewski, Polish pianist, who is returning after a long concert tour which is said to have netted him more than $100,000.

John McCormack, Irish tenor, at the moment the most popular concert singer in America.

Josef Hofmann, pianist, who has repeated former successes in his recently completed concert tour.

The operatic conductors and leaders:—

Arturo Toscanini, first conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, who is generally considered the foremost opera conductor of the world.

Alfred Hertz, conductor of German opera at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Dr. Carl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Franz Horth, one of the new stage managers of the Metropolitan Opera company.

Also:—

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and Lady Forbes-Robertson (Gertrude Elliott). Sir Johnston has played for the last time in New York, but returns to tour through the Middle West in his Shakespearian repertoire next season.

To specify the earnings of each of the artists would be impossible, because some of them have various sources of income. Caruso sang [illegible] times this season at the Metropolitan Opera House, and although his fees never have been officially announced, it is said he receives something like $2,000 every time he appears in opera. During the winter while in America Caruso sings a number of times for the phonograph company which handles his records, and from the sale of the latter he receives a royalty.

Both Miss Farrar and Miss Garden are singers who receive large fees from their respective operatic organizations. Before the opera season opened last autumn Miss Farrar travelled to the Pacific coast on a concert tour, so her income has been considerably above what she has received from grand opera.

Of the concert artists perhaps Mr. Paderewski has had the most signal success of the last year, although Mr. John McCormack unquestionably has appeared before more persons and more frequently. Mr. McCormack also derives considerable from the sale of his phonograph records.

There is deep significance in the leaving of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, whose long engagement last winter in New York was one of the features of the theatrical season now closing. He has played in other Eastern cities, always repeating his New York success. Lady Forbes-Robertson, who is an American and a sister of Miss Maxine Elliott, will not retire from the stage with her husband, who is to devote himself in the future to lecturing and directing the School of Dramatic Art in London.

The Kaiser Wilhelm II., selected by the stars of grand opera for their voyage, is one of the handsomest of the North German Lloyd line ships. Captain R. Dahl, a new commanding officer on this steamship, but long associated with the company, will be in charge.

Charles H. Schnell, purser of the steamship, recently celebrated his thirty-first year in the employ of the company and has crossed the ocean more than three hundred and twenty-five times. It will remain for him to make the passengers comfortable.

Auction Bridge.

BY PROSPERO.

As was to be expected, the mail of recent weeks did not spare some pointed comments on the antics of type, notably under date of March 29. "Perplexed Player" proffers the suggestion its proper date should have been April 1.

Another, "Amateur," writes:—"After perusal of previous articles with a great deal of interest, the blame justly belongs to the proverbial printer's devil—no doubt the identical mischievous sprite that once played a prank with 'Amateur's' serious disquisition about Noah's ark resting on an Armenian mountain, amended by the reading 'on an American mountain.' I might be tempted to add my own experience as a counterpart when I felt proud to introduce a quotation from Homer's immortal epode, and the benevolent printer metamorphosed it into 'Horner's immoral episode,' adding to Troy, of classic fame, the distinctive N. Y."

But, I ask pardon—let us return to bridge. M. M. H., New York, writes:—"I, for one, say yes, abolish scoring of honors; they are illogical."

W. H. A., California, is informed Prospero has not written a book on Bridge. This paper publishes his efforts directed toward the placing of the game on a firm, rational basis. The negative declaration, on his original suggestion, came thus before the bridge world.

Mrs. H. G. S., Norfolk, asks whether a double by one's partner alters the status of the primary bidder, so that after the double a new departure obtains for player and dummy—that is, the original bidder has to give up the play to his partner after the double. In my opinion, no, in case more tricks are bid in the former trump; yes, if a new trump is declared.

On April 12 the solution of test hand No. 1 was given and the invitation extended for a play under negative no trump, to try whether Y and Z can even do better than three tricks on their bid of minus 4 (that means, if they take but three tricks they fill their contract, 7 minus 4). With less than three tricks they would do better. A most encouraging response reaches me from C. M., Scranton, who the month before reported "test hand No. 1 was bid in by A H at two hearts and lost."

Now decided progress is apparent. The following was the game:—Score, first game, love all. "The bidding commenced with Z at minus 1 and was forced up to minus 4 (three tricks only on contract).

The blank suits, [illegible] and Z, enabling discarding of losing cards, gave them the victory—at 2 tricks—a score of 5 [illegible] 40.

Tricks are underscored. A leads, Y is dummy.

The other day what appears to be a new point came up in actual play. Suppose AB [illegible] bid and played at 7 diamonds—that is, all tricks but took six only. [illegible] bid 20 above line for little [illegible] protested on ground that AB had virtually bid big slam, and that [illegible] since little slam is barred from bidding [illegible]. In talks with several players the vote seems divided. Mine would count for permission to score. The opinions of experts are invited; decision by authorities such as the Knickerbocker or New York Bridge Whist club, or the Whist Club, also from other cities, will be appreciated.

For to-day my readers are asked to see what they can do with Test Hand No. 12.

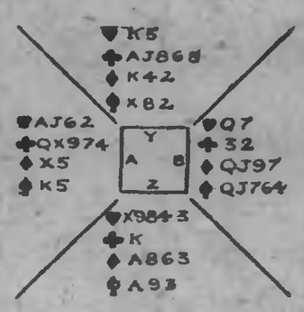
Score—First game, YZ, 22; AB, 18; penalties, about even. Z is the dealer. How would you bid?



Time is called. Other correspondence and questions of interest to be discussed have to wait till next Sunday.

The Influence of Colors.

COLOR is one of the big factors of existence. It is a vital part of the universe; a vague, unsubstantial, but nevertheless definite creation that weaves its way in the web and woof of every individual life.

Who can disbelieve that color is strongly connected with the emotions, that it can be moral or immoral, that it is an important part of all that goes to make up actual "living" in the sum total of existence? Can you not realize it? Does not a gorgeous sunset, all crimson splendor, laced with mauve and gold, take away your breath, leave you awestruck and silent before its magnificence?

Does not a bed of poppies, redolent, of warm, hot life, pulsing through the sunshine of a summer's day, fill you with an inexpressible pleasure, strongly realized but almost impossible to word? Even a basket of flowers, passed quickly in a muddy street, can change the current of your thoughts with a rush from their serious tenor to a lighter mood, its actual source but vaguely understood.

It is color, all color; the quick response of the senses to this ever varied, never ending miracle of Nature's handiwork. As color in its entirety, is a definite living thing, each separate color in itself has its own individuality.

How curious it is that to many natures [illegible] is [illegible] feeling that brief, [illegible] are [illegible]. Why? The blazing [illegible] of scarlet and flame, the deep tones of sapphire and ruby, shock them; the magic splendor of emerald and violet are to them, subconsciously perhaps, emblematic of emotions, feelings, that are feared, though but dimly understood. Again, why?

There are certain temperaments in which a love of sombre hues is second nature; splash them with color and they shiver afraid, leave them to drabs and grays, dull mauves and calm, unruffled greens and they are content. Again there is found collectively in Southern and Eastern nations—individually all the world over—that savage semi-barbaric passion for the rich hues that are born of heat and sunlight. To minds such as these scarlet and purple, sapphire and ruby, are a joy, a quivering, living expression of the innermost desires and feelings of their very souls. This passionate love created for color is to certain other minds immoral, even decadent. But a real love of color cannot be decadent. Sensuous perhaps, but then all love of beauty is sensuous—pleasing to the senses—and yet love of beauty is one of the greatest gifts of the intellect. Again, if a passion for color is sensuous, so, too, is music, reading, breathing, loving and dying! No more and no less!

In the question of color in dress we judge a woman by the clothes she wears, forgetting that the most infinitely wrong thing on earth is hasty judgment, warped by a human [illegible] to say that the shades she chooses are characteristic. Characteristic of what? Who can tell, for very often a woman's dress has little about her as consistently as do her envious [illegible].

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A HANDY MAN

Patrick Flynn, that beater of carpets, cleaner of windows and handy man for the housewives of Rosecliff, was tied to his chair with an attack of rheumatism. Consequently there was general lamentation in the Village, for there was no other man to take his place, and working women were equally scare.

"I don't know what you going to do, Cynthia," sighed her sister-in-law, as Cynthia helped her pack a trunk for a short trip to the mountains.

"Patrick promised to 'come on Monday and help with the cleaning. You know Nora refuses to do anything except the regular work and although I have offered to give her extra wages for the cleaning, she doesn't want to touch it. It's dreadful—all the fall cleaning to do and the Wimblestons coming for Thanksgiving, just as I 've broken down."

"Helen Blake," cried Cynthia, sitting down on the floor and putting her fingers into her pretty ears. "Stop this wailing and gnashing of teeth or I shall run away myself. Leave the cleaning to me—I'll find somebody if I have to import a specialist from town. When you come back from the lakes you will find a spotless house and don't you dare worry an instant. I shall love the job—I'm a born boss, anyway, you know, only I never had much chance to exercise my ability.

Mrs. Blake smiled gratefully. "I don't know what we'd do without you, Cynthia, dear. You are the greatest comfort. Dick and I are selfish to wish you won't get married very soon."

"Perhaps not at all," Cynthia said cheerfully. "Don't worry about such a remote possibility as my falling in love with anybody in Rosecliff."

"What is the matter with the men in Rosecliff?" Helen ruffled indignantly. She had been born in that suburb.

"They are all married, if you'll stop to think," laughed Cynthia, dodging the pillow Mrs. Blake threw at her.

The next morning Cynthia entered the kitchen where Nora was washing the breakfast dishes. Her face wore an anxious expression.

"I don't know what we're going to do about cleaning, Nora," she began. "I've telegraphed from one end of the Village to the other and everybody elese is i nthe same fix. I even called up Dr. Lane and he says Patrick may not be able to work for several months. You say that you are not strong enough to work even with extra pay?" Cynthia rattled her gold mesh bag enticingly.

Nora's sturdy shoulder was lifted in a shrug. "I wouldn't be doing it for no money, miss. I hired to do the cooking and general work. It was understood that the cleaning and the laundry was to be done out."

"Very well, Nora. Don't you know of any man, woman or child who might be hired for love or money to come and help with the house cleaning for $2 a day?"

Nora pondered deliberately as she piled a tray with clean china. Then she shook her head doubtfully. "I don't be knowing anybody at all—unless—shure and you might get him."

"Who is he?" demanded Cynthia, eagerly.

"I seen a young man working in the yard at that cottage around the corner, Miss. A strong, hearty feller he is, too. Look at him, now, there—beating rugs like the divvle—excuse me Miss Cynthia. A hard-working, honest-looking young chap."

Nora lifted the shade and pointed a finger into an adjoining yard; there was open admiration in her blue eyes.

Cynthia looked and saw in the overgrown yard a cottage that had long been untenanted a tall young man, blunt featured, with an unmistakably honest face—a face grimy with the results of honest toil. He was clad in a rough suit of overalls and blouse and on his feet was a disreputable pair of tennis shoes. He was tugging a huge basket of rubbish from the back door of the cottage.

"How lucky," cried Cynthia. "I'll speak to him at once. I didn't know the cottage was taken, Nora."

"Nor did I, Miss, till I saw the man working there this morning."

Nora returned to her dishes and Cynthia went out into the trimly kept back yard of the Blake residence and went to the low-dividing fence. She yas a refreshing picture on this crisp autumn morning—her fair face tinged with rose color and her mist of black hair pinned into somes ewblance of order.

The man in the next yard turned his basket to the ash bin and for the moment went into obscurity behind the rising cloud of dust. When he emerged it was Cynthia's gentle little sneeze that attracted his attention. He turned and whipped off a battered cap.

"Young man," began Cynthia rather indifferently, "are you very busy just now?"

"Not too busy to be at your service, ma'am," said the man politely.

"Thank you," she said. "Patrick Flynn is laid up with rheumatism and there isn't a soul to help with the cleaning, and it must be done this week. Can you wash windows and beat rugs?"

"Yes, ma'am," he said.

"And clean the celar and start the furnace and al those things?"

For an instant he ehsitated and then he said: "Yes, ma'am; it isn't exactly in my line but I'm wiling to help you out."

"You are very good, indeed," said Cynthia. "We've always paid Patrick two dollars a day, but if you can come at once I will pay you three."

"When shall I come?" he asked as he nodded with some embarrassment.

"If you could begin to-day——" began Cynthia, more wistfully than she had realized. "But I suppose you rae engaged to clean the cottage first."

"I have a couple of weeks to do that in," replied the man, in a business like tone. "I'll lock the cottage and come right now."

Cynthia hurried into the house and enveloped her slender form in a big apron and pinned a towel over her hair.

It was a house cleaning to be remembered for its thoroughness.

The new man, who told Cynthia his name was Grey, worked like a beaver. He beat rugs thoroughly, yet with the care of one who knows the value of the articles he handles. He cleaned the floors and waxed and polished them till they shone like mirros. He washed the windows and he cleaned the cellar and then whitewashed it, and laid a fire in the furnace, from which he emerged with the face of a coal heaver, but a temper as cheery as it had been every day.

Each night Cynthia had paid his wages into the toil-hardened palm, and her gracious thanks had accompanied the payment.

She learned very little about Grey. He spoke like an educated man and ocasionaly he dropped a hint that led her to believe he might have seen better days; however, he always covered the hint with some open ignorant remark that disarmed any suspicion she might have had concerning him.

Her brother lingered a week in the mountains.

When the last bit of work was done and Grey had polished the brass and irons and replaced them before the library hearth, Cynthia drew out her purse and paid him.

"I really don't know what I should have done without you, Grey," she was saying, when the door opened quickly and her brother entered.

"Howdy, Cynthia, dear?" he said, kissing her; then starting back, he stared at the grimy figure before him. "For-the-loveof-Mike—what are you doing here, Frazer?" He made a grab for the other hand and clung to it.

"Frazer?" repeated Cynthia, coldly. This young man told me his name was Grey." She looked disapprovingly at the shame-faced young man before her. "I trusted him," she added simply.

"Grey Frazer, it is—you know his pictures, sis admired 'em in the magazines no end of times. How in the dickens did you corral him here—in this guise?"

Cynthia turned her back while Grey Frazer explained to the amused and shaking Dick that he had leased the cottage around the corner, and in lieu of the service of Patrick Flynn, whom he had desired, he had set about to clean out the cottage himself.

Then Cynthia came to him for help—and Mr. Frazer modestly attested he had never failed a maiden in distress. All the time his eyes were watching Cynthia's back with deep trouble in their depths. "I sincerely beg Miss Blake's pardon for the deceit," he said humbly. "My only excuse is that she needed help, and if she had known who I was she might not have accepted my assistance."

Cynthia turned and held out a hand. "I am very grateful for your help, Mr. Frazer," she murmured demurely. "It is an honour to meet such a distinguished artist—and yet an indispensable 'handy man' is lost to the world."

Grey Frazer grinned happily through the grime on his face. "I believe I'll go home and shed this disguise," he said. "I've earned a day off. My car is at a garage down the street—shall we motor this afternoon?"

Nora heard the invitation and stared open-eyed.

Months afterwards, when Cynthia announced to Helen and Dick that she had decided to marry after all, her sister-inlaw smiled.

"I'm glad you're going to marry the man around the corner, dear. He can come in and do the cleaning every year."

"Those were the happiest days of my life," asserted Grey Fraser, proudly.

Since mother's bought a cookbook
The grub don't taste the same
An' everything we get to eat
Has some outlandish name.

I'd rather have the simple food
She used to feed us on—
Some side meat an' pertaters
B'iled with their jackets on.

Green apple pie an' doughnuts
Is good enough for me.
With griddle cakes an' honey
When the parson comes to tea.

I'd like a good old pot roast—
I wouldn't care how tough—
For my jaws don't get no exercise
On this here fancy stuff.

I don't believe it's nourishin'.
A man can't hold enough
To keep him goin' half a day
Of this newfangled stuff.

I don't know much 'bout cookin',
An' perhaps ma ain't to blame,
But since she bought that cookbook
The grub don't taste the same.

How the Falconer Told It.

I found my eyas jowking on the cadge, but she awoke, mantled and roused a little, after which I let her bowse. Hooded, with jesses, leach and bells in perfect order, I took her on the fist and so to the fields. It was evident that she was in yarak, for her mails, malls and train ruffled eagerly and her petty singles spasmodically contracted so that her talons gripped the glove hard. A rook appeared and I flew her at it. It was too far off and escaped, but it was a marvel to see lady walt ou, discover another quarry, chase it, throwing up cleverly, and finally bind to it with a lightning stoop. She was depluming it when I was able to make in easily.—Outing Magazine.

Hot and Heavy.

Mr. Kellogg was always teasing his wife. It was strange that she did not oftener suspect the pitfalls he prepared for her. This time he came home to dinner and said gravely, "Young White's wife gave it to him hot and heavy this morning!"

The Whites had been married but a few months, and Mrs. Kellogg promptly scented a scandal.

"Fighting already? How dreadful!" she continued. "Tell me about it."

"Oh, she just gave him one of the biscuits she made for breakfast," replied her husband.—Youth's Companion.

Fate of Marshal Ney.

It has been maintained by many that the famous Marshal Ney, whom Napoleon called the "bravest of the brave," was not executed, as history makes him out to have been, but succeeded, by the help of friends, in making his escape to America, where he lived to an advanced age, dying in peace in his own bed. The theory advocated by many is that Ney went to North Carolina, became a school teacher and made many friends, to the more intimate of whom he confided his secret. But there is not much to the story except its novelty.—New York American.

Call To Electors of Ontario Issued By Alliance.

TORONTO, June 6.—With the president, Rev. Canon Green, in the chair, the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance, at a lengthy session of the executive in the city yesterday, unanimously adopted a manifesto bearing upon the pending provincial elections.

The manifesto reviews the temperance situation in the province for several years past and calls upon the electors of Ontario to secure the nomination and election of men who will represent the people upon the issue.

"We urge all right-thinking citizens to put their temperance principles before any mere party preferences in the approaching contest," continues the manifesto, "and vote only for candidates who can be relied upon to support the most advanced temperance measure brought before the Legislature."

Doyle On Way West.

LONDON, Ont., June 6.—Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, passing through London yesterday, declared that as a British tariff reformer, he was much struck by the way in which American industrial concerns are forced to establish branch factories in Canada.

As to woman's suffrage Sir Arthur declared that through the tactics of the militant the cause of suffrage in England is now completely lost.

He predicted a general election in Great Britain in the near future.

Sir Arthur is en route for British Columbia, where he intends to spend a short time in the mountains.

Daring of Suffragettes Alarms Royal Court Officers.

INTERRUPTER IS IDENTIFIED

Woman Who Addressed King George During the Reception Was Miss Mary Blomfield, a Member of a Prominent Family — Historic Church Is Destroyed—Redmond Refuses Audience.

LONDON, June 6.—Officials of the Women's Social and Political Union, the militant suffragette organization, deny responsibility for the incident at Buckingham Palace Thursday night, when a woman interrupted the presentations by throwing herself at the King's feet and shouting: "Your majesty, for God's sake do not use force."

Miss Mary Blomfield, daughter of Lady Sara Louise Blomfield, widow of Sir Arthur Blomfield, an architect, was the woman who created the scene and she alone was concerned in the incident, although her sister, who also attended the court, was requested to leave the palace after the occurrence despite the fact that she took no part in the demonstration. She left without making any protest.

It is understood that there is no ground for further action against Miss Mary Blomfield except that she will be banned from future court functions.

According to The Standard seven forged cards of admission were presented at the court but all the forgeries were detected and the bearers of the cards persuaded to leave without creating a disturbance.

According to The Daily Express Queen Mary remarked after the Blomfield incident: "If this had been the worst thing the women had done they might perhaps be forgiven."

It is reported that Their Majesties King George and Queen Mary, have decided to hold no garden party at Buckingham Palace this year, because this function, to which thousands of invitations are issued, would give too great an opportunity to the suffragettes to create scenes. It is also stated that the invitation list to Thursday's night court was so rigorously scrutinized that the invitation of three women were withdrawn by special messengers.

Open air suffragette meetings at Balham and other places in London Thursday night were broken up by the irate crowds.

Historic Church Destroyed.

DERBY, Eng., June 6. — The ancient and historic church at Breadsall, dating back to Norman times and containing many priceless relics, was destroyed by fire during the night. While no direct evidence was obtainable that the fire was started by suffragettes they are suspected by the authorities, as explosions similar to those caused by the bombs usually employed by the "arson squad" were heard before the fire was discovered. It is also pointed out that some weeks ago a suffragette meeting in the village of Breadsall was broken up by boys, and it is generally believed that the women burned the church for vengeance.

Redmond Bars Suffragettes.

LONDON, June 6.—John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, yesterday declined a request by Irish women suffragists that he receive a deputation on the subject of the inclusion of women as electors for the Irish Parliament. Mr. Redmond pointed out that previous deputations of this nature had caused only unpleasantness, and reiterated the view that Ireland under home rule must decide for herself whether she wants women voters.

Rectors Fear Militants.

LONDON, June 6.—In consequence of militant suffragette attacks, churches in many parts of the country are being closed except for the usual Sunday services. A sample of the notices posted by the rectors is as follows: "Owing to dastardly outrages by frenzied criminals who have no regard for God or man, this church will be closed except during the hours of divine service."

Indigestion And Headaches

Arising from Constipation, Cured and Regular Habits Established by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

In the western Provinces, where so many thousands live far from doctors and drug stores, very many rely on Dr. Chase's medicines to cure disease and maintain health and strength. This letter gives some idea of what perfect control Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills exert over the most common ills of life.

Mrs. H. K. Hewer, farmer's wife, Easthurg, Alta., writes: "For about ten years I suffered from constipation, indigestion, headache and languid feelings. Treatment from two or three doctors afforded only temporary relief, so I turned to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and with most satisfactory results. Headaches have disappeared, regular habits established and general health very much better. Both my husband and I can speak highly of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver pills, as we have both been greatly benefited by them." MANIAC HOLDS STEEPLE.

Murderer In Hungarian Village Has Already Slain Four.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, June 7.—A mad murderer, August Tomsics, has since Friday morning made an impregnable fortress out of the steeple of the village church at Hoeflany, where, armed with a repeating rifle and 500 cartridges, he took refuge after killing a farmer and his wife and wounding their daughter. Police tried to reach the criminal, but were met with a fusillade, which killed two and wounded fourteen others.

A large force of police surrounded the church Saturday, but their commander confessed that he was helpless until Tomsics decided to surrender voluntarily or used up all his ammunition. A narrow stairway is the only approach to the steeple, and whenever anybody has attempted to ascend it Tomsics has been able to force him quickly to descend again. In the course of Friday he fired 200 out of his 500 cartridges, and, besides killing and wounding a large number of people, destroyed the altar and some pictures in the church.

AWARD TO NURSE.

Court Recognizes Service of Attendant on Old Man.

STRATFORD, June 6.—An interesting case from St. Mary's was heard before his honor Judge Barron in the Surrogate Court yesterday, in which a verdict of $3,540, with costs, was given the plaintiff, Jessie Moody, against John Hyslop, executor of the estate of Philip Hyslop of St. Mary's.

The deceased was an old bachelor, and the plaintiff was his housekeeper, nurse and attendant for three years and two and a half months at the end of his life. He left an estate of $35,000 in property. The plaintiff claims he promised her a mortgage for $4,000, but she was not included in the will. Her claim could not be established in law and therefore she sued for services rendered, the judge awarding her $3,540 and costs.

PLAYED WITH POWDER.

Two Tyendinaga Boys Are Killed In Explosion.

BELLEVILLE, June 8—Two boys, James Thompson, aged 16, and Jos. O'Connor, aged 13 years, who resided with their parents in Tyendinaga Township, were on Friday night the victims of an accident which caused their death.

The lads, while walking along the newly-constructed C. P. R. track, discovered a keg which contained a quantity of black powder. They filled their pockets with the powder, and after walking a short distance made an effort to blow up a stump by placing a quantity of the powder beneath it. An explosion occurred and the powder in the boys' pockets became ignited.

O'Connor was frightfully injured and died almost immediately. Thompson, who was terribly burned and lacerated, lived until an early hour Saturday morning.

An inquest will be held.

Charged With Conveying Drugs.

LONDON, June 8.—For conveying to Holloway Jail letters and drugs to the militant suffragette, Grace Roe, a summons was issued Saturday at the instance of the public prosecutor, against Arthur Barnett, clerk to Mr. Marshall, secretary for the Women's Social and Political Union. The case has evoked much interest in view of the charges brought by Mrs. Mildred Elk Mansell, one of the organizers of the militant society who declared on June 2 that the militant suffragettes were being drugged in order that they might be forcibly fed.

Grace Roe was one of the women arrested on May 21 during a police raid on a west end flat, and later charged with conspiracy. She is now awaiting trial.

FIRE LOSS IS $300,000.

Powassan, Ont., Loses Twenty-Five Buildings In Blaze.

NORTH BAY, June 8.—The thriving little town of Powassan, situated on the G.T.R. twenty miles south of North Bay, received a heavy blow yesterday morning in a disastrous fire which wiped out twenty-five buildings, including some fine business buildings and residences.

The loss is estimated at about $300,000, with insurance of about half the loss. A quantity of pulpwood and bark were also destroyed.

The fire broke out in the cellar of the Queen's Hotel at two o'clock yesterday morning, and spread with great rapidity, assuming such threatening proportions that the local brigade was unable to cope with it, and assistance was summoned from North Bay.

Two Perish In Fort George.

FORT GEORGE, B.C., June 8.—Two persons were killed in a fire which destroyed the Palace Hotel, South Fort George on Friday. The dead are: Bert Moody, G.T.R. timekeeper; — Sokiewski, bridge worker. The loss was $30,000.

To Champion French.

OTTAWA, June 8. — Napoleon Champagne, M.P.P. for East Ottawa, and again Conservative candidate in that riding, in an interview with a local French paper expresses his intention of opposing the famous bilingual regulation, 17, and opposing everything derogatory to the interest of Catholic French-Canadians. He declares that if the Opposition proposes a vote of censure on the Government for the way it has dealt with the school question, he will vote for it.

Makes Wrinkles Go "As If By Magic"

Want to banish every wrinkle — from face, neck, hands—easily, quickly, completely? Try the famous saxolite formula. Nothing else so nearly meets every requirement. Why? Because it is correct in principle and really truly assists Nature. Possessing remarkable astringent and tonic properties, it both tightens the skin—thus naturally smoothing out the lines—and improves capillary circulation and nerve tone — tending to strengthen loose tissue and bring about a healthy condition. Yet, powerful as the saxolite lotion is, it won't harm your skin the least. And it's so easy to get the inexpensive ingredients at your druggist's, and so easy to mix them.

Just dissolve 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pint witch hazel — that's all. Bathe your face in this — immediately every wrinkle and crease is affected, even the deepest. You are perfectly astonished, and delighted, with the result. You look like you've lost years from your age!

WAITING FOR INQUIRY.

Developments In Empress of Ireland Disaster Cease for a Time.

MONTREAL, June 6.—No further developments in connection with the disaster to the Empress of Ireland have come to light within the past twenty-four hours. The public has settled down to await with patience the official investigation that is to be begun on June 16 with Lord Mersey as chairman of the commission of enquiry, though individuals continue to discuss the divergent statements about the shipwreck made by Captain Kendall of the Empress and Captain Andersen of the Storstad.

Some of the sympathy that was spent on Captain Kendall at the outset has since been diverted to Captain Andersen and the latter has many supporters here.

Tries To Recall Case.

OTTAWA, June 6.—William Theburn (North Lanark) made an unsuccessful effort yesterday morning to have the Vineberg divorce case referred back to the private bills committee for further consideration. Premier Borden declared that the case illustrated the inadequacy of the present proceedings for divorce. If the question was to be considered by the judicial decision of the committee, all members of that committee should have an opportunity of hearing witnesses. Some legislation should be devised whereby a better way than the present could be found.

W. A. ANDERSON IS THE LIBERAL STANDARD BEARER IN THE EAST

Reeve of Otonabee and Son of the Late Wm. Anderson, M.P.P., is the Choice at a Most Enthusiastic and Harmonious Convention.

A STRONG TEMPERANCE MAN

Surrounded by a more favourable atmosphere than ever greeted a similar event before, championing a new cause, and permeated with a new motif, the Liberals of East Peterborough nominated Mr. Wm. A. Anderson, Reeve of Otonabee as their candidate to contest the riding in the coming election, and launched their campaign in support of him Saturday in Norwood. The convention, held in the afternoon, was solid for Mr. Anderson and Mr. Rowell's policy of advanced temperance legislation, and was marked by an enthusiasm that only the introduction into the fight of high moral purpose could have brought about.

The Candidate.

Two men were nominated for the position of Liberal candidate in the approaching election. Mr. Wm. A. Anderson was nominated by Mr. John Hull of Lakefield, and his nomination was seconded by Mr. O. Primrose of Havelock. Mr. J. C. Darling, Reeve of Dummer, was nominated by Mr. David Barrie and seconded by Mr. Buck. When the ballots were counted Mr. Anderson was declared the candidate, and on the motion of the opposing aspirant for the position, his nomination was made unanimous by the convention.

The Convention.

The convention was an unusually large one, and even for a political gathering was wildly enthusiastic. Every polling sub-division in East Peterborough, with the exception of Anstruther, was largely represented, and the candidate and Mr. Rowell's entire policy were enthusiastically endorsed by every delegate. The underlying characteristic of the convention was determination, which was the result of the freely expressed feeling of the delegates that the struggle they were making was a worthy one in the interests of every person in the province of Ontario, and the leader they were supporting was a man who had accepted his position at great personal sacrifice, placing before all else his duty for the social, moral and industrial benefit of the people of the province.

Endorsed Letter.

Dr. Munro of Warsaw, President of the East Peterborough Liberal Association, presided, and handled the convention in an able manner. A letter was read from the County Temperance Association, stating their position in regard to the coming elections, and their determination to support the candidate who favoured the most advanced temperance legislation. The letter was given a cordial reception and was heartily endorsed, in marked contrast to the brazen snub which was given the same letter and a temperance delegation at a Conservative convention held only a few days previously.

The Nominee Speaks.

After the ballots had been counted and Mr. Anderson had been declared elected, the other nominee, Mr. Darling, moved to the front of the platform and moved to make the nomination a unanimous one. "I call upon every delegate here who supported me," he said, "to fall in line and do everything in his power to ensure the election of Mr. Anderson."

Mr. Anderson, the chosen candidate, when he stepped forward to speak, was cheered loudly by the convention. In brief terms he thanked the delegates for the nomination, and remarked that it was only the temperance question that had influenced him to accept the position and honour which had been conferred upon him. He had understood that he was to lead the fight in East Peterborough, only in case no other candidate was available, and there was not a man there at his instance. "Real work," he said, "during the next three weeks is the only thing that will bring results. When I was visited three weeks ago and asked to let my name be put forward to this convention, I thought the matter over and I felt so in regard to the Rowell policy that I could not say 'No.' The triumph of the temperance forces may be a long way off, and our chances may be better a few years hence, but there is no other time to act in this matter like the present. We must act and work now to insure such a triumph. "I have never preached temperance from the platform, but every day of my life I have practiced it." There was one advantage that the temperance forces had, and that was the absence of the three-fifths handicap. Mr. Thompson had had six years to show his stand in regard to that issue, which was plenty of time. The speaker endorsed Mr. Rowell's policy to the full. "Thanking you for your support," he concluded, "and expecting a greater support in the future, I will close for the present."

What Candidates Say Of Abolish-The-Bar

Mr. Gillespie and Mr. Anderson Make Unqualified Statements---Mr. Soden and Mr. Thompson Requested Time Before Answering County Temperance Association

On Saturday morning, the members of the Executive committee of the Citizens' Temperance League and officers of the County Temperance Association waited in turn on Mr. R. J. Soden and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, candidates respectively of the Conservative and Liberal parties in West Peterborough for the Ontario Legislature and on behalf of both organizations asked both candidates the following questions:

"Are you in favour of the abolition of the three-fifths handicap?

"Will you vote with either political party for its abolition and favour a straight majority vote on every possible occasion in the Legislature?

"Will you vote with either political party on every possible occasion for "(a) The abolition of the open bar?

"(b) Club licenses?

"(c)—Shop licenses?

"d) And all other legislation looking for the restriction and abolition of the liquor traffic?"

On Friday, anticipating that Mr. Gillespie would receive the Liberal nomination that evening, a copy of the foregoing questions was shown both to him and to Mr. Soden in order that they might be prepared to make their stand known when called upon by the deputation which they were advised would call upon them for their decision on Saturday morning.

When seen on Saturday morning Mr. Soden, as the candidate of the Conservative party, declined to give a direct answer to any of the questions. Instead he furnished the deputation with the following signed statement:

Peterborough, June 6th, 1914.

"Gentlemen.— "There has been entered into the politics of the Province of Ontario a question which is not a political question, but which has been used as a football between political parties too long. It concerns the man and his conscience.

"While I admit that the Conservative party has given to the Province of Ontario during their term of office more permanent temperance legislation than has been given by any previous Government, yet I personally believe in the abolition of the bar and the shop and the club license, and will allow no person to dictate to me as to how I shall vote on these matters."

(Signed.)

R. J. Soden.

Mr. Gillespie's Stand.

Mr. Gillespie, as the candidate of the Liberal party, furnished a signed statement in which he answered all six questions in the affirmative. In addition he promised to give the cause of temperance his unqualified support.

Mr. Gillespie was led to go beyond the policy of his party leader in the matter of the abolition of shop licenses by the fact that a substantial majority in favour of the abolition of all liquor licenses, including shop licenses, has twice been recorded at the polls in the City of Peterborough, and because shop licenses are the means by which liquor is supplied to the surrounding country districts.

Since the foregoing statements were issued Mr. Soden has requested that both temperance organizations delay their pronouncement in regard to the respective stands of the two candidates for 24 hours pending a reconsideration by him of his statement. The final pronouncement of both organizations has been delayed in accordance with this request. It will be published to-morrow (Tuesday.)

In East Peterborough the Conservative candidate, Mr. James Thompson, of Havelock, was seen for a few moments Saturday morning in Peterborough. He said that he would give his reply on Tuesday or Wednesday of this week.

Mr. W. A. Anderson, the Liberal candidate in East Peterborough, was waited upon by representatives of the County Association Saturday afternoon, immediately on the close of the Liberal nominating convention in Norwood. Mr. Anderson signed all six statements in the affirmative. He stated in the convention that he was a total abstainer and that nothing but the temperance issue would have led him to accept the Liberal nomination.

Signed.

H. B. Cowan, President. A. B. Cunningham, Acting Secretary

A CONDITION OF REAL HARDSHIP

The Examiner was waited upon this afternoon by three men out of employment, who stated facts that represent a condition of real hardship. They have been out of employment for months, being dropped from the roll of a local industry, because in the reduction of staff, unmarried men were laid off. They say that they have done everything possible to get employment. This morning they were three of twenty-nine men who applied without success at a local industry and at another there were fifty unsuccessful applicants for work.

The men are required to pay poll tax. They have no money, and in default of payment are threatened with prosecution, with costs added, that will swell the poll tax of two dollars to five; and in further default of payment they can, one supposes, be sent to jail. Jail is a place for criminals and not for unfortunate honest men. They do not object to paying the tax, one of the trio says he has paid poll tax for seven years and would be willing to pay it now if he had the money.

If the law takes its course, as Mr. Bumble says, "the law's a hass" to expect a man to pay $5 who can't pay $2.

This seems to be a case where the "clemency of the crown," as represented by the City Council, might be exercised, and some action taken in cases of deserving persons, whereby the tax might be temporarily remitted and a reasonable extension of time given.

A man that has paid poll tax for seven years, when he could pay it, is enough a fellow citizen to receive some consideration, especially as he deserves some patriotic consideration, being a veteran of the South African war; and another of the three mentioned is a veteran of the South African war and the Egyptian campaign. We pose as a Christian community and it does not seem necessary to practice Shylock methods—to exact our "pound of flesh" to fine or jail citizens who don't pay because they can't pay—to try to get blood out of a stone. See Shakespere's apostrophe to Mercy — Merchant of Venice, Act IV. Scene 1— "The quality of mercy is not strained, etc."

Condemned By Both Sides Of The House

Conservatives Join With Liberals In Condemnation of G. Howard Ferguson---Trent Canal Investigator's Amazing Revelations

OTTAWA, June 7.— "It is to the shame of our country that such a man remains in its public life," was the biting comment of Mr. Gauvreau to Parliament yesterday afternoon concerning Mr. G. Howard Ferguson of Grenville, who was recently confirmed in his seat in the Ontario Legislature by special legislation "jammed through' the Legislature in its memorable all-night sitting.

In an arraignment which has had no Parliamentary equal since Mr. F. B. Carvell unmasked Mr. A. B. Morine of a previous hunt-for-scandals Commission and caused his immediate retirement, Mr. Hugh Guthrie today exposed the character and conduct of Mr. Ferguson in his operations as "Royal Commissioner" to investigate irregularities in the administration of the Trent Canal.

"The whole conduct of the man," declared Mr. Guthrie, "appears to have been gravely reprehensible and imbued with distorted partisanship. His findings are largely both unwarranted and untrue, and, in many cases, are disproved by the evidence itself. He has submitted a strangely perverse report, a report apparently deliberately perverse and untruthful."

Mr. D. D. Mackenzie suggested that, under the circumstances, the Dominion should seek to get back all moneys paid to Mr. Ferguson for his alleged services as a "Royal Commissioner."

Support From Tories.

It was not Liberals alone who gave expression to criticism as Mr. Guthrie proceeded with his amazing revelations. Dealing with Mr. Ferguson's charges concerning William Hewitt, Superintendent at the Hawk Lake dam, Mr. Guthrie stated that all he had been able to learn concerning the man, showed him to be both honest and efficient.

"There is not better man," volunteered Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, "and none more honest."

"I believe that," commented Mr. Guthrie, who thereupon read from the Ferguson report its reflections upon Hewitt.

"That's humbug'," declared Colonel Sam warmly of one of Mr. Ferguson's "findings."

"Of course it is," agreed Mr. Guthrie. "I am in accord with the Minister. It is not only humbug, but it is untrue."

Indignant Conservatives.

One statement in the report brought the two Conservative members from Peterborough to their feet in indignant protest. Commissioner Ferguson commented severely upon what he alleged was a prevalent practice of buying expensive wines and viands and charging the high living to the Government. He fortified this general allegation by a specific instance of what he termed luxuriant and extravagant living, defining purchases made on a certain date. These viands, Mr. Guthrie produced affidavits to show, were purchased for the consumption of Mr. J. H. Burnham, member for West Peterborough; Mr. J. H. Sexsmith, member for East Peterborough, and Mayor Bradburn, upon an excursion of inspection by these gentlemen.

Considerably embarrassed and manifestly indignant, both Conservative members rose to interrupt.

"I didn't know we were getting anything on the Government," declared Mr. Sexsmith. "I didnt, anyway."

"I paid for everything I got," supplemented Mr. Burnham.

As Mr. Guthrie enumerated the items, members satirically questioned the Peterborough representatives. "What did you have?" queried Mr. A. K. Maclean. "How much did you consume?" echoed Mr. Gouvreau. Both Mr. Burnham and Mr. Sexsmith protested.

"You appreciate now how untrue much of it is," commented Hon. George P. Graham.

"Flagrantly Untruthful."

Mr. Guthrie at the outset said he had no desire to cover up any wrongdoing. There had been wrong-doing by Superintendent McClellan, and a wrong system seemed to have been in vogue throughout. But, instead of dealing with the merits of the situation, Commissioner Ferguson had apparently sought to twist everything to his own purpose, with the result that his report was flagranly untruthful and dishonest, and directly contradictory in many instances to the evidence and the facts. Mr. Guthrie commented severely on the practice followed by the Government in this and other cases of sending out to the Conservative press of alleged summaries of the report which were unfair and misleading, and given out "for the purpose of poisoning the public mind" prior to the presentation of the report to Parliament.

Evidence Ordered Out.

Startling disclosures were made by the member for South Wellington in the affidavits presented. It was shown that when evidence was adduce that "Commissioner" Ferguson did not want he had instructed the stenographer "not to take that down." In other cases he had refused certain testimony. Again, as in the case of wages paid to Miss A. Carr, a stenographer in the employ of the Peterborough Typewriting Company, he had declared that there was no such person, and that the name on the pay lists was a fictitious one. Mr. Guthrie read Miss Carr's affidavit to the House.

"Surely this Commissioner should be investigated," suggested Mr. A. K. Maclean of Halifax.

Witnesses Not Called.

"In the early pages of the report," said Mr. Guthrie, "Commissioner Ferguson found Superintendent McClellan 'dishonest and deceptive.' He says also that McClellan submitted

LOCAL MAN KILLED BY AN AUTOMOBILE IN BUFFALO

Motor Vehicle Collided With Milk Waggon Throwing Harry Sandiford, the Driver of the Waggon Twenty Feet Into the Air—He Died Later

AUTOPSY HELD

BUFFALO, June 8 — Harry Sandiford of Peterborough was killed and four persons were injured at 5.30 o'clock Saturday morning, when an automobile crashed into a milk waggon at Main street and West Oakwood place. The waggon was wrecked, as was the automobile. The horse attached to the milk waggon was not hurt. Sandiford's skull was fractured, and he was taken to the Sisters' Hospital, where he died at 5 o'clock. He boarded at 77 Wecker Street, and was to have been married soon.

Auto Travelling Slowly.

Ebsary's automobile, driven by a chauffeuur named Whalen, was travelling at a moderate rate of speed south in Main Street, it is reported. At West Oakwood Place, Whalen claims that a milk waggon turned directly in front of the machine. Whalen says he attempted to turn into the car tracks, but his efforts to avoid an accident were of no avail.

The milk waggon was overturned and Sandiford was thrown 20 feet into the air. He slid along the pavement and when picked up was unconscious. The occupants of the car were thrown to the street, but were not seriously injured. Sandiford was hurried to the Sisters' Hospital, but surgeons there could do little for him and he died two hours later.

Chauffeur is Held.

Captain Collins and Dr. Cook were on the scene a half hour after the accident and Dr. Cook ordered Whalen held. He will probably be held until after an inquest is held. Medical Examiner Geo. B. Stocker and Dr. Cook will hold an autopsis on Sandiford's body to-day.

Mr. Ebsary and the two women were attended by a physician and were removed to their homes. They were only slightly cut and bruised.

Sandiford came here from England a few months ago. He had worked for the Queen City Milk Company only ten days.

An inquest will be held before Judge George L. Hager in City court Friday afternoon, June 12, at 2.30 o'clock. Whalen is being held on an open charge and at the request of Assistant District Attorney Clifford McLaughlin, Judge Hager placed his bail at $3000.

The deceased young man was 25 years old. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Sandiford of Browntown. He was born in England but came to Canada seven years ago. A few months ago he went to Chicago and from there to Buffalo, where he obtained employment with the Queen City Milk Company.

News of the accident was received by the deceased's parents, on Saturday morning, and came as a great shock to all. Besides a sorrowing mother and father he leaves three brothers, Charles and Oliver in England, and Richard, in Toronto, and four sisters, namely, Mrs. W. McLaren, Chamberlain street; Mrs. W. Yates, Cottesmore Avenue, Mrs. C. Frances, Monaghan Road; and Miss Fannie Sandiford, at home.

The body is expected to arrive in the City some time to-day, and that being the case, the funeral, under the auspices of the A. O. F., of which Order the late Mr. Sandiford was a member, will be held to-morrow afternoon, at 2.30 p.m., to the Little Lake cemetery, from the family residence.

Deceased was well known in Peterborough and will be missed by many.

CONFERENCE TAKES STAND

Hamilton Methods Favour the Supporting of Most Advanced Temperance Legislation

AFTER LENGTHY DEBATE

Special Wire to The Examiner:

ST. CATHARINES, ONT., June 8. —For several hours to-day the Hamilton Methodist Conference here wrestled with the temperance question, and after much debate pro and con, a resolution was passed in favours of advocating the election to the Provincial Legislature of those candidates who will support the most advanced temperance legislation.

"The Clock Has Struck This is the Hour to Act"

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 7.—"The clock has struck. This is the hour." Nothing better than this powerfully dramatic and yet deeply sincere declaration of Mr. Rowell in his Massey Hall speech could be found to symbolize the importance and unique urgency of the present Provincial campaign. Ontario politics have suddenly found themselves at an acute crisis and at a period of rushing activity which could not have been predicted even a few weeks ago.

The talk of the town still centres on the amazing enthusiasm shown towards Mr. Rowell at his Massey Hall meeting, not only by the Liberals, but also by the numerous groups of Conservatives who were present and also, most significant of all, by the hundreds of women who crowded the galleries and the platform.

If Mr. Rowell speaks with such effectiveness everywhere he goes throughout the Province during the campaign, and there is no reason to doubt that he will, the Government will be in danger not only of losing a large number of seats, (that is conceded already), but of being annihilated under an avalanche of non-partisan enthusiasm.

Party lines are melting away before one eyes in an unparalleled manner. The organized forces of Christianity are evidently aware that they are at close grips, closer than they ever were before, with the organized liquor forces — and the Christian forces are determined to win. In this determination the question of whether a man is Liberal or Conservative seems of small moment. "Help Rowell for he has helped us" is the slogan.

REV. W. M. TURNBULL WILL SPEAK AT THE TABERNACLE

Rev. W. M. Turnbull, formerly of Peterborough, will speak in Bethany Tabernacle to-morrow night at 8 o'clock.

Since leaving Peterborough Mr. Turnbull has spent several years in India. He has recently been appointed principal of the Wilson Memorial Academy at Nyack, N.Y. His many friends will no doubt be glad to hear him again.

NO ACTION IS EXPECTED IN MINING MATTER

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 8.—P. P. Stevens, of Vancouver, this morning introduced a bill for the more stringent regulation of Asiatic immigration. The bill received its first reading, but it is doubtful if it will go any further this session, the Prime Minister showing little inclination at this late period to proceed any further with a measure which involves important consideration.

NEW BRUNSWICK COAST SWEPT BY DISASTROUS STORM

MONDAY, JUNE 8, 1914

MR. ANDERSON, CANDIDATE.

Mr. W. A. Anderson, reeve of Otonabee, has been chosen unanimously by the Liberals of East Peterborough as their candidate. At the nomination only one other name was put forward, that of Mr. C. J. Darling, of Dummer. The vote went in favour of Mr. Anderson, and on motion of Mr. Darling it was enthusiastically made unanimous. A good selection has been made, politically and personally. Mr. Anderson heartily exponses the cause of temperance as implied in the proposal to abolish the bar. Personally, he is a life-long total abstainer, and as a man is well qualified to make a good representative. He has had five years' experience in municipal life, and has a very effective quiet energy of character, good business ability, and the saving grace of common sense to make him a good member. He is the son of his father, the late Fm Anderson, who for twenty years continuously represented Otonabee in the County Council. In this regard he has followed in his father's steps and there is a good prospect of his succeeding him as representative of East Peterborough in the Ontario Legislature. In private life Mr. Anderson has a name beyond reproval, and in a public capacity has given such good service, and so well held the confidence of his native township that his election would be no surprise. He has been faithful in comparatively small things and can with safety be intrusted with a higher responsibility

THE PARTY OF TEMPERANCE

As Mr Rowell, the Liberal leader, has made the Temperance question the dominant issue in this election contest, and though the issue subordinates party affiliations to the interest of the success of a great principle, there is a strong disposition to claim both parties as the best friend of temperance. Mr Hanna, the real premier of the province — for Sir James Whitney is merely lending his name—claims that his Government has done more for temperance, by way of legislation, though he refuses to make any large advance in conformity with demands of public sentiment. An article reprinted upon this page to-day, disposes of such a claim very effectively. But a little local evidence will appeal, perhaps, more strongly to local interest.

In 1870, when the Crooks Act, a Liberal measure, was passed, there were twenty or twenty-two hotels or groggeries on Hunter street, from the bridge, on the east, to the Midland Railway tracks, on the west, not be speak of others in other parts of the town. The Crooks Act wiped most of them out, and further reduction has subsequently been made and now, in the same area there are only three licensed bars. Local option is another measure of bar abolition passed by a Liberal Government. This measure has been effective in wiping out 1165 bars, and the number wiped out by local option would have been 1573 greater if the Whitney Government had not passed the three-fifths' clause which has operated in the interests of the liquor traffic by retaining 1513 bars that would have been closed had the British principle of the majority vote been allowed to prevail.

The younger generation don't remember the conditions that prevailed before the Crooks Act came in force, and don't therefore, realise to whom we chiefly owe the great reduction of licenses that has been effected.

But, while the question involved is a political question it is not a party question in the highest sense, it is a great moral question, and the point for the electors to solve is which of the two candidates is entitled his support in order to give the advanced step in reform, represented by the proposal to abolish the bar. That represents sweeping license reduction, in excess of that produced by all surface legal enactments that have prevailed.

CANADA'S CONSTRUCTION CAPACITY.

Hon. Winston Churchill and Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden insist that Canada can't build ships. We have magnificent concrete examples in disproof of this, in the newly embarked "Noronic' and her sisters in the Northern Navigation Company's fleet, the splendid and unsurpassed lake freighters, and the great government dredge recently launched, all built in Canadian ship-yards, of Canadian materials and by Canadian workmen. It is surprising that Mr. Borden should be guilty of such a patriotic heresy when he sees what a little handful of Canadians have done in other directions. She has done something in other lines of jransportation enterprise that has no parallel in any other country in any part of the globe. Not to speak of the many millions Canada has spent upon one of the most magnificent canal systems in the world, Canada has done great things in railway buildings and operation. The Monetary Times in an elaborate article on "Canada's Railway Debt of Billion Dollars," has this introductory paragraph:

For all kinds of railway facilities, public or privately owned, and ranging from the track, somewhat carelessly slapped down upon the prairies, to the carefully constructed National Transcontinental, Canada Canada has piled up a railway debt of 13369 million dollars.

This enormous expenditure, representing $182 from every man, woman and child of our present population, is spoken of as a debt; but it is rather an investment that will work out as we develop into a justification of the splendid optimism of our public men and the enterprise of our private citizens. As far as financial assumption of responsibility goes, Canada has spent in building railways enough to build a hundred Dreadnoughts, and if she had begun and pursued shipbuilding as early and as enterprisingly and industriously as she has done the building of railways and canals, she would now be nearly as capable as the mother country; and if she, under patriotic statesmanship should now begin building ships of war she would speedily be able to build whatever we need. "Canada can't" is a slanderous slogan.

The Hon. W. J. Hanna The Real Premier And Temperance

Whatever may be done to keep the name of Sir James Whitney before the people of Ontario as leader of the Conservative party until after the election, the indisputable fact remains that the Hon. W. J. Hanna is already the de facto head of the party. The choice of the electors must be a choice between Rowell and Hanna. The attitude of the Provincial Secretary, therefore, toward the temperance question is of more than passing importance. His recent speech in the Legislature, which has been sent out to clergymen and moral reformers throughout Ontario with the false statement on the cover, made to obtain free postage, that it was printed by order of the Legislative Assembly, puts the case in the best possible light for Mr. Hanna.

Writing of the speech a Presbyterian clergyman in Northern Ontario says:

"Some time ago I received a pamphlet entitled 'Temperance, and What the Whitney Government is Doing to Ensure It.' Since then I have seen in your editorial columns two or three references to this pamphlet. It seems that there has been some irregularity about the mailing of the production, that the Minister has taken some undue advantage of his position of power to print and circulate party literature at the public expense. This, of course, is quite blameworthy. But what I am anxious to get at is an answer to the statements made in the pamphlet. What was the legislation of 1907 that 'was intended to be, and no doubt was, of a helpful character'? Is it true that during the years 1900 to 1904 inclusive there was no legislation in any way touching the evils attending the trade? If it is not true, what was the legislation? Is the statement given in the pamphlet about legislation during the years 1905 to 1913—is the statement true? Or is it, if not untrue, distorted in any way, or put in such a way as to lead to false inference? Is there an answer to the statements made by Mr. Hanna, an answer which a fair-minded man would accept?"

In his speech Mr. Hanna enumerated the changes made in the license laws year by year since 1905. Some of them are important and have greatly improved the machinery for the submission of local option and the prevention of illicit sale. The most important of all was made in 1906, when the Legislature passed a law making it compulsory for municipal Councils to submit local option by-laws on a petition of twenty-five per cent. of the municipality. Formerly the Councils might or might not submit by-laws on petition—the ultimate power resting with their members. In the same year in which this change for the better was made another "reform" which Mr. Hanna deliberately suppresses from the record—on page four of his speech—was put through. Of that change Mr. Rowell in his reply to Mr. Hanna in the Legislature said:

"One would think, the way my honourable friend and those who have followed him talk, that progress was to be measured by the number of amendments made. We have been told repeatedly from the Government side of the House: 'Why look what a wonderful Government this is: 'It has passed over forty amendments to the liquor license law!' Progress is not measured that way; it is measured by the importance of the amendments made; and in my judgment the most important and valuable amendment made to the liquor license law by my honourable friend is the amendment making compulsory the submission of a local option vote when petitioned for by twenty-five per cent. of the electors. But that amendment was no part of the policy of my honourable friends when they went to the country in the year 1905, but it was part of the policy of their Liberal opponents, and embodied in the platform adopted by the Liberal convention in December, 1904. The Liberals did not have the opportunity to put it into effect, but the present Government was wist enough to adopt this portion of its opponents' policy and give effect to it.

"But at the very time the Government passed this beneficial amendment it gave back to the liquor interests more than it took from them by imposing the three-fifths handicap. There are, I believe, above three hundred licensed places selling liquor to-day which would have been wiped out but for this three-fifths handicap. The liquor interest can afford to have two score minor amendments passed, so long as they retain that barrier to progress, the three-fifths requirement, which insures to them the keeping open of hundreds of places for the sale of the liquors they produce."

That gives in a few sentences the real record of Mr .Hanna regarding temperance reform. Mr. Rowell further pointed out that the Liberal policy was to revise the License Act periodically, and that by dating his "no amendments" period from 1898 to 1904 Mr. Hanna had deliberately ignored this fact. Had he gone back another year he would have been forced to admit that in 1897 alone more radical and progressive amendments to the license law had been passed (under a Liberal government) than during the whole term of the Whitney Government. Among them were the abolition of saloon as distinguished from hotel licenses; the reduction of the ratio of licenses to population from four for the first thousand to three with one additional for each additional six hundred instead of four hundred; all hotels in townships, villages, and unorganized territory to close at 10 o'clock and at 11 in cities and towns Before 1897 there were no fixed hours for closing hotels in thirty-seven out of ninety-seven license districts in the Province, and in these cases hotels were often open all night. The prohibition of sales of liquor to all persons under twenty-one. No licenses could be granted to premises within three hundred yards of a church, school, university, or other educational institution. Provision was made for preventing the issue of licenses in residential districts. Licenses were forfeited for three several convictions on different days within two years, and the licensee disqualified from holding a license for three years.

It would be well if the clergymen and social reformers to whom copies of Mr. Hanna's speech have been sent to examine it in the light of the facts presented above. What do they think of the straightforwardness of a political leader who professes to present the temperance record of the Government in contrast with that of their predecessors, and who not only evades all mention of the Liberal amendments of the 1897 revision, but entirely suppresses the fact that he and his colleagues imposed the three-fifths handicap, which has kept open hundreds of bars in Ontario that would have been closed under the Liberal policy of majority rule? The clergymen of Ontario will not thank Mr. Hanna for his attempt to dupe them with a garbled record bearing an admittedly false statement on its cover.

OLD COUNTRY NEWS

ENGLAND.

After taking a census of night traffic, the Birmingham Corporation has decided not to run all-night trams. The profits of the tramways department for the past year allow of the payment of $224,856 in relief of the rates.

Two brothers, who had married two sisters, and had simultaneously assaulted them in the same house, were simultaneously sent to prison at Liverpool recently and the sisters were simultaneously granted separation orders.

Entering a chicken run at Walstead, near Hayward's Heath, Sussex, foxes killed 125 young chickens, 12 hens, and 19 ducks. Several of the dead birds were found in a wood half a mile away, where there was a litter of fox cubs. The damage is estimated at $80.

A boy at a Yarmouth elementary school approached the headmaster at a quarter to twelve, and asked if he could leave. He was asked to explain and said fourteen years ago, exactly at a quarter to twelve, he was born, and his father had said he could leave school the moment he was fourteen.

SCOTLAND.

At Plantation Quay, Glasgow, when the dock labourers were commencing work, a woman inquired for her husband. Upon hearing that he had passed the night in a model lodging house, she exclaimed, 'Has he come to that?' and jumped into the river. A docker named John Coutts dived into the water, seized the woman, and despite her struggles, succeeded in swimming with her to the rudder of the steamer Crown of Granada, to which he held until a boat rescued both from their perilous position.

At Linlithgow Thomas Fitzpatrick was fined for failing to send two of his children regularly to school. The defendant stated that he was unable to provide clothing and boots for his children, and the School Board did not assist him. It was stated that the accused had received $1,000 compensation from the United Collieries in April, 1912, and since December last was working, earning at the rate of $4.85 weekly. One of the magistrates said that when a man got $1,000 all at once it was bad for him to come back to living at a pound a week.

At Glasgow, Mary McGuire was sent to prison for thirty days for returning to Scotland after having been removed to the union in Strabane, Co. Tyrone, and applying for relief to the parish of Glasgow. The accused was 53 years of age and a hawker. She first became chargeable in 1884, and since then she had been no fewer than thirty-nine times chargeable as a pauper in Scotland. Though repeatedly sent back to Ireland and told she would be prosecuted if she returned to Scotland, she contrived to come back.

At a meeting of magistrates to consider applications for licenses for places of public amusements at Buckhaven and Methil, the Rev. T. R. McRorie (whom Greenockians will remember as having been assistant to Rev. Charles Jerdan, Sir Michael Street Church), representing the Kirkcaldy Presbytery, offered strong objections to Sunday picture shows. He said such entertainments were totally opposed to the best traditions of the Scottish people, and pointed out that last year only three towns allowed such shows—Lochgelly, Dalkeith, and Methil. Dalkeith magistrates had since decided to stop them. By a majority the court limited the licenses to six days.

To each of the widows whose husbands were drowned in the recent accident to a coastguard boat at the mouth of the River Ore, the first Lord of the Admiralty has sent $25 from the Whitelaw Reid Memorial Fund, which was instituted by the wife of the late United States ambassador. Miss Weston, of Plymouth, has also sent $25 from her emergency fund.

Judge Lush-Wilson, K.C., was continually interrupted by a woman litigant at Exeter County Court. Finally he said: Madame, I run the risk I know of criticisms from your sex when I say that they are the most troublesome people I have to deal with. Why cannot you women exercise the same amount of self-control in the witness box as men have to do?"

Douglas, Isle of Man, is to have a carnival and pageant extending from June 29 to July 11. A feature will be the illumination of the crescent of Douglas Bay with festoons containing thousands of electric lamps. Displays of aviation, golf tournaments, a world marthon race, regattas, fancy dress and decorative car parades, and bowling tournaments, will also be provided.

A Carrickfergus butcher a short time ago found in the stomach of a cow, which he had killed, a gold seal with a bloodstone bearing the initials "F.G.M."

P Keohane, a hero of the Terra Nova, of Antarctic fame, was married at Courtmacsherry, county Cork, to Miss Ivy O'Driscoll, daughter of the officer in charge of the local coastguard station.

Dublin corporation had under consideration two big schemes to provide better dwelings in the city, the estimated expenditure being more than $600,000. The need of open spaces and plenty of room for the children to play were urged and the reports in favor of the schemes were adopted.

The body of Denis Murphy, a well-known and popular horse trader and farmer of Macroom, was found in the Castle Demesne. Mr. Murphy, has been confined to bed for two days, but insisted on berring up and going into the castle grounds for a drink at a much frequented spring well. The gatekeeper found him stretched dead on the side of a hill, death being due to heart failure.

Wilson Lindsay of Ardstraw, recently found a pearl in the River Derg, and has sold it for $160. Numerous pearls have previously been found in the river, the prices realised usually running from 60c to $15 but it is about fifteen years since one of equal value to Mr. Lindsay's was discovered. The river runs from Lough Derg on an island in which St. Patrick's Purgatory is situated.

Ellen O'Neil, the infant child of Michael O'Neil, Mullahinch, Agharowey, was drowned under singular circumstances in a mill head there. At the inquest Elizabeth Hughes, thirteen, who was left to care for the child stated that the latter being restless, she took her out along the side of the mill head. While swinging the child to please it, the infant fell out of her shawl into the water, and all efforts at rescue failed.

A distressing accident took place at Brittas when Pipe-Major Somers, of the King's Own Scottish Borderers was killed on the Dublin and Blessington Steam Tramway line. The deceased was coming from Kilbride Camp to take part in a display in one of the Dublin theatres, having booked at Brittas. He ran to catch the tram, when his foot slipped, with the result that he fell between the engine and a wagon of sand. He was killed instantly.

In a lecture at Dublin Professor R. A. S. Macalister, of the National University, described Tara, the seat of the kings of Ireland, and traced the probable history of the site through its successive stages as a forest-clad ridge, a clearing used by agriculturists, corn land, a strategical base, a fortress, and the palace of the High-King of Grinn. A curious fact stated by him was that contrary to popular belief, the celebrated Lia Fail, or Stone of Destiny, is still at Tara, and not at Westminster.

A verdict of "accidental drowning" was returned at Waterford in the case of Michael Wallace, a young quay laborer, who was drowned in the Suir and whose body was not recovered until some time afterwards. One witness, a fellow workman, admitted it was five days later before he told deceased's sister of the drowning; but said that he got such a fright that he could not break the news. Two other laborers stated they were also in such a fright that they did not report the matter, one saving he could not break the news to a woman. All agreed that the deceased was sober, and said there had been no quarrel, and no compact between them not to tell anygody.

CHOICE RECIPES

GODDLED EGGS

Fill a pitcher with boiling water, drop into it an egg, let stand for five minutes or more until the egg is clear like jelly. Eggs served this way are extremely digestible.

ORANGE ALBUMEN

For a flagging breakfast appetite, try the following drink, which is very pleasant to the taste as well as being very nourishing. Take the juice of an orange squeezed into a large tumbler, add the well-beaten white of an egg, and sweeten to taste.

BANANA JELLY

One quart boiling water, two packages jelly (such as Sheriff's, McLaren's, etc.), and half-dozen bananas. Pour boiling water over the jelly powder and stir until it is dissolved. Put one layer of sliced bananas into a cold wet mould and pour enough of jelly liquid over to cover. Set away to cool. When firm enough to hold another layer of fruit in place, add another layer, and so on until liquid is used up. Chill and serve with or without whipped cream. It takes about five hours before it will be ready to serve.

DANDELION WINE

Three quarts dandelion flowers. Add one gallon of water, boil 20 minutes, strain, and to this liquid add three pounds granulated sugar, three lemons, one large orange, boil all 20 minutes. When lukewarm, add a Royal yeast cake, and put in an earthen crock and leave in a cool place for nine days. Strain again and bottle. As it is scarcely yet fermented, it is best not to cork for a few days, but tie a cloth over the mouths of the bottles. This is an excellent recipe.

THE NU PROOF READER.

(By Clifton S. Wady.)

The nu one, from a cubist joint,
Explained "Tis impolite to point"
And thus he read the proofs all day
And passed his style with large O K

He laughed the colons as a joke
And ev'ry semicolon broke
The piercing period he threw
And dashed the hyphens out of view

If quotes appeared he set his jaw
And scratched them with a panthers paw
"A change in talk the reader knows
The sense (if there be any) shows"

Fonetic spelling too he said
Declared the writer as wellbred
And spelt them Blo and Tho and Slo
To help the readers minds to gro

All day he slammed and slew and slashed
And thru the wet ink proof sheets splashed
And when the night came on apace
He washt hiz handz and wipt hiz face

The dawn again brot dutyz nu
And sharpning up his pencil blu
He once more helpless proof sheets grabbed
And evry punctuation stabbed

And thus it came to pass in time
He killed the stuff that makes this rime
It might have been a poem star
But now its "dead" as door nailz are

The Paradox of Parlow.

"Parlow is a most tiresome and incessant talker. He's really a mystery to me."

"How so?"

"I can't understand why, being such a bore, he never gets through."

God's Wonderful Power and Love

"Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? . . .

"Fear ye not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows."—Luke xii:6.

The ancients had the beautiful conception that the spheres were constantly revolving to the music of wonderful harmonies, which mortals could hear if their ears were not so dulled by the sordid cares of their earthly life. If we do not hear this wonderful music, however, do we get the joy and pleasure that we could if we would, from the songs of our bird visitors that now are arriving every day?

In the late winter, even the discordant note of the crow is a welcome sound, heralding as it does the approach of spring. Then, some morning when the snow is still on the ground and branches are bare, one hears the musical, gladsome song of the brave little song-sparrow. Next, always so welcome, comes the clear, cheery note of the best beloved of all our birds, the robin. Then, when fruit trees are blossoming one's heart is gladdened by the ringing, joyous sound of the oriole. This renewal of spring's joys is repeated year after year, and has been in the years gone by.

It is God's love and care that has given these birds the marvellous inexplicable, unerring instinct to go south for the winter months. It is His plan that has led and guided them over so many thousands of miles. Our gay merry bobolink has just come from Mexico by way of Utah. It is God's wisdom which has arranged the extraordinary route of the Golden Plover, from the bleak lands beyond the Arctic circle, by Canada, to Labrador, from which it takes a 600-mile flight over the ocean to South America, where even then it does not rest, until Patagonia is reached. Then, more wonderful still, it returns by an entirely different way through South America and the Mississipi Valley, back to their Arctic Circle,—16,000 miles in all.

These flights are acomplished at an average height of 1,600 miles, at an average rate of 80 miles a day.

God has given these birds such strength that after their wonderful ocean flights, these little voyagers are not exhausted, but fly many miles overland before alighting.

When we are discouraged and faint-hearted do our songsters suggest thoughts of hope and comfort for ourselves? If God has so planned the life of these little creatures, then how can we ever doubt that our lives are under His loving guidance and control?

"Fear ye not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."—I.H.N.

Didn't Seem Enough.

"My goodness, Pat," protested Mr. Skids, "the man was guilty! Why didn't you convict him?"

"Begorra," replied Pat, "hanging would have been too good for him."

Deserved Victor.

"Where's your little brother?"

"He hurt himself."

"How?"

"We were seeing who could lean out the window the farthest and he won."

"Jack asked me to marry him last week and I refused. Yesterday he telephoned him that I had changed my mind.

"What was the result?"

"He said he had changed his."

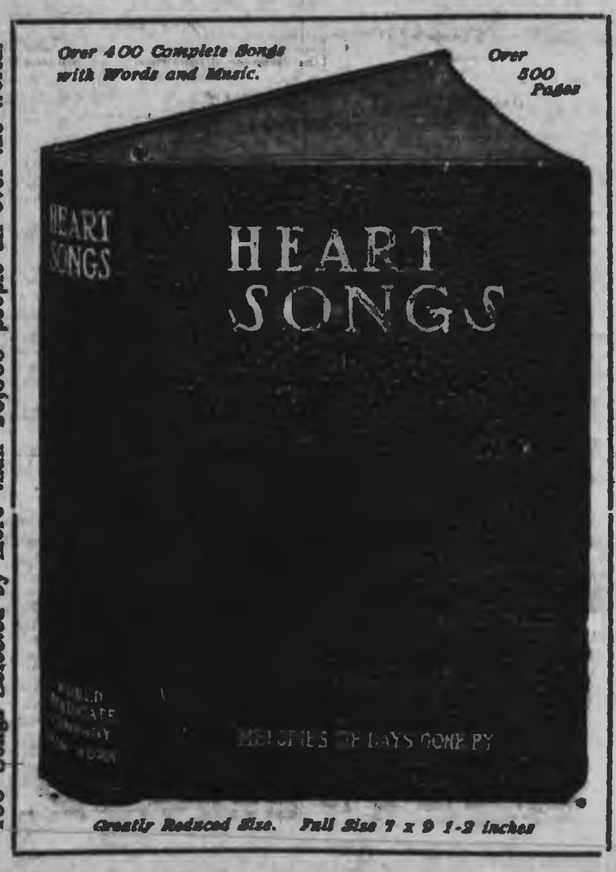
400 Songs Selected by more than 20,000 people all over the world.



Greatly Reduced Size. Full Size 7 x 9 1-2 inches

Many of these songs cannot be found in any other collection. They came in yellow, timeworn, tear-stained sheets—that had been sacredly treasured from childhood—others were written out from memory — some were given by titles only—or remembered verses, involving a long search to obtain the whole.

Of the thousands received it is safe to say that the several hundred finally selected — as having the largest number of votes and the highest indorsement — represent to-day the taste of the Canadian and American people in its choice of music.

We believe that the distribution of this unrivaled song collection will bring more happiness into the homes of this paper's readers; will do more to make them attractive to young and old; do more to inculcate a love for music; to soften, elevate and refine the home life; to cultivate the nobler and higher virtues of the fireside—than any other means that could be adopted.

IT IS GOD'S COUNTRY WHEREVER THERE IS A BAPTIST CHURCH

Said the Rev. C. G. Smith, of Belleville, Who Preached the Anniversary Services at Murray Street Baptist Church Yesterday.

HIS DISCOURSE

The anniversary services of the Murray Street Baptist Church were fittingly observed yesterday. The Choir rendered special music, appropriate to the occasion. The preacher was the Rev. C. G. Smith of Belleville, who, it will be remembered, gave a most positive denunciation of Winston Churchill's publication, "The Inside of the Cup," when he visited this City in March last.

On Sunday morning he took as his text the 25th verse of the 5th Chapter of Ephesians, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church and gave Himself for it."

In the course of his address, the preacher said: "A few years ago an American magazine undertook to describe what man thought of the Church, and the writer very wisely answered the pros and cons, and after the end of several months, printed the article. There is a greater question to consider, namely: what does Christ think of the Church. The answer is written in letters of gold, in the Ephesians. The letter of St. Paul to the Ephesians has been beautifully called "The Ethic Pearl of the New Testament." In this letter it soars from the depths of ruin to the height of redemption. In these six chapters there is a marvellous teaching. In the first chapter Paul tells us Christ has redeemed the Church by His blood. In the second it tells of Christ, "By Christ are ye saved by faith and not of ourselves." In the third chapter we are acquainted with the fact that the Church is to be world wide. In the fourth the unity of the Church is described: 'Till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God."

In the fifth the insolluble point and mystery is brought out, that Christ is the head of the Church. "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the Church, and He is the Saviour of the body. In the 6th Chapter he gives us the weapons: "Put on the whole armour of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." You must "find Ephesians" in order to know the reality of the Church. No child of God could not understand it. But what a contrast to the world's great literature. It is the masterpiece of the Church. We could have no more striking case than that of the poet Browning, who wrote "Sordello." It is hard to know whether Browning, himself, knew what he was writing about. One poet who read the work said he could not decipher whether Browning was writing about a book, a man, or a woman, and Tennyson said he could understand only two lines, the first, and the last, and they were wrong.

The ethic pearl of the Church says much about an organized body of Christians. Therefore, we join together this morning to worship Him. The Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ-our Lord. The charter member of the Church is Jesus Christ, as in the first chapter St. Paul said, "And gave Him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is His Body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." He is the only one who is good enough, and strong enough. Christ invented the Church, and on this rock His redeeming cross, His atoning love, is our Church built. He said "Upon this rock have I built my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. He is then, dear brethren, our Charter Member. He not only organized the Church; He loved it; and He gave Himself to it. This is the proof of His love. He joined Himself to the Church that He might live in the Church and for the Church. Therefore He died for it, and because it cost Him His life, He loves us so. He went down to the gates of death and we came back alone, until He rose triumphant and overcame death. "I mean ye by these things." [illegible] Church has a beautiful [illegible] known as taking the veil. [illegible] go out from the [illegible] seclusion and solitude. This is thought to be a beautiful thing, but I can tell you of a still more beautiful thing—taking the mantle of service. He hath redeemed us by His precious blood. Then you ask, "Should you join the Church." Do you love Jesus Christ? Have you surrendered your love for Him? Do you obey Him, and seek to follow Him? If you do, brethren, the Church is waiting for you. You love Christ. The Rev. Smith then gave ple. We love to obey and follow Christ. The Rev. Smnith then gave an incident where a noted editor, when speaking one night, related the following story: He and a friend were motoring through a country where the saloons, etc., were abundantly evident. Discontented with this scene he fell asleep. A short time afterwards his companion awakened him, ejaculating: "Wake up, we are coming into God's country, there is a Baptist Church over there. "Apart from all witticism," continued the Rev. Smith, "there is a truth underlying that statement. It is God's country wherever there is a Baptist Church. It is no easy thing, dear friends, to join the Baptist Church. What then is my relation to the members of the Church? We are one great brotherhood; the strong, who have the power, must aid the infirmities of the weak. This is our duty. Not to stand on some lofty pedestal and hand out judgment to the poor. And what is the creed of this Church we have joined? When you entered this Church this morning, there was placed in your hand a new Testament. It is the only creed. There is the Apostles' Creed, the Nicene Creed and the Creed of St. Athanasius, together with the thirty-nine articles, etc. There is not one of these creeds that you can inspect intoto.

But the New Testament is the Creed that is never behind the times. I hand this book to a man and leave it to his own private interpretation. And so, dear friends, is it no easy matter to join the Baptist Church. We must live our life by the will of God. I say it is a privilege and a beautiful thing. What is our work. It is to save souls and to build up the Church in her most holy things. We are a body of men and women who worship. In every service our supreme business is to speak a word for Jesus, and the best is yet to come. "Rise for the day is passing."

In the evening the Rev. Webb preached to the Foresters.

AN APPEAL FROM THE ARCHBISHOP

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., June 8.—Parliament reassambles to-morrow after the Whitsuntide holidays, and incidentally the Times to-day published a powerful letter from the Archbishop of York, the Right Reverend Archibald Lang, who is exceptionally popular, and whose views carry great weight, asking both parties to make a prayerful attempt to sittle the Irish question outside the realm of party politics and so preserve the peace and integrity of the British Empire. He says the exclusion of Ulster should be accompanied by a serious attempt to think out and present to the parliament a system of devolution of government in which Ireland should have first place in time, but not essentially exceptional. The country, he declares, expects Parliament to show a united and fixed determination to end the present menacing situation.

Sacred Heart T. A. S. At Church In Body

The members of the T.A.S. of the Sacred Heart Church attended holy communion in a body on Sunday morning at a special hour, 7.30. One hundred and forty members were present. In addressing the society, Rev. J. J. O'Brien made particular reference to the children, stating that the men had a duty to see that all the boys became members and remained in the society.

DELIGHTFUL MUSICAL RECITAL

At The Conservatory of Music

Another of those delightful, unpretentious musical evenings, for which the Conservatory of Music is so justly famed, was held on Saturday evening last.

Notwithstanding its being Saturday evening, the Hall of the Conservatory was very nearly filled with a thoroughly appreciative audience, the occasion being a recital given by the pupils of Miss Kilmaster, assisted by others. The result must have been highly pleasing to Miss Kilmaster, as it evidenced not only careful, painstaking teaching on her part, but also, an aptitude and well intentioned effort of the part of those to whom the talented teacher had imparted instruction.

The programme presented was as follows:

God Save the King

The whole affair was a decided success. Special mention may be made of the Messrs. Paul and Otto Gliddon, of Miss Mildred Tomlins, Miss Agnes Logan, Miss Chipman (of Toronto) and Miss Jean Hill. Miss Gwen Smith, who possesses a fine contralto voice of considerable range, was especially pleasing in her rendition of her second song, "My Treasure."

Miss Agnes Logan showed what she could do—and well too—in the way of execution, while her time was especially good; needless to say she was well and deservedly applauded. Miss Howell has a voice with clear ringing notes, especially in her upper register and her rendering of Arditis' well known song, "Il Bacio" (the Kiss) was most acceptable and evoked continued applause. A word may here be said eulogising Miss Pearl Ruth, whose execution was decidedly good.

Miss Chipman (of Toronto), more particularly in her second song, "Rose Rhyme," was heard to much advantage and afforded a large amount of pleasure to her audience. Miss Leary in her pianoforte solos, more especially the latter one, also showed great talent in sympathetic playing. This young lady was the recipient of a bouquet. Miss Jean Hill won great applause—and deservedly so—for her selection from Verdi's "Rigoletto." Miss Chipman ended the programme with a Morceau from "Mignon," excerpts from which charming opera are always acceptable to lovers of music. Not only the stars but the minor constellations, it will be seen, acquitted themselves well and after the singing of the National Anthem, "God Save the King," the audience filed out, one and all, expressing themselves as delighted with the really good programme which had been presented to them, the "Examiner" representative, who had been favoured with a special invitation, not being the least pleased among those present.

Cheaper To Buy Park Than Build sewer

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I am told that the sewer the city is duplicating on Water street, is for the purpose, more especially, of benefitting the property east of Harvey, and north of London streets, extending to the river. If that is the case, would it not have been more of a business transaction, if the city used the money necessary to pay for the sewer, and bought the land for a park and playgrounds. We then would have something for our money. Instead of that we have the street destroyed, and the residents annoyed by noise and dirt. I should think the land in question could be bought for what it will cost to construct the sewer, which, I understand, will be nearly $5,000.

BOARD OF TRADE WILL MEET ON TUESDAY NIGHT

There will be a general meeting of the Peterborough Board of Trade tomorrow evening in the Council Chamber. A number of matters of more than usual interest will come up for discussion and a full attendance of members is expected.

FINLANDER IN THE TOILS

The police this morning gathered in a Finlander, who landed in the city this morning, on a freight, which he had jumped.

He was wandering aimlessly about in the vicinity of the Police Station all morning, until he was at last lodged in one of the cells.

It is the general opinion that the man is mentally deficient.

He made a request for work, and Mr. Might, the local Immigration Agent, obtained a job for him. This, however, he refused to accept. He told the story that he had been working on the inland boats, and came here on a train. There were, he said, two of his own countrymen who followed him here, who wanted to chop his head off with an axe, and it almost looked as if he was seeking police protection.

When he was taken into the Police Station he began to cry pitifully, and while being searched he said: "Let me pray, let me pray."

He had only a dollar and a few cents on his person.

SAYS HE DID IT ON WAGER

Special Wire to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., June 8.—Harry Pike, the young engineer, who threw official circles into consternation by appearing in the neighbourhood of the royal bed chambers in Buckingham Palace in the early hours of the morning, was arraigned in police court this morning on an ordinary charge of trespass. He said he was not a criminal, merely did it to win a wager that he could get past the soldiers and guard. He was also slightly in liquor. He was remanded for a week. In the meantime searching investigation is going on to find out what guards were negligent.

No Blocade Of Tampico

Special Wire to The Examiner:

MEXICO CITY, Mexico, June 8.—The Hnerta government to-day decided to countermand an order for the blockade of Tampico to prevent the landing of arms there for the Constitutionalists. This action was taken on receipt of word from Niagara Falls that the United States would not permit a blockade and Admiral Mayo's fleet being greatly superior to that of Mexico, it would be useless for the Mexican gunboats to attempt it. Thise considerably eases the situation at Niagara Falls, where there was a possibility of a deadlock regarding it.

Sunday's Chorister Is A Regular Heart-Breaker

Mother of Plaintiff Tells of Young Man's Kisses

CHICAGO, June 4:—Frank Jay, a high school boy, was on the stand in the $50,000 heart balm suit of Georgia W. Jay against Homer Rodeheaver, choir leader for Rev. William A. Sunday, yesterday. The boy is a brother of Georgia Jay. His admiration for the "harmonious heartbreaker" caused him to turn into the paths that this same Homer designated as the paths of right living.

"At the time," he said on the stand, referring to a period up to and prior to 28th December, 1911, "I thought that Homer was the most wonderful man, mentally, spiritually and every other way, in the world. He was my ideal. I tried to live up to what I imagined he had been. Added to that, I had not had any religion before I met him, and he changed me by his eloquence and his singing."

"He changed Georgia, too, by his eloquence and singing.

Homer Offered Excuses.

"When he jilted her, and she went into fit after fit of terrible hysteria, our doctor prescribed for her and recommended sleeping powders. I had the prescription filled numberless times, and I bought so many sleeping powders that I was afraid the druggist would take me for a dope fiend."

Vigorous objections were made at this point by Rodeheaver's attorney, while "Harmonious Homer" looked grieved to think that sordid drugs should enter into his case. But Frank continued, his brows knitted in a disdainful manner, and a somewhat dangerous glare in his eyes.

"He offered excuses for not keeping his promise, and at the time I was so infatuated with him that I really believe I rather pitied him and agreed with him," he said. "It was not until later that the full extent of his cowardly pretending dawned upon me."

The "parted young couple," as Mr. Rodeheaver's attorney refers to Miss Jay and his client, sat opposite each other at the trial. Miss Jay shielded her face from the gazes of Rodeheaver, who was in a terrible mental state as to just where he could fix those large and soulful optics. Of the audience in the courtroom, all were men save three elderly women. Spectators were lined up against the walls five deep.

Mrs. Laura T. Jay was cross-examined by Attorney George Miller, representing Rodeheaver.

Mother Loses Singer.

"Have you any feeling of bitterness against Mr. Rodeheaver now, Mrs. Jay" asked Attorney Miller.

"I don't wish to answer that question. I don't think it's a fair question."

The Court ruled that the witness should answer.

"I have a feeling of love for him," said Mrs. Jay.

"Have you a feeling of hatred?" asked the cross-examining attorney.

"No, sir."

After having Mrs. Jay identify a letter as one written by her to Rodeheaver, Mr. Miller read it to the jury. Among the statements in it were the following:

Chicago, Feb. 18, 1912.

Dear Homer,—Don't you think that we have forgotten you. We wouldn't do anything in the world to hurt you.

God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform.

You got such a strange answer to your prayer to God to make it clear what you should do that we are making haste slowly in interpreting the answers to ours. A friend told us that if you prayed for all the girls that you have on your string, you must keep God pretty busy.

The letter goes on to tell of the remarks made by other friends, some of them not at all complimentary to Mr. Rodeheaver, one writing: "I could not have congratulated you on your engagement, but I congratulate you heartily on your disengagement."

"Experimented" on Girl.

The last paragraph of the letter follows:

"Watching with interest your 'career,' I shall remain the mother of the sweetest girl you ever experimented on.

"LAURA T. JAY."

Rodeheaver is alleged to have given his "career" as one of the reasons why he did not wish to marry Miss Jay.

"Did you feel bitter against Mr. Rodeheaver when you wrote that letter?" asked the attorney of Mrs. Jay.

"I must have."

"You have a feeling of bitterness against him now, haven't you, Mrs. Jay?"

"It hasn't been entirely eradicated."

"What did you see in regard to the relations of your daughter and Mr. Rodeheaver at your house during the spring and summer of 1911?" asked Attorney Heren, counsel for Miss Jay, of Mrs. Jay.

"Well, I saw him often kiss her; he put his arm around her; they sang and played together, and once I saw them in the kitchen, and he had his arm around her."

To make bead necklaces

A woman who has done considerable experimenting in making beads has found this method the most satisfactory and altogether reliable.

Take a cupful of hot salt, which has been heated in an agate pan, add one half a cupful of cornstarch and one-half of a cupful of cold water and enough mixed dye to get the desired colour, always remembering that when dried out the beads will be several shades lighter.

Take a pinch o the mixture and roll in the palm of the hand. When rounded nicely pierce through the centre with a pin and fasten to a table or board.

Let the beads remain on the pins for several hours to partially dry out; then remove the pins and put the beads in an agate pan; place the pan in a slow oven and bake until dry.

This quantity makes a strand of beads the size of a cherry, waist length.

A cool oven is also necessary else the beads will burst.

Alternating the beads with pearl or gold beads makes a pretty effect.

In threading the beads use dental floss if possible, as it is the most durable.

W. A. Anderson Is The Liberal Standard Bearer

Here a resolution commending the leading newspaper of Canada, the Toronto Globe, for excluding from its pages all liquor advertisements was unanimously passed on the motion of Messrs. Drummond and Elliot.

Mr. Armstrong, who represented the Dominion Alliance, was the next speaker. He was glad to see on the platform as Liberal candidate for East Peterborough, a man who could say, "I have never known the taste of liquor." No political party could ever exist and ignore the moral issues of the day. When they dealt with a moral question they dealt not with men and women, but with the Creator of men and women. He quoted instances from the history of the political parties in both Dominion and Provincial Houses, to prove that no political party could exist and ignore moral question. Some said that Mr. Rowell was leading a new party on new principles, but he maintained that Mr. Rowell was leading the old party, with the old name, on the old principles of Liberalism. The principle of Liberalism was that of the greatest good to the greatest number, and the abolish the bar policy of Mr. Rowell was merely the development of those underlying principles.

Mr. Kerr.

Mr. F. D. Kerr of Peterborough, was then called upon by the President. "Don't for a moment think," he said in the beginning, "that I am not personally, and with my whole heart, behind Mr. Rowell and his platform of advanced temperance legislation. In this matter Mr. Rowell has taken the same position as Abraham Lincoln did in regard to the slavery. He has seen the advance and the ravages of a great evil in the province and has said, "Give me the power and I'll strike it and strike it hard." Mr. Rowell was a man who with his straightforward personality would hookwink nobody, but a man who had the brains and statesmanship that made it impossible for anybody to hoodwink him. No abler man than Mr. Rowell had ever led the Liberal party of Ontario. None of the men in the public life of Canada to-day could compare with him in his devotion to duty, earnestness of purpose and sincerity.

Mr. Rowell's policy was very well expressed in the words of Lloyd-George, the English statesman, as follows:

"What we want is a teaching that will educate the conscience of the nation, so that it cannot tolerate a system of things where one man hungers so that another should feast; where one man is broken in health, will, spirit and heart on the wheels of toil so that another may spend his days in sloth and his nights in dissipation. What we want is a teaching that will be for the people in the days that are to come a pillar of fire in the gloom of the night to lead them to that land of promise where there shall be no oppression, no injustice, no war and where brotherhood shall reign."

This was the teaching that the leadership of Mr. N. W. Rowell was planting in the hearts of the younger men and that was invigorating and putting more life into the hearts of the older men. It was the duty of the electors of the country to see that there was placed upon the statute books of Ontario a solemn expression of opinion of the people of this country that the usefulness of the bar is gone forever.

The duty the people of East Peterborough owed was not to Mr. Anderson or not Mr. Rowell, but to themselves and to their neighbours. To their own and to their neighbours' children. Mr. Thompson, in supporting the three-fifths clause was helping to corrupt his own and his neighbours' sons and daughters. He was responsible for the ruin that was wrought when the young men of Norwood would leave the village, journey to some place where liquor could be had because of the three-fifths clause, and return to their native village in a drunken stupor, perhaps having done something that they never would have stooped to do if it were not for the ease with which they could get the liquor. In Peterborough local option had been carried twice by large majorities, but had been defeated because of the three-fifths clause. Was the Conservative honest who boasted that he prayed twice a day for the abolition of the bar and then voted to sustain the three-fifths clause.

Mr. Rowell had said that he stood for the uplift of the people, and would place the temperance question upon the conscience of the people. After the fight, if it was lost won his conscience would be clear at any rate, whether or not that could be the case with the electors of Ontario.

The Workmen's Compensation Act had not been put upon the books except through the continuous proddings of Mr. Rowell and his little band of 18 men.

The principle of Liberalism was to trust the judgment of the people. For the last ten years Mr. Kerr had known Mr. W. A. Anderson, who was carrying on his business in the village of Keene. The first time he met Mr. Anderson he liked him for his straightforward manner in speaking on the subject. He had made inquiries about the candidate and from every source came the involuntary statement that "Mr. W. A. Anderson was a white man from head to feet." Two men, Mr. Anderson in East Peterborough, and Mr. G. A. Gillespie in West Peterborough, whom no party could ever feel ashamed of, were leading the Liberals in their fight for reform in the two ridings of the county.

Mr. Jennings.

Mr. Jennings of Toronto, and secretary to Mr. Rowell, in opening, expressed his pleasure at having the privilege of addressing the convention. He had been connected with many leaders of the Liberal party in the capacity of secretary, and it was his opinion that never in his memory had the party as competent a leader as Mr. Rowell. Mr. Rowell stood for what was best in politics. He was not seeking political advancement, but occupying the position of leader of the Opposition at a financial sacrifice exceeding the amount of the Premier's salary. Mr. Rowell's ability as an orator was almost as great as that of the late Sir George Ross, and he was a man whose insight into the future was greater than any of the leaders who had previously led the Liberal party in Ontario.

Mr. Jennings emphasized the fact that elections were won only by hard work, and not by arm chair canvasses. They must go to each voter anew because they were to vote on a new question. "You can't sit down and fold your hands and win this election," he said. "You have placed Mr. Rowell in a position of great sacrifice and he has taken the boldest stand that has ever been taken by any political leader. Speaking in common phrase it is up to you to lend your suport and see that his stand is not taken in vain. "The election has come when it is not necessary, when it is unexpected, and is obviously unfair. But it will not be said that the Liberals of East Peterborough shirked their duty because of the difficulty of the task."

There was a new life in the Liberal cause that was nothing but the swing of victory. The Conservatives had refused to wait until the proper time for an election, but had sprung this approaching ballot at short notice so that the Liberals would not be able to properly organize for the contest. This was only an indication that the Conservatives themselves were well aware of the swing of victory.

Dr. McTavish.

Dr. McTavish, of Toronto, Field Secretary of the Dominion Alliance, spoke briefly. He remarked that never before in any election were there so many worthy candidates in the field. The man who were leading the Liberals of the various ridings were of a fine type.

Mr. H. B. Cowan.

Mr. H. B. Cowan was present, representing the County Temperance Association. He thought that in nominating Mr. Wm. A. Anderson, the Liberals had done all that could be wished to win the support of the County Temperance Association..

Those men who said that the temperance question was not a good political issue did not know what they were talking about. The temperance question was sweeping the country. All Nova Scotia was dry except Halifax; all Prince Edward Island, three-fourths of New Brunswick, and out of 900 municipalities in Quebec 800 were dry. In Ontario out of about 860 municipalities over 500 were dry, and another 120 would be dry except for the three-fifths clause. This was the first fight in which the leader of any party backed up by the members of his party, had made temperance a dominant issue. A great many of the Conservatives of Peterborough were throwing party feelings to the winds in order to stand behind the man who was advocating the abolition of the bar.

The Conservatives claimed that the temperance question should not be in politics. Last year Mr. Rowell asked Premier Whitney to introduce a bill for the abolition of the bar, promising to have his band of eighteen vote for the measure so that it would be a unanimous one. The answer was no and so the Conservatives had literally forced the question into politics themselves.. The Conservatives claimed credit for the Local Option law, but that was put on the statute books by the Liberal party, while on the other hand the present government had added the three-fifths clause, which was against the temperance forces. In 1897 the Liberal Government abolished all saloon licenses. The Conservative government never did anything half as radical as that in the cause of temperance.

Because Mr. Rowell was the type of man who put principle first, men were rallying to him from all over the country. So it should be with Mr. Anderson.

Rowell's Policy Endorsed.

At the close of Mr. Cowan's address, on the motion of Messrs. Curtis and Darling, a motion was unanimously passed endorsing the entire policy of Mr. Rowell. The convention closed with three cheers for the King, the candidate and Mr. Rowell.

The Evening Meeting.

A mass meeting that was attended by the members of both parties was held in the village hall in the evening, and the hall was crowded to the limit. The speakers were Mr. Jennings of Toronto, Mr. F. D. Kerr of Peterborough, Mr. McTavish of Toronto, and the candidate, Mr. Wm. Anderson of Otonabee.The meeting was presided over by Mr. Munro.

Dr. McTavish.

The first speaker was Dr. McTavish of Toronto, who first expressed his ish of Toronto, who first expressed his the meeting. The temperance question was not only in politics, he said, but it was now the largest question in politics. The speaker gave credit to Mr. Hanna for his prison reform, but if any man or government wanted to take the biggest step in prison reform it will be by settling the temperance question. The settling of the temperance question would go a long way to settling the questions of neglected children, of the educational problems and of many other questions that are occupying the mind of those in authority just now. If Mr. Rowell's policy carries, nine-tenths of Ontario will be entirely dry. There was not a decent Canadian that would go on the platform in defence of the liquor traffic.

For the last 120 years they had been trying to regulate the liquor traffic and the bar room business and all the time they had gone on with their deadly work. The liquor traffic could never be regulated in the future—the only other thing to do was to wipe it out.

Mr. Jennings.

A number of ladies present were given a welcome by Mr. Jennings, who said that he was glad to see them present because the Rowell cause of abolish-the-bar should meet with their hearty approval. "Why are we here?" asked the speaker; "because the Government is afraid, because the Opposition has a leader that has stamped himself upon the minds of the people. The Government had ordered an election now because they were afraid that in another year and a half the sweep of the tide would be complete.

The members of both parties had been glad to see Sir James Whitney restored to health, but those who were familiar with the situation knew that he could never again take over the reigns of office. The Hon. Mr. Hannah was the real leader of the Conservative Government. To compare the two leaders was almost an offence.

Mr. Rowell was a man whose public life was thoroughly in the open, who was making a tremendous sacrifice of thousands of dollars in the interests of the people of Ontario. The man who dared to question Mr. Rowell's sincerity was entirely wrong. In that very hall only a few nights before Mr. J. J. Hart, M. L. A., accused Mr. Rowell of having an interest in a Club license. This, said the speaker, was absolutely without foundation. The Government had to go about the country slandering a man in whose footsteps they were not worthy to follow.

On the other hand Mr. Hannah was the "Bob Rogers" of Ontario—a politician rather than a statesman. He had prostituted the authority of his office to serve special interests and to protect his friends in the liquor traffic.

On the one hand was a man honest and sincere, sacrificing himself to serve a great couse, and on the other a man who was in politics for what he could get out of it, and misapplying the power of his high office to protect the liquor traffic.

Liberalism stood for allowing the people to choose for themselves or the decentralization of power. But under the Whitney regime the greatest centralization of power ever known hitherto had been reached. The public revenues was [illegible] taken from the people for the purpose of administrating the Government. When Whitney boasted that the revenue had increased it was only another way of saying that he had succeeded in getting more money out of the people. During the Conservative regime the rate of expenditure per head of population, and in the way of schools, agricultural provision, etc., they were getting sixty per cent. less than ten years ago.

If Mr. Rowell were returned to power he intended to seek out the greatest educational and agricultural experts to be found and place them at the head of the respective departments and act upon their recommendations.

Conservatives claimed the credit for the local option law, but in reality it was a Liberal law. During the ten years they were in power the Conservatives had added the three-fifths' clause, which was against the temperance forces. He had taken two hours off the seventeen that a bar may remain open, and cut off two of the 312 days that a bar may do business. "I ask you," said the speaker. "If you can point to one single good thing that has come out of the bars, or one single good purpose they have served?"

Mr. W. A. Anderson.

After summing up Mr. Rowell's policy, said Mr. Anderson, he could not refuse to allow his name to go before the convention that had met that afternoon. He did not intend to go up and down the riding saying things against Mr. Thompson, for the latter must have many good points to receive the support of the intelligent voters of East Peterborough. But, as a follower, of Mr. Rowell, he asked the voters to cast their ballot in his favour on the temperance platform.

Mr. F. D. Kerr.

It was not right, said Mr. Kerr, to condemn the Liberal party for bringing the temperance question into politics. Mr. Rowell pledged himself in the House to support any Government measure for advanced temperance legislation, but Premier Whitney had declined to bring in any such measure. It was therefore the Conservative Government that had forced the temperance question into politics. It was not the politician that was on trial to-day, it was the people of Ontario who were being given a chance to show if they were sincere in their demand for temperance.

The speaker was watching with anxiety to see if the men who prayed loud and long for temperance and the abolition of the bar would vote for it. Did they mean what they said or were they only humbugging. If they could not bring themselves to vote for the temperance issue, then in duty to the Christianity which they pretended to represent let them also stop praying for it.

The man whom Sir James Whitney had called the Sunday School teacher in politims had brought the premier and his cohorts to their kneer, and they were bringing the election on one and a half years early to avoid the sweep of the tide.

"I respect the man who comes out openly," said Mr. Kerr. "And says 'I am in favour of the open bar as a place where your son and my sons can put their feet on the rail and their elbow on the counter and drink intoxicating beverages." I respect him if not for his judgment, at least for his frankness. But the man who tells me he cannot scent as alliance between the Whitney Government and the Liberal party—I can read neither intelligence or honesty in his attitude."

In conclusion he solicited the support of the audience for Mr. Wm. Anderson, who had come forward because he felt it was his duty to do so, and who was a splendid man to have at the front of the fight in East Peterborough.

The meeting closed with three cheers for the King, the candidate, and Mr. Rowell.

Presentation Of Medals Made

On Behalf of the Woman's Art Association of This City

The successful pupils have been made happy by the presentation of the medals and honourable mention cards for which the children of the different schools competed and which were given by the local branch of the Woman's Art Association.

There were sixty-three honourable mention cards and six medals awarded.

One of the medals, a special prize offered for the best rug design, was competed for by children from all the different schools.

The other five medals were competed for by the pupils of the different grades in the Public Schools.

Some of the work was particularly good and the local association is to be commended for their efforts to promote art in the schools of the City. The results have been very successful.

SELF-CONTROL THE PRICE OF HEALTH

To the Editor. .. ..

Sir,—I think every one would agree that it would be much better to be poor and have abounding health than to be rich and to be suffering from poor health. Good health is the heritage of almost every one, and yet it is appalling to see the number of doctors, drug stores and other means of combatting disease.

That simply spells ignorance in big letters for it shows that people seek relief in drugs rather than enquire into the cause of their discomfort, and seek to remove it. Any physician will tell you that the average patient will swallow any amount of nauseous drugs rather than submit to some regulation of diet. When I began the practice of my profession, over forty years ago, my thoughts were almost wholly given up to the cure of existing symptoms by medical means. That day is rapidly passing away with medical men and it must also do so with the people, if they are to develop and maintain this greatest blessing of life and put Canada in the place she ought to occupy among the nations.

I do not condemn the use of drugs when needed. At times their effect is very marvellous, but very, very often they are used when they are not needed, and intelligent people might easily cut their doctor's bill and druggist's bill in half by a little common sense and self-control, with the happiest results.

One of the principal causes of poor health is self-indulgence. Nearly all the common ailments of life are merely the outcry of nature against abuse in eating and drinking and the best remedy is to remove the cause. No man knows the full joy of living until he has proved himself to be complete master of himself in the matter of eating and drinking. But remember that self control is the price. Reason and common sense must take the reins and the reward will be healthier, happier and longer life.

Church Social Will Be Held on July 14

The date of the annual social in conection with the Church of the Sacred Heart, has been fixed for July 14. Arrangements have been under way for some time and it is expected that the success of former years will be duplicated. The congregation has shown signs of assisting the new pastor, Rev. J. J. O'Brien, in a hearty manner, which will make the first social during his pastorate even more successful than those held in the past.

Cuttings of willow, dogwood, grape, etc., may now be made ready to plant as soon as the weather is warm and settled.

Cavan Farmer Sells Seven Cattle for $638

John H. Earle, a prosperous Cavan farmer, sold, about June 1st, at Cavan Station, seven fat cattle for the sum of $638.60, being an average price of $91.09 each. Pretty good price when you consider that three of them were only 18 months old; yet we hear it said that farming does not pay.

The Normal School Students Nearing End Of Local Residence

The Normal School students began the running of the gauntlet this morning. In other words, the first samples of a twenty-five-act examination were placed before them and the next week will be a period of the extremes of joy and gloom, manifested, respectively, by effervescence of manners and long-drawn faces. The students have to stand and deliver, will have to show the why and wherefore of their alleged studies during the past nine months.

Closing Day in Sight.

The present term is nearing its close, on June 18th. On the following day there will be the annual picnic given by Principal Walker to the students and staff. In the meantime the Roy Studio is putting the finishing touches on a big collective photograph of the '13-'14 class. The present examination will, more or less, fix the standard of knowledge of the '14 crop of Normalites, but the big picture establishes the fact that generally and comparatively speaking, the ninety-four young ladies carry off first honours in the department of beauty. The assay of good looks rates high, but the discovery comes too late in the academic year. This possession will doubtless be an asset to the school for the reason that the most recent graduates will scarcely travel far in the field of work. The prospects point to an early assimilation, leaving the demand for teachers as acute as ever and thereby maintaining the procession through the hall of learning on the northern hill.

CATTLE KILLED BY LIGHTNING

A correspondent writes the Examiner that Mr. Wallace Morrison of South Monaghan, near Benefort, had four cattle killed by lightning on Sunday night, May 31st. When one of his sons went to bring the cattle home on Monday morning, he found the cows and a valuable Poled Angus heifer lying dead under a tree. It has not been learned whether the animals were insured or not.

DOMINION ALLIANCE IS EMPHATIC IN ITS STAND

Urge all Citizens Who Desire the Abolition of the Bar to Put Temperance Principles First

An important meeting of the Executive Committee of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance was held in the Alliance Offices, on Friday afternoon and evening, June 5th. The President Rev. Canon Greene presided.

There was a large attendance of members including quite a number of different parts of the Province.

Reports were received from the various Alliance Committees showing the status of the different departmental activities.

The main interest in the meeting naturally centred in the report of the Political Action Committee. The report recommended the adoption of the following Manifesto which was as follows:

Manifesto.

To the electors of the Province of ....Ontario:

The Executive Committee of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance desires at this critical juncture to place before you frankly and fairly, the present position of the temperance question in relation to the approaching general election.

The principle of prohibition as a remedy for the evils of the liquor traffic has three times been affirmed by large majorities in this Province. Municipal prohibition has served a very distinct and useful place in the evolution of the reform, so that sixty-three per cent. of the municipalities are now under local prohibition. One hundred and thirteen other municipalities, most of them incorporated cities, towns and villages, have given majorities in favour of prohibition, but have failed to register the necessary sixty per cent. vote.

The steady educational work of the churches, the discussion and presentation of facts in connection with Local Option campaigns, and the awakening of the industrial, commercial, and scientific world to economic waste and physical deterioration of the liquor traffic and the drink habit, have created a body of public sentiment which calls for a distinct advance in the matter of legislation.

The unanimous vote of many large non-partisan Conventions and church courts, have called upon the Legislature to lessen these cruel evils by at least wiping out the bar-room, the drinking club, and the whole treating system.

In accordance with this sound and patriotic policy we urge upon the friends of our cause the duty of doing their utmost to secure the nomination and election of men who will fairly represent the people upon this supreme issue.

We urge all right thinking citizens to put their temperance principles before any mere party preference in the approaching contest, and vote only for candidates who can be relied upon to support the most advanced temperance measure brought before the Legislature.

If as we believe, this question is the most important before the electors of the Province, a question that has long pressed for solution, if it is true that wise and enlightened leaders in all departments of commercial, industrial, and national life are becoming increasingly anxious to destroy the great destroyer, we feel justified in asking all who love their country and care for the highest interest of their fellow men to rise, if necessary, above party preference and affiliations, and insist that their representatives shall be untrammelled in their relation to this issue.

Ministers and Members of Christian Churches! The people of this Province have read and approved of the resolutions adopted from time to time, by great ecclesiastical gatherings, and they look to you for leadership in this great campaign.

Electors of the Province! You have in your own hands the remedy for the condition you deplore. This is a fight in which an Alliance of the Christian Churches of our land can defeat the sordid and solidly united forces that support the liquor traffic.

Will you act as independently for ther ight as to liquor interests do for their own selfish ends? If you do, the next Legislature will Abolish the Barroom.

Signed on behalf of the Executive Committee.

CANON R. W. GREENE.
President.

BEN. H. SPENCE.
Secretary.

Other reports also were given regarding the progress of the campaign throughout the Province showing that already three independent temperance candidates had been nominated in the constituencies of Welland, South Wellington and Brockville while conventions were called for West Simcoe, East Durham, South Waterloo, Manitoulin and other places. The reports also showed that this question was a vital issue in almost every constituency and there is an unprecedented activity on the part of temperance workers and indication of a great breaking many from old party lines on the part of the electors.

The report was decidedly optimistic. It was decided that all help possible should be given wherever there is a clear cut issue upon the temperance question.
